All business letters, or communications for the RESTITUTION, must be addressed as follows:—

WILSON, PEIRCE & CO.,

Chicago, Ill.

P. S. All letters for the Editor may be sent to the same place.

THE RESTITUTION advocates the final "restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all His holy Prophets since the world began." It also advocates as a means to this end, the establishment of the Kingdom of God on the earth, with the Christ as King of kings, and the immortal saints as joint-heirs with Him in the government of the nations; the restoration of Israel; the literal resurrection of the dead; the immortalization of the righteous, and the final destruction of the wicked; eternal life only through Christ; and many other kindred truths. It also advocates a hearty belief of the Gospel, repentance, and immersion as prerequisites to the forgiveness of sins; and a holy life as essential for final salvation.

COMMUNICATIONS.

THE EDITOR must not be understood as endorsing all the sentiments expressed by correspondents whose articles are inserted under this head. Each writer is alone responsible for the article bearing his own signature. No personal articles will be inserted. No writer will be allowed to refer directly or indirectly to the article of another by way of criticism. If the teaching of any writer is not endorsed, an article setting forth the views of the party differing may be forwarded. Free discussion of all his doctrines on all sides will be allowed, but the Editor reserves the privilege of criticising those communications which antagonize a belief and obedience of the Gospel as a means of salvation, or which undermine its principles.

The Lord's Supper Again.

BROTHER WILSON:—

I perceive that a brother has replied in the issue of July 23, to the queries made by me on the Lord's Supper in a former number a few weeks since, and although I know it is not your general custom to admit of any strictures upon anything in your paper, except by yourself, still I would ask the privilege of a reply, so that the actual facts of the case may be fairly set before the brethren. In my article, I asked the reason why the change from the Lord's Supper to the Passover should be made, and I am answered "that there has been no change," but the Passover has been called by Paul the Lord's Supper." 1 Cor. xi. 20. That he is here speaking of the Passover is plain," etc. With all due deference, however, to this brother's ideas upon the subject, I beg leave to say, that it is not so very plain to me. He also says that the Apostle "refers right back to the night on which He (Christ) was betrayed, and by turning to the account of that eventful night, we find but one supper was eaten," etc.

Now by this reference we can see that the supper was quite a different institution from the passover, and was instituted after, or in the act of eating the passover. This difference is unmistakably set forth by the records of Matthew, Mark, and Luke. Allow me therefore to give their own language. See Matt. xxvi. 19. "And the disciples did as Jesus appointed them and they made ready the passover." Verse 26. "And as they were eating, Jesus took bread," etc. What were they eating? The passover of course, which they had made ready. What need then of introducing any remark concerning his broken body and shed blood, if it was not intended to represent something else? So much for Matthew's testimony.

The record of Mark shews exactly the same procedure, and the same remarks, in similar language; the disciples had made ready the passover. Mark xiv. 16. "And as they were eating." Again I say eating the passover. "Jesus took bread, and blessed and brake, and gave to them," etc. Verse 22. "And he took the cup, and when he had given thanks, he gave to them, and they all drank of it." Verse 23. Here again Mark shews it to be a different institution. Added to this we have Luke's testimony to the same effect. After giving his disciples the necessary instructions for the preparation, "tney made ready the passover." See Luke xxii. 10-12. "With desire I have desired to eat this passover with you before I suffer," etc. Verse 15. Again in verse 19. "And he took bread and gave thanks, and brake and gave unto them," etc., "this do in remembrance of me" "likewise the cup after supper." After what supper? The passover of course.

Thus we have the united testimony of three competent witnesses, in reference to the institution of the supper, in distinction to the passover which had been instituted more than fifteen hundred years previous, and was to be observed in memory of their deliverance from Egyptian bondage. See Exodus xii. 3–17. The institution of the supper had a different object in view, i. e., in remembrance of the love of a dying Savior, and any believer ought to be able to see that Jesus Christ Himself was the great antitype of the passover, and was so represented by the Spirit's teaching through Paul in 1 Cor. v. 7. "Christ our passover is sacrificed for us," etc., and in verse 8, it is shown to be different, and not to be kept as the old feast, or holy day. See margin. And the expression "passover" is never used upon any other occasion, since the commission given by Jesus Christ. Matt. xxviii. 19; Mark xvi. 15, 16.

But in 1 Cor. xi. 23–26, the Spirit's teaching is in exact harmony with the testimonies already given. "For I have received of the Lord Jesus, that which I also delivered unto you, that the Lord Jesus the night in which he was betrayed took bread, and when he had given thanks, he brake, and said, Take eat, this is my body," etc. "After the same manner also he took the cup, and when he had supped, he said, This cup is the New Testament in my blood, this do ye as oft as ye drink it in remembrance of me." Now it is well known that Paul did not receive his instructions with the other disciples, nor for some considerable time after them, but yet Jesus speaks to him the identical language as He had spoken to the others. What need was there for giving any of them instructions of this kind in reference to the passover? They knew all about it. Moreover, the passover was purely a Jewish festival, in memory of an event in Jewish history, and it was Jews only who had to do with it. What have Gentiles to do with the Jewish passover? Just nothing. We as Gentiles have to do with the great antitype of the passover, Christ Jesus. Paul tells us these Jewish feasts were "shadows of good things to come, but the body is Christ." See Col. ii. 16, 17; Heb. x. 1. Those Scriptures brethren would do well to consider fully, as they only belong to a dispensation which was only to exist till Christ should come. The supper belongs, on the contrary, to another dispensation, introduced by Jesus Christ Himself, after He had come, and was to be observed by all of his true followers, until his coming again. See 1 Cor. xi. 26.

A great deal more might be said about this matter. Suppose we go back to the appointment of the passover, what do we find? A lamb to be slain and eaten in a certain way, i. e., according to the directions in Exodus xii. 11. "Thus shall ye eat it; your loins girded, your shoes on your feet, and your staff in your hand, and ye shall eat it in haste." In verse 8, "With bitter herbs." But where is the wine or the cup? No living man can show that there was any wine appointed in the passover. In the supper, both cup and wine were appointed, ergo, they must of necessity be two distinct and different institutions, and I think that the accounts which we have of both ordinances, being read over, ought to show that they are two separate matters, and must appear so.

The reviewer makes an objection to the observance of the supper at ten o'clock in the forenoon. Concerning this I have said not a word, and at any rate, I am no more in favor of that time than he is, yet as a matter of accommodation to brethren who live at a distance, and could not come together at a late hour, and return home five to ten miles, I am satisfied that a meeting at that hour is perfectly allowable, as our Lord did not set any exact time, because He knew something which our brother may have forgotten, namely that the meridian under which we may happen to live, makes such a difference that no uniform hour could be established. Tross which he mentions, is some six hundred and forty-five miles northwest of Jerusalem, which would make probably an hour's difference between these two places.

But suppose the hour had been fixed in Jerusalem the centre of the world, or earth, at ten o'clock P. M., it would not be the same hour any where else on the globe, except within a distance of sixty miles (one degree;) how then could a uniform hour be fixed? The midnight meeting at Tross, and the ten o'clock meeting in the Western States would not make a vast discrepancy, there being some nine hours difference say, between Jerusalem and Milwaukee, or Oshkosh, or nearly so, therefore little if anything need be said concerning the hour of observance. It is still the supper, and our Lord has caused it to be so kindly arranged, as to make little, if any difference, about the time of observance in the various localities of meridian, in which the lot of his few scattered sheep may be cast.

The language, "Do this as oft as ye drink it, in remembrance of me," does not bind the observance to either time or place. Again, "As oft as ye eat this bread and drink this cup, ye show forth the Lord's death till he come." The passover never was intended to exist until such coming, nor as an ordinance to remember one day beyond his crucifixion, at which hour it was thoroughly fulfilled; and to extend it further, or beyond that time, is nothing else but a man-made innovation.

There are some other things stated in the review which I consider as irrelevant to the matter, and there are items of my article which have not been touched, viz: the mention of the first day of the week, in preference to any other time, and also the stay of the Apostle seven days in each of two places, Acts xx. 6, and xxviii. 14.

But do those brethren who advocate the yearly observance, really eat the passover? I trow not, according to the instructions given by Jehovah. Exodus xii. 18, 19. "In the first month, on the fourteenth day of the month at even, ye shall eat unleavened bread until the one and twentieth day of the month at even." Again the same language is used in Lev. xxiii. 5, 6. "Seven days shall ye eat unleavened bread." Do those yearly brethren keep the passover "seven days?" Now the case is simply this it appears to me, which any one can see by a comparison of both institutions, i. e., that they do not eat, either the passover, or the Lord's Supper according to the instructions given by the great law-giver, in both cases. Yours for the Truth.

THOS. CHURCHILL.

What of the Night?

The traveler on the highway to the Kingdom of God longs to see the signs which indicate that the dark and dreary night of sin and death is almost over, and that the day of eternal righteousness is about to be revealed in all its glory, and therefore anxiously appeals to the watchman:

"Watchman, tell us of the night,
What its signs of promise are?"

The watchman eagerly scans the Eastern sky and reports:

"Trav'ler o'er yon mountain's height
See that glory beaming star."

Again the traveler aglow with interest asks:

"Watchman, does its beauteous ray Aught of hope or joy foretell?"

And the answer comes:

"Trav'ler, yes, it brings the day, Promised day of Israel."

Glad news to all earth's weary pilgrims! Who are prepared to hail its approach?

What evidence have we that the night is far spent, and the day of glory at hand? The sacred Chart says:

"In the last days perilous times shall come."

That we are living in "perilous times" is not doubted by even the men of the world who have but little concern as to what shall be hereafter. I would invite your attention to an extract from the "Daily Argus," and made use of in our last issue by Bro. Donaldson of Brooklyn, N. Y. It reads as follows:

The fact that so many of these striking examples of the departure from ordinary natural phenomena occur within a short period, and indeed almost coincidently, is not to be overlooked. Whether there is any connection between these occurrences, is merely a matter of speculation. The mind is apt to conclude that these synchronous disorders are in some way linked together, but it does so not because observation warrants the conclusion. There they are, however; a mysterious visitant in the heavens, atmospheric derangements, fires and floods, crimes of novel character, social perturbations and revelations, and, in fine, signs most indicative of the fact that we are living in an age of disorder—a period of insecurity. Clouds are no longer "the playful fancies of the mighty sky." They hide within their misty folds a force and energy which mock the best endeavors and the greatest achievements of man.

This historian says it is a "fact" that "we are living in a period of insecurity," "in an age of disorder," "floods and fires of a novel character." Are they not "perilous times" then?

The next is from the Boston Daily "Herald." It says:

It is no easy matter to explain why we should feel so, but of late we have somehow come to think and to believe that this people is becoming as profligate, licentious and altogether wicked as people were during the latter stages of the old Roman Empire. Extravagance, which is only a mild definition of profligacy, is breaking down honor and virtue in home and in business circles, while the church is but little better than an emporium of fashion, where piety flashes from the gilt-edged prayers and preaching of overpaid pastors—divines who tax a congregation more money for a year's work than Paul ever received during his entire ministry.

The Chicago "Times" says:

It is getting to be rather trite to say that Chicago was never so infested with monte gamblers, confidence men, and swindling vermin of all sorts as to-day. The fact has been dwelt upon at column length in the press, and is patent to every one who walks the streets. It is quite apparent to every observer why this latter day plague has of a sudden assumed such alarming proportions in this city

The "Times" truly characterizes this state of things as a "latter-day plague," and yet this same sheet is noted for its infidelity to the Holy Scriptures and the Christian religion.

The Daily "Courier" says:

Official estimates make the number of professional villains in Chicago about 900 or 1,000 strong. These include thieves, gamblers, bunko and three-card monte men, confidence swindlers, and every species of fancy men.

Some preachers say the world is getting better. Is it so?

The Chart says that in the "perilous times" of "the last days" a class should arise

Having a form of godliness, but denying the power thereof: from such turn away. For of this sort are they which creep into houses, and lead captive silly women laden with sins, led away with divers lusts.

The free-love Spiritualists of our day fulfill to the very letter details of this prediction. It has also badly tainted the fashionable churches. The most prominent at present is the Plymouth church, and its pastor Mr. Beecher. The public taste is so depraved that they seem to have a relish for vile scandal. Read the following from a Chicago Daily.

Of all disgusting spectacles which the century has witnessed, the gathering of the ghouls to feast on what they supposed would be the moral corpse of Henry Ward Beecher, takes precedence. From every corner they came in troops, laughing like a lot of hyenas intent upon resurrecting putridity. What a nasty crowd it has been, though, which has taken the present opportunity to revel in wantonness, and besmear the reputations of those they envied. All across the continent the Woodhull has left her slimy trail, as she hastened with her wanton sister, and contemptible affinity, Blood, to the delectable scandal feast of free-lovers.

The Chart says:

"Earthquakes shall be in divers places, and famines and pestilences."

During the past decade loss of life and property from the above causes has been appalling. Read the following extract:

Vienna, July 27.—A shock of earthquake was felt here yesterday. A violent storm of rain and hail is reported on the borders of Moravia. Several lives were lost and a large number of cattle drowned. Fifty houses were destroyed. Many vineyards were flooded and ruined at Azamry, where it is rumored that only seventy-four inhabitants escaped.

Aug. 1. The "Daily News" shows that the damage done by the storm in Moravia far exceeds the earlier estimates. Eleven villages and two towns were devastated.

Our next relates to the horrible famine in India.

Not content with a horrible famine, the fates bid fair to devastate India with the plague of cholera. It is announced that fears are entertained that this dread disease has broken out among 50,000 pilgrims assembled to attend the Juggernaut festival.

Our next from the Canton "Courier" relates to the plague of the grasshopper.

It only took the Minnesota grasshoppers about two hours to destroy forty-eight acres of wheat, which bid fair to yield twenty-five bushels to the acre, besides corn, oats and potatoes; in fact everything, even to the leaves on the trees and the grass in the fields.

The Kansas "Journal" says:

The grasshopper visitation struck a section of our State about 150 miles wide east and west, and extending probably across the State from north to south. In some places they staid only four days, yet during that time they devoured nearly everything. A farmer in Cloud County, who had 600 acres of corn, says that the grasshoppers destroyed more corn for him in twenty-four hours than 5,000 head of cattle could have done in the same time.

In one portion of India, the grasshoppers were so thick that they delayed a railroad train some five hours.

The "American Grocer" says:

Mr. Gilbert, of the firm of Myers & Gilbert, whose packing establishments is located on Staten Island, brought to our office a specimen of the terrific tomato worm. It is rapidly devouring the tomato plants along the Jersey coast from Amboy to Elizabeth, and also on Staten Island around his locality. One farmer who has between eight and ten acres under cultivation, which usually yields him from $200 to $250 per acre, offered to take $100 for the entire crop.

The Chart says:

The powers of heaven shall be shaken. And then shall they see the Son of man coming in a cloud, with power and great glory.

Are "the powers of heaven shaken?" Men of the world have discovered that they are. The "Argus" says it is a "fact" that we have "so many of these striking examples of the departure from ordinary natural phenomena within a short period," that "is not to be overlooked." It also speaks of "mysterious visitant in the heavens, atmospheric derangements," etc And that the clouds "hide within their misty folds a force and energy that mock the best endeavors and the greatest achievments of man." This "mysterious visitant" baffles the skill of the "greatest achievements" of scientific men. Little think they that it is but the forerunner of a greater "visitant," even the Son of God.

Read the following description of the condition of the heavens preceding the Pittsburgh storm, during which two hundred and nineteen people lost their lives.

About 6:30 on Sunday evening, two great black clouds came up from opposite points of the compass—one to the southwest and one to the northeast. They rose slowly like two awful demons. Their edges were ragged and black, flecked here and there with patches of of fiery colors. A dozen little promontories jotted out here and there like the heads of the hydra upon each, changing shape and appearance every moment and assuming the appearance of a bird, beast or monster, occasionally extending up across the intervening space. But all this time the two great giants, swarthed in inky blackness, slowly approached the other.

Suddenly a noise between a roar and a growl, burst from each. There was no distinct detonation like ordinary thunder, but low, terrible and continuous mumbling growls, causing the air to vibrate and the very foundations of the earth to shake as if tertian ague had seized upon the everlasting hills. A fringe of fire like an aurora borealis began to run along the ragged edges, faint at first, but growing in intensity every moment, until it looked as though the two demons had put on an armor of fire. On they came, nearer and nearer, when suddenly a mighty bolt of blinding light leaped from the central head of the demon of the northeast, burned high up in the sky and then fairly struck the opposing demon. A moment, and a deafening crash divided the hot atmosphere and made the earth tremble.

But the demon of the southwest was not even stunned, but paid back his assailant with a forked javelin of sulphurous flame, this was the opening of the grand battle. The long lines of flames that enveloped the combatants ceased to dance and flicker, and gathered into tongues of silver and blue fire. The two demon clouds met directly over the city and seemed to rock the earth to its uttermost foundation. When the two giants met in their death embrace it seemed as though a river had been unchained in the heavens and was falling bodily to the earth blow.

A similar calamity visited Eureka, Nevada.

A horrible calamity befell our prosperous mining camp on the afternoon of the 24th inst. Words are inadequate to express the grandeur and horror of the scene. Imagine to yourself a water-spout bursting on the top of a high mountain, three miles distant from you, in a canon 2,000 feet below. The stream that flowed through our town was twelve and fifteen feet deep and two hundred feet wide. Houses would shoot up and strike out from their foundations like a steamer leaving its moorings.

We might go on and relate many items of interest but space forbids. I will give two more and then close. The Chart says that in the "last days" parties should arise "without natural affection." The "Hebrew Leader" relates the account of a girl who attempted to burn an infant alive. The reason she gave was that she hated babies. A man in Chicago, set fire to the lower part of his house that he may destroy it and obtain the insurance money. A family was at the same living in the upper rooms. Mr. Disraeli, one of the sharpest statesmen in the world, says, "The crisis of the world is at hand."

Just previous to going to press the following news has come to hand:—A dispatch to the War Department from Camp Ruggles says the grasshoppers have destroyed almost the entire crop of corn, potatoes, oats, etc. Capt. Munson suggests that the Government furnish employment to the farmers to prevent suffering.—A fearful storm has just visited Rochelle, Ill., the breadth about nine miles, and length about forty. Hail stones fell larger than goose eggs, killing calves, hens and turkeys by the thousand, and destroying corn and vegetables.—At Sanfordville trees were blown down, and roofs of houses carried a long distance in the air.—At Polo thousands of acres of corn and wheat were destroyed.—At Woosung every house was damaged.—At Hudson, barn set on fire by lightning.—At Ottawa wheat and hay stacks were blown down on every farm for miles.—Disastrous floods have swept away several towns in India.—New York "Herald" is alarmed at the appearance of small-pox in that city.—A Catholic attempts to assassinate Bismark.

The Savior after foretelling what signs should precede his coming says, "Take heed, behold I have foretold you all things." Peter after describing what should take place in the "last days" says, "Beloved, seeing ye know these things before, beware lest ye also being led away with the error of the wicked fall from your own steadfastness." "Now our Lord Jesus Christ himself, and God, even our Father, which hath loved us, and hath given us everlasting consolation and good hope through grace, comfort your hearts, and stablish you in every good word and work."

Is There any Gospel for a Gentile?

The Christadelphian says No. Now let us see. We have some brethren and sisters who are troubled some with these men, and perhaps have not looked at the matter carefully, so I thought I would say something about it.

Paul says in Eph. iii: 4–6. "Whereby, when ye read, ye may understand my knowledge in the mystery of Christ, which in other ages was not made known unto the sons of men, as it is now revealed unto his holy apostles and prophets by the spirit; that the Gentiles should be fellow-heirs and of the same body, and partakers of his promise in Christ by the GOSPEL." There is Gospel to Gentiles, Mr. Christadelphian.

See Matt. xii; 21. "And in his name shall the Gentiles trust." Acts ix: 15 "* * for he is a chosen vessel unto me, to bear my name before the Gentiles, and kings, and the children of Israel." Rom. xi: 13., "For I speak to you Gentiles inasmuch as I am the apostle of the Gentiles; I magnify mine office." Then that was Paul's office. See Gal. ii: 7–8. Acts x: 45, "* * * that because on the Gentiles also, was poured out the gift of the Holy Spirit." Acts xi: 1. The Gentiles also received the word of God. Verse 18. "* * * then hath God also to the Gentiles granted repentance unto life. . . . the Gentiles besought that these words might be preached to them the next sabbath." Acts xiii: 42, 46. ". . . but seeing ye put it from you, and judge yourselves unworthy of everlasting life, lo we turn to the Gentiles." Acts xiv: 27. ". . . open the door of faith unto the Gentiles." Acts xv: 3. Declaring the conversion of of the Gentiles. Verse 7. ". . . God made choice among us that the Gentiles by my mouth should hear the Gospel and believe." Verse 12, 14, 19 23; Acts xviii: 6. "I am clean: from henceforth I will go unto the Gentiles." xxi: 19, xxii: 21. ". . for I will send thee far hence unto the Gentiles." xxvi: 20. The Gentiles should repent and turn to God, and do works meet for repentance." Verse 23: ". . . Christ should shew light unto the Gentiles." xxviii: 28 . . . that the salvation of God is sent unto the Gentiles, and they will hear it." Rom. i: 13. "Fruit among the Gentiles." iii: 29 "Is he the God of the Jews only? is he not of the Gentiles? Yes (says Paul) of the Gentiles also."

Now what say you Mr. Christadelphian, to Paul? Rom. ix. 24, "Not of the Jews only but of the Gentiles." xi. 11. "Salvation is come to the Gentiles." xv. 10. "Rejoice ye Gentiles, with his people." xv. 11, 12, 16, 27.

In the days of Paul there were Gentile churches. Rom. xvi. 4, "Unto whom not only I give thanks, but also all the churches of the Gentiles." Gal. iii. 4, "The blessing of Abraham might come on the Gentiles." Eph. iii. 8. "I should preach among the Gentiles, the unsearchable riches of Christ;" 1 Tim. iii. 16, Acts xv. 12, 14, ". . . visit the Gentiles to take out of them a people for his name." Acts xxvi. 17, 18. "Delivering thee from the people, and from the Gentiles unto whom I now send thee, to open their eyes, and to turn them from darkness to light, and from the power of Satan unto God, that they may receive forgiveness of sins, and an inheritance among them which are sanctified by faith that is in me"

They also say that Gentiles are not sinners. Rom. iii. 9. "For we have before proved both Jews and Gentiles, that they are all under sin." Gal. ii. 15. "We who are Jews by nature, and not sinners of the Gentiles." Eph. ii. 3–13. Gal iii. 8–22. Rom. i. 15, 16. Eph. ii. 13, 11. Therefore Gentiles are sinners as well as Jews. We all must come into Christ both Jew and Gentile.

Dear brethren let us contend earnestly for the faith.

THE RESTITUTION

CHICAGO, AUGUST 13, 1874

EDITORIAL DEPARTMENT.

A Remarkable Man.

There is a wonderful man living in Indianapolis, Indiana, who imagines that everybody else is wrong and he is right. We have heard of such cases before. In Insane Asylums they are often found, and they call them monomaniacs; that is, they are insane on one point. It seems quite probable that this is the case with the poor man in question. He professes to believe in the Bible, and in man's salvation. But he has got an idea there must be no preaching, no baptism, no Lord's Supper, no anything done by any one, but all must wait for "Deity" to make them into what he calls "Abrahams." He says: "All of Deity's friends come into being and into possession of Deity's mind without any action upon their part." The inconsistency of the man is apparent, however, in that he issues printed documents explaining his views. What does he send these out for, seeing no action is necessary on the part of any one for the instruction and conversion of sinners? It is time and money wasted. If he finds fault with others for preaching, he must see to it that he stops preaching himself.

A short time since, we saw a short "preach" of his addressed to W. H. Hacking, in which his inconsistency is still further apparent. In the outset he says, "that you are not a son of Abraham is perfectly clear, nor is it desirable that you should be his son at this late date." Yet after so declaring, he says in the very next sentence, "I shall be glad if what each is driven to say may lead you out of the darkness of the Gentiles." In that case, he will be glad to have a thing accomplished which is not desirable. And as a means towards this end he says further on, "Let me call your attention to what you have not seen." Thus we see that this remarkable man tells his friend that "it is not desirable that he should be a son of Abraham at this late date," and that he is in darkness. Then he calls his attention to things he has not seen, evidently for the purpose of enlightening him, or enabling him to become a son of Abraham, and says he shall be glad if he is thus led out of the darkness of the Gentiles. We can see no sort of consistency in such a course.

In all of his speech, we notice that he refrains from any reference to God's Word in proof of his wild speculations, and we can readily understand why he does so, seeing that its testimony would not lend him a single support. This is not the reason he gives, however, but he says "I have given no references, because it can do no good to do so. One must understand Deity in the whole Bible or a reference is worthless, and unless Deity has caused it, no one can understand that book." So we see that a man must, in order to be able to understand the Bible, receive special power from on high, and then he will understand the whole Bible. This man therefore claims to understand this blessed book in its entirety. Is he not therefore a wonderful man? And although he knows so much yet he is not required to impart a single ray of light to others. If God wants a man saved, He will fill his mind with this complete knowledge of the entire Bible and he will know he is a son of Abraham, but can give no reason for it whatever.

This man is progressing finely. He has attained a wonderful eminence above his poor fellow creatures. He says "I live higher than the heavens, above the clouds, and the hissing of the serpent has no terrors for me." We think it would be as well for him to make a descent now and then, and take pity on the poor suffering perishing, ignorant multitude under the clouds, and lend a helping hand towards enlightening their dark minds. Such a great reservoir of knowledge ought to be available for others, and not selfishly kept for the use of one person.

☞ Is there any one who can truly say that he is perfectly prepared to hear the announcement, Behold, the Bridegroom cometh, go ye out to meet Him? If not, arise at once, delays are dangerous.

"The Bible Echo."

This is the title of a new religious weekly published by Messrs. Kellaway & Co, 10, Warwick Lane, Paternoster Row, London, England. It is a sixteen page periodical, is neatly printed on good paper, and all for the low price of seven shillings (English) per annum.

The subject matter of the numbers we have received is varied and instructive. It advocates the complete mortality of man, and the Gospel of immortality and the kingdom of God, to be received and inherited by Christ only. It also teaches the apostolic truth of the everlasting punishment of the ungodly in their excision from life, under which ban they will remain for eternity. Further, it seeks to reconcile men to God by the death of his Son, and promote in the Christian all that purity of heart and sweetness of life which are so lovely, of such good report, and well-pleasing to God.

We extend to this new-comer a hearty welcome, and hope that it may receive a liberal support at the hands of those who profess to love and teach the truths it advocates. It is a sad reflection, however, upon the great body of believers to know that not a single paper, thus far, advocating these truths, has been well supported. On the contrary, they have struggled for an existence, some for a longer, and others a shorter period, but always at a loss pecuniarily to the publishers. We hope better things for the "Echo."

The Spiritualist's Future State.

It is natural to suppose that as Spiritualists claim to know so much now, in the flesh, of the future in store for them, they must be superlatively blest with knowledge when they, as they say, "pass into spirit life," but the following from the "Cornhill Magazine," shows a sorrowful lack of progress in that direction by the "spirits," thus far, as developed by their "mediums." The great Apostle to the Gentiles says, (1 Cor. xiii. 9, 10, 12,) "For we know in part and we prophecy in part, but when that which is perfect is come, then that which is in part shall be done away. For now we see through a glass darkly, then face to face; now I know in part, but then shall I know even as I am known." This is our expectation of our condition in the future; compare it with what follows:

THE SPIRITUALIST'S FUTURE STATE.

When we ask to be informed (beyond the testimony of sweet smiles and assurances of felicity) of the nature of the happiness of virtuous departed souls, we are confronted with narratives much more nearly realizing our notion of humiliating penance and helplessness, than of glory and freedom; of Purgatory, than of Paradise. The dead, it seems, according to Spiritualism, have not, (even after vast intervals of time) advanced one step nearer to the knowledge of those diviner truths for which the soul of man hungers, than they possessed while on earth. The hope of immortality is bound up in religious minds, with the fact that though no actual vision can ever be vouchsafed of the all-pervading spirit, yet that some sense beyond any which earthly life affords of the presence and love of the Father, will come to the soul when it has gone "home to God," and that doubt will surely be left behind among the cerements of the grave. But Spiritualists cheerfully tell us that such hopes are quite as delusive as those of the material crowns and harps of the New Jerusalem. "Nothing," says Dr. Wallace, "is more common than for religious people at seances to ask questions about God and Christ. In reply they never get more than opinions, or more frequently the statement that they, the spirits, have no more actual knowledge than they had on earth." There are, indeed, Dr. Wallace assures us, Catholic and Protestant, Mohammedan and Hindoo spirits, proving that the "mind with its myriad beliefs is not suddenly changed at death," nor, seemingly, for ages afterward. Thus, from our estimate of the spiritualistic state of future felicity, we are called on to make, at starting, the enormous deduction of everything resembling religious progress. The Spiritualist is perfectly contented with an ideal heaven wherein he will remain in just as much doubt or error as he happens to have entertained upon earth. Further, as regards his personal and social affections, does ne at least image to himself, that he will be nearer and more able to protect and bless his dear ones after death? Or that he will pass freely hither and thither, doing service like a guardian angel to mankind, strengthening the weak, comforting the mourner, and awakening the conscience of the wicked? There is, [so far as we have followed the literature of Spiritualism] no warrant for such a picture of beneficent activity. Good spirits, as well as bad — the souls of Plato and Fenelon, as well as those of the silliest and wickedest "twaddler"—as Dr. Wallace honestly describes many spirit habitues of seances—have seemingly spent all the centuries since their demise humbly waiting to be called up by some woman or child, precisely as if they were lackeys ready to answer the down-stairs' bell. In many cases we are led to infer that the dead have been striving for years and ages to make themselves known, and now for the last quarter of a century have very clumsily and imperfectly succeeded in doing so. Let us conceive for a moment a grand and loving soul—a Shakespeare or Jeremy Taylor, or Shelley, who once spoke to mankind in free and noble speech, a man among men, fumbling about the legs of chairs, scratching like a dog at a door, and eagerly flying to obtain the services of an interpreter like Miss Fox, Mr. Hume, or Mrs. Gruppy—and we have surely invented a punishment and humiliation exceeding those of any purgatory hitherto invented. If virtue itself has nothing better to hope for hereafter than such a destiny, we may well wish that the earth should prove indeed, after all, the last home of "earth's mighty nation,"

"Whose Oblivion's pall shall darkly fall
On the dreamless sleep of annihilation."

In conclusion, is it too much now to ask that we may be exonerated, once for all, from the charge of unreasonable prejudice, if we refuse to undertake the laborious inquiry into the marvels of Spiritualism which its advocates challenge—an inquiry pursued by methods bordering on the sacrilegious, and terminating either in the exposure of a miserable delusion, or else in the stultification and abortion of man's immortal hope.—Cornhill Magazine.

The Marriage of the Lamb.

"Write, These are they who have been invited to the marriage of the Lamb. He said to me, These are the words of God." Rev. xix. 9.

Let us consider this interesting subject for edification. Here we have the Lamb, the bride, his wife, and guests united. Paul says of Adam that he was a figure of Him that was to come—of Christ the second Man. Of the first we read: "The Lord God caused a deep sleep to fall on Adam and he slept, and he took a rib and closed up the flesh instead thereof; and the rib which he took, builded (margin) he a woman, and brought her to the man. And Adam said, This is now bone of my bone and flesh of my flesh, and she shall be called Woman, because she was taken out of man." Gen. ii. 22–24. Now we have, therefore, before us, Adam the first; next the woman is taken out of the man. Adam, after sentence of death is put on him, called his wife's name Eve, (chava) that is, living, because she was the mother of all living—all that were to live. Paul says that He—Christ—was made out of a woman; hence we hear Christ say, "I am the living one, I was even dead, and behold I am alive forever more, and have the keys of death and hades." From this it is clear that He is the one that was to live—the true one.

Let us look at this separating process. The first woman is taken out of the first man; the second man is made out of the woman. This looks like a cutting or separating process; to my mind it looks like economy, as if God meant to save at least something from the great body of death — the old stock condemned to die. The separation is effected by the word of promise. To the serpent—or first king—God said, "I will put enmity between thee and the woman, and between thy seed and her seed; it shall bruise thy head, and thou shalt bruise its heel." Enmity! This separation is the cause of the enmity. In process of time God took Abraham out of the old stock of death, and with him and his seed—Christ — established his covenant. They—that is, Abraham, Isaac and Jacob and their seed—enjoy divine protection, favor and love. This aroused the enmity of those left out, of whom they were taken. In the fullness of time God sent his Son made out of woman, first made out of the living.

But let us look a little farther. He—Christ, made out of a woman—the Hebrew woman that was taken out of the nations. Made under the law—the law given to the Hebrew woman taken out of Egypt, which law she had broken, placing herself under the sentence of death. He—Christ — as a lamb is offered; as John says, "Behold the Lamb of God which taketh away the sin of the world." See the cutting off process—cut off on account of sins — cut off from sin's body—separated from the first man by the word of promise that comes in ahead of the law of natural generation. The word or spirit of power separates between the man of earth and the woman. She conceives—in the full-time the child is born, but He is not yet entirely loose from the man, for the woman was out of the man; but when He gives up his life, then the separation is complete. He is now separated from sin's flesh, for said Paul, "He that is dead is freed from sin." "He took not hold of angels, but he took hold of the seed of Abraham." But this was the earthly seed; this was sin's flesh; from this He was cut off, and falls into death's body. But this on his part was voluntary—the free volition of the will. The death penalty pronounced on the first man was not met freely; he still contends that he will not surely die, or be dead de facto. Hear Christ: "Father, if it be possible let this cup (death) pass from me, nevertheless not my will but thine." The Father's will was that the first man should die. This he does not consent to, but still stands out that death—the death penalty pronounced on him, was not the extinction of life, but a separation of parts. Jesus meets the issue between the two—God the offended, and man the offender, and sanctions the sentence, and meets the stroke. This is how Christ died for our sins according to the Scriptures. The Scriptures teach that the free will offering is acceptable to God. Hear Paul: "I delivered to you first of all, how Christ died for our sins, according to the Scriptures."

But if we wait here too long, we will not reach the great supper in this letter; but let us be sure we are right, then go ahead. We read that when the king came in to see the guests, that he saw there a man that had not on a wedding garment. Now hear Christ: "I lay down my life. No man takes her from me; I have power to lay her down, and I have power to take her again. On account of this the Father loves me because I lay down my life that I may receive her again. No one takes her from me; I lay her down that I may take her again." This language caused a division among the Jews, and they said, 'He has a demon." I give this the interlineary or word for word readings, because it harmonizes with the Book. In verse 11 He says: "I am the good shepherd; the good shepherd gives his life for the sheep." In verse 16: "And other sheep I have that are not of this fold, them also I must bring, and they will hear my voice, and there will be one flock, one fold; the two shall be one flesh. I lay down my life of myself." The life that He then lived was of the woman. He was made out of the woman; in laying down his life, He laid her down, that He might take her again. "Ye were bought with a price, the life or blood of Christ, as a lamb without spot or blemish."

Now let us look again. The sentence of death was put on the man, but the woman being joined to the man, they two are one, hence Paul says that, "the woman being deceived, was in the transgression"— was in the transgression — but the promise follows the woman. She gives issue to the seed, independent of the man. The result is, he gives up his life, and in doing this he gives her up. But Paul says the married woman is bound by the law to the living husband, but if the husband die, she is released from the law of her husband. Here they are; that is, the two men, and but one true woman. The first says that he will not die—will not meet the demand of the law—or, in other words, it don't mean just that it has no claims on my soul. The second man makes his soul an offering for sin for the sin of the woman—and as the first man does not die, he being judge, there is no need of a sin offering. He slips out and escapes the penalty. Christ gives his life for her, and as the two are one flesh, in laying down her life, He lays down his own life; and now a deep sleep falls on Him. Paul says of Him that, "He in the days of his flesh poured out strong crying and tears unto him who was able to save him out of death, and was heard, in that he feared." God gives to the woman a seed, then to that seed a promise of life and resurrection. This frees the woman from the law of her husband.

It is now demonstrated that future life depends on a resurrection from the dead, and not a slipping-out—dodging the penalty. The true witness testifies, "I am he that was dead, and behold I am alive." This settles the question in law. The first husband is in fact dead, and she is delivered from the law of that husband, and can in law be given to another, even to Him that was raised from the dead. "That I may take her up again." Take her up by a resurrection. She falls asleep in Him. "They that sleep in Jesus will God bring by Jesus."

But says one, The law that you refer to was that given at Mount Sinai. Well, that entered that the offense might abound. That law was holy, just and good, but I am carnal, sold under sin, sold out in the original transgression—sold under this mortgage, "Dust thou art, and unto dust shalt thou return." Oh wretched man! who shall deliver me from this dead body?—the old Adamic body, sin's body. "Thanks be to God who gives us the victory through Jesus Christ our Lord." Those members who consent to the justice of the death penalty, look out for a way of delivery after that penalty is met. They get into the second man as follows: buried with Him by baptism into death; then they, that is the many members that make the one body, will be taken out of sin's body of death, falling asleep in Him—in his deep sleep, in his death—a likeness of his death, will be taken out, or raised up in a likeness of his resurrection, to be presented to Him a glorious ecclesia—called-out woman—not having spot or wrinkle or any such thing. God's church — woman — or God's daughter given to God's Son in marriage. A helpmeet for Him, one that is qualified to help Him. "Husbands love your wives even as Christ loved the congregation and delivered himself up in her behalf." Ephes. v. 25. "On this account shall a man leave his father and mother and shall cleave to his wife, and the two shall be one flesh. This is a great secret, but I am speaking of Christ and the church." Verse 32.

Thus we see that everything that God did was done in respect to the word that became flesh. The Word comes in ahead of the operation of earthly generation, and the man is made—made for a little while inferior to angels. The Word takes out the woman; by the Word she is won. "Come out from among them, and be separate." She is washed in the bath of regeneration. By the Word she is sanctified. Abraham charged his servant not to give his son Isaac in marriage to one of the daughters of the land, but to go to his own kindred. Rebekah sent Jacob back to her father's house to get him a wife. It is said that when Isaac saw Rebekah, he loved her and took her in to his mother Sarah's tent. Jacob made a covenant with Laban to serve seven years for Rachel, (Rachel, in Hebrew, a sheep.) Hear Christ: "Other sheep I have that are not of this fold, them also I must bring. There shall be one fold and one shepherd." Leah was tender eyed and dim of sight. Leah, the elder. Eyes they had but they saw not, their eyes were dim of sight. But Rachel was beautiful and well favored, and Jacob loved Rachel.

And now let us rub our eyes and look. They, that is, the Jews, were looking for the kingdom and the glory, but they were dim of sight, or they would have seen that the fulfilment of the promises belonged to the regeneration, that it was the woman who follows him through the regeneration, who was to be the bride. The elder — the earthly — was tender eyed, old and wrinkled, and not to be given to the King. But the sheep—the Rachel—the spouse—the church of the first borns—the first born congregation from the dead — the above Jerusalem — the heavenly city — the Lamb's wife, is the woman we are looking after—the isha — the woman that is come down to be taken up; "I will come again and receive you to myself." The marriage first, the supper afterwards.

And now hear them shout as they celebrate this great event—the marriage of the heavenly with the heavenly—the true man or husband with the true wife — in the heavenly tent or bright cloud that rested on the mount of vision. "And I heard as it were a voice of a great crowd, and as the sound of many waters, and as a noise of mighty thunders, saying, Halelujah, because our Lord God the omnipotent reigneth. We may rejoice and exult and give the glory to him, because the marriage of the Lamb is come, and his wife prepared herself. And it was given her that she should be clothed in fine linen, bright and pure; for the fine linen is the righteousness of the saints." Rev. xix. 6–8. Thus robed in the white robe of immortality she is presented to Him, she is accepted as the loved one.

"There are three score queens, and four score concubines, and virgins without number. My dove, my undefiled is one, (one body) she, the one of her mother—she, the choice of her that bore her. The daughters saw her and blessed her; the queens and concubines and they praised her. Set me as a seal upon thine heart, as a seal upon thine arm; for love strong as death; jealousy cruel as the grave, the coals thereof, coals of fire a most vehement flame." "For love, strong as death," "Christ loved the church and gave himself for her." This one body—unit city—one church—that is, one, the choice one of her mother, is set as a seal on his heart, as a seal on his arm; the two are pronounced one. And now let factionists be their own judges. If this redeemed and glorified body is all that is to be saved, and probation ends here, where do they stand? They don't claim to be exclusive; they are liberal souls; they claim to belong to the Branch family; they claim to belong to the concubine arrangements. This had an existence on the line of the earthly, but the rib is taken out and the flesh closed up instead.

But there will be Leahs, tender eyed—dim of sight or near sighted. The Jews had overlooked the promises concerning the Gentiles, they who were far off they could not see. Thus it is with many now, they are near sighted, or blind, and cannot see afar off. "And it shall come to pass that every one that is left of all the nations which come against Jerusalem, shall even go up from year to year to worship the king the Lord of hosts, and keep the feast of tabernacles"—the feast of the tent. This great feast of the tent is to be celebrated by all that are left of the nations; celebrated with songs, music and great rejoicing. "Blessed are those that are invited to the marriage supper of the Lamb. And he said that these are the true words of God." Invited guests and no one to invite guests or to be invited, and the whole earth wrapped in a sheet of flame! Guests to be invited, and probation ended! All that are left to come up to Jerusalem, and no one to come! Surely no one is so blear-eyed as to say that the woman herself is the "they" that are invited. The invited are the friends of the bride on the one hand, and of the bridegroom on the other. "And there was a marriage in Cana of Galilee, and the mother of Jesus was there. And both Jesus was invited, and his disciples, to the marriage." John ii. 1, 2. On this occasion Jesus and his disciples were invited guests, but in the marriage that we speak of, Jesus is the bridegroom; his disciples — the church — the bride. "Arise, shine for thy light is come, and the glory of the Lord is risen upon thee; and the Gentiles shall come to thy light and kings to the brightness of thy rising. Lift up thine eyes round about and see. All they gather themselves together; they come to thee. Thy sons shall come from afar and thy daughters shall be nursed at thy side. Violence shall no more be heard in thy land, wasting and destruction in thy borders, but thou shalt call thy walls Salvation, and thy gates Praise. A little one shall become a thousand, and a small one a strong nation." Isa. lx. "And the Gentiles shall see thy righteousness, and all kings thy glory. And thou shalt be called by a new name, which the mouth of the Lord shall name; for as a young man marrieth a virgin, shall thy sons marry thee; and as the bridegroom rejoices over the bride, shall thy God rejoice over thee. And they shall call them, The holy people, The redeemed of the Lord. And thou shalt be called Sought out, A city not forsaken. And it shall come to pass from one new moon to another, and from one Sabbath to another shall all flesh come to worship before me, saith the Lord of hosts."

The Jerusalem that now is, and is in bondage with her children was taken by David the king and made the city of the kingdom; the city of the Hebrew woman on the line of the earth. It was beautified for his bride the Hebrew woman. It will be taken by the heavenly for his bride—the church—the heavenly woman. "For silver I will bring gold, for brass, silver, for iron, brass; (that leaves the iron out) and I will beautify the place of my sanctuary, and will make the place of my feet glorious. Thy children (the adopted children of the bride) shall all be taught of the Lord, and great shall be the peace of thy children. They will see the King in his beauty. Nothing shall hurt or destroy in all my holy mountain, for the earth shall be full of the knowledge of the Lord as the waters cover the sea." Africa shall soon stretch out her hand to God. He will speak peace to the heathen, and his dominion "from sea to sea, and from the rivers to the ends of the earth." "Come unto me all ye ends of the earth and be ye saved, for I am God, and beside me there is none other Savior. Oh, every one that thirsts, come ye to the water and drink! Let him that has no money come! Come buy wine and milk (wine for those of full age, milk for babes.) And the Spirit and the Bride say, Come." The bride the Lamb's wife—she is not married, but espoused—she will say, Come. Come up to the great feast, the marriage supper of the Lamb. The Spirit says, Come. Paul says the Lord is that Spirit. "Let him that hears say, Come." But says one, "Hold on, don't be so liberal, there are enough already to fill the house." But the king says to the servants, "Go into the streets, gather up the halt and the lame to come to the feast that my house may be filled."

And now I would say to those that are dim of sight, Put on the Gospel glass, and look away down through the thousand years of restitution.

"Lift up your heads, desponding pilgrims!
Give to the winds your needless fears!
He who has said redemption's nearing,
Soon is to reign a thousand years.
A thousand years, earth's restitution!
'Tis the glad day so long foretold!
'Tis the glad day of Zion's glory, Prophets foresaw in times of old."

And let all who are going into the kingdom, say Amen.

BROTHER WILSON:—The late general meeting of the brethren and sisters of the One Faith near Pleasanton, not having arrived at any conclusion as to the matter of sending out an evangelist, and the necessity for such labor being apparent to all, it was suggested to a meeting held at the stone school house near Prescott, Kansas, Aug. 4, that Brother J. C. Kimsey was the man for the position. After consultation he said he would be willing to enter the field, devoting all his time, for $350. per year, which was agreed to at once, and $200. was pledged on the spot. Now brethren, won't you do your duty and help us all you can?

THE GREAT SALVATION.

Or God's Purpose Concerning Man and Earth.

No. 12.

BY J. M. STEPHENSON.

Why did not one of Job's friends reprove him for the inconsistency of such despondency? Why my dear friend, he might have said, if he had believed it, do you not know that you possess a deathless spirit that will be singing the high praises of God in heaven, while worms and corruption are preying upon your dead body? In the nineteenth chapter, verses 25–27, Job answers his own question, showing where is hope for a man in the apparently hopeless condition he had so graphically described. He exclaims: "Oh that my words were now written! Oh that they were printed in a book! That they were graven with an iron pen and lead in the rock forever! For I know that my redeemer liveth, and that he shall stand at the latter day upon the earth; and though after my skin, worms destroy this body, yet in my flesh shall I see God. Whom I shall see for myself, and mine eyes shall behold, and not another, though my reins be consumed within me."

The following points are clearly expressed by Job in regard to his hope. 1. The time when his hope should be realized, not when he died, but at the latter day. 2. The place in which he should realize the fruition of his hope, to wit, upon the earth, when his Redeemer should stand upon it. 3. Not that a disembodied spirit should see God, but the same body that worms had eaten out, and the same flesh restored that worms had consumed, should look upon his Redeemer. 4. "Whom he should see for himself and not another." Thus teaching the preservation of his identity in the mind of God, and its restoration—that it should be the identical Job himself, and not another Job David's hope agrees perfectly with Job's, in reference to the time after death when he expected to see God; and he was perfectly satisfied to wait for its fruition until he should wake from the last long sleep. When comparing his hope with that of worldly men who have their portion in this life, he exclaims: "As for me, I will behold thy face in righteousness; I shall be satisfied, when I awake with thy likeness." Psa. xvii. 14, 15. When did David expect to wake in the likeness of God, and behold his face? When he should close his eyes in death? or when he should awake from the death sleep? Answer: When he should awake in the morning of the resurrection, or at the latter day when his Redeemer shall stand on the earth. This is the grand epoch, according to Paul when all the sleeping saints shall awake with the likeness of their Redeemer. He says, "For our conversation is in heaven; from whence also we look for the Savior, the Lord Jesus Christ; who shall change our vile body, that it may be fashioned like unto his glorious body." Phil. iii. 20, 21. Thus, Job, David, Paul and all Christians have the same hope. None have expected their reward until their Redeemer comes and raises them from the dead in his own likeness.

To understand and appreciate David's hope we must read what Peter and Paul have said concerning his death. Paul says, "For David, after he had served his own generation by the will of God, fell asleep, and was laid unto his fathers, and saw corruption." Acts xiii. 3. Death and resurrection, sleeping and waking are antithetical terms; if his going to sleep denotes dying, then waking out of sleep must represent his resurrection, or re-living. 1. At which of these points of time did David expect his reward? Answer. When he shall be raised from the dead. 2. Instead of going to heaven at death, he went into corruption; but when his expectation shall be realized he will awake with an incorruptible body like the incorruptible body of his Redeemer. But Peter leaves no room to doubt as to where David went at death, whether to heaven, or the grave. He was afraid that his Jewish congregation would confound David the Prophet with Christ concerning whom he prophecied. Thus he said, "Men and brethren let me freely speak unto you of the patriarch David, that he is both dead and buried, and his sepulchre is with us unto this day." Inasmuch as if he had said David was not speaking of his own resurrection, for first he died and was buried, and his sepulchre is with us to-day. If you don't believe it, go and see that it remains undisturbed—but "being a Prophet he spake of the resurrection of Christ." Again the Apostle was afraid that those to whom he was speaking would understand him to teach that David had ascended to heaven, instead of Christ, thus confounding the Prophet with the one concerning whom he prophecied. Hence he said as recorded at the thirty-fourth verse, "For David is not ascended into the heavens." 1. If any man would be permitted to go to heaven at death it would have been David. 2. Where had David been during the fifteen hundred years that had elapsed after his death? According to Peter's positive statement, he had been in his sepulchre; and he expected before his death to remain there until he should awake in the likeness of God.

According to David in the eighty-eighth Psalm, God "will show wonders to the dead;" his "loving kindness in the grave," "his faithfulness in the land of destruction," "make known his wonders in the dark," and his "righteousness in the land of forgetfulness;" and as the result "the dead shall rise and praise him." In the foregoing enumeration there are six terms expressive of the condition of intelligent men, who contemplate the goodness of God, and express their gratitude in songs of praise. 1. They are dead. 2. They must rise from the dead before they can praise God. 3. They are in the grave, and the loving kindness of God must bring them out of the grave, or there is no hope for them. 4. They are destroyed, and the faithfulness of God must restore them or they will remain destroyed to all eternity. 5. They are in a dark place, and God's wonder-working power must bring them out, or they will never again behold the light of day. 6. They are in a land of forgetfulness, and the righteousness of God must restore their intellectual faculties, or they must remain oblivious forever to all they had ever known. Let those who can, reconcile such illustrations of the place and condition of the dead, as those just quoted, with the idea of all good men going to Paradise, or heaven, at death. I cannot.

Of the same import is the testimony of Isaiah. Addressing the great God he says: "Thy dead men shall live, together with my dead body shall they arise. Awake and sing, ye that dwell in dust; for thy dew is as the dew of herbs, and the earth shall cast out the dead." Isa. xxvi. 19.

1. He represents God's men as being dead. In whatever locality they remain between death and the resurrection, they are dead. 2. They are asleep. It is a sleep which is a fit symbol of death; and therefore the most profound of all sleeps, and consequently a dreamless sleep. In profound sleep there is no consciousness, 3. That which is asleep must awake before it can praise God. 4. They are not dwelling in heaven or hell, but in the dust of the earth—not on the earth's surface, but under it, and must be cast out of the earth. If they are in a subterranean region beneath the earth's surface, which some men call Paradise, then even God's people are dead, and must be waked out of the death sleep before they can sing. Surely if they had souls or spirits any where in a conscious state could they not sing just as well out of the body as in it?

As before shown, the Sadducees understood Christ to teach the unconsciousness of the dead, and the necessity of their resurrection, before they could communicate with each other. The difficulty with the seven husbands in reference to the one wife will not occur until they shall be raised from the dead. It would have to occur at death if they had been conscious. Lazarus, the widow's son, and the nobleman's daughter, had to be raised from the dead before they could communicate with their friends. We find no account of an intelligent part leaving any of these persons. They give no account of where their souls had been, or what they were doing while their bodies were dead. It is strange that Lazarus should have nothing to report to his sisters as to what he had seen and heard while his unintelligent body was dead. All the evidence thus far goes to show that the whole intelligent being dies and remains unconscious to the resurrection. Christ represents the part of man in which goodness and badness inheres, which must be the intelligent responsible man, as being in the grave, and dependent upon a resurrection from the dead in order to a reward or punishment. He said to the multitude assembled at the pool of Bethesda: "Marvel not at this for the hour is coming, in the which all that are in their graves shall hear the voice of the Son of God and shall come forth; they that have done good unto the resurrection of life; and they that have done evil unto the resurrection of damnation." John v 28, 29.

According to the language of Christ the nature in which moral character inheres—the responsible part of man's nature in which virtue or vice inhere—is slumbering in the grave. All in the graves hear the voice of the Son of God and come forth; they in their graves who have done good, and they in their graves who have done bad. There can be no merit or guilt where there is no intelligence and free moral agency. Good and bad conduct, rendering men worthy of reward or punishment, must be the result of intelligent action in reference to law—intelligent action in reference to law, evidence, free moral agency. Free moral agency involves responsibility; responsibility involves merit, or demerit; all of which must have inhered in the dead men in their graves, or they that have done good and bad who are in their graves could not hear the voice of the Son of God, and come forth. Thus teaching beyond all doubt that the intelligent responsible man dies, and unless quickened to life again must remain dead.

2. "They that have done good to the resurrection of life; and they that have done evil to the resurrection of condemnation." What part of man shall be the subject of reward or punishment? Answer: the intelligent, responsible man, who reasons, wills, and acts. But this class of men are in the graves and come forth to receive the reward or punishment. Thus, all future life, intelligence, reward or punishment, hinge upon the resurrection, and not the immortality of the soul. Christ gave the bereaved sisters of Lazarus all the consolation the Gospel affords. He did not say as most ministers of the present day would have done, Your brother is not dead, he is in heaven. That would have contradicted what He had told his disciples. "Then said Jesus unto them plainly, Lazarus is dead." John xi. 14. Martha believed that her brother was dead. Then said Martha unto Jesus, Lord, if thou hadst been here, my brother had not died." Verse 21. "Jesus saith unto her, Thy brother shall rise again." Verse 23. In this reply, Christ refers to the only means by which He could restore Lazarus to his bereaved sisters, to wit: the resurrection of the man who had died. Martha's hope centered in the resurrection of her brother when all righteous dead shall be raised. Her hope was resultant from the teachings of her Savior; and therefore a Gospel hope. "Martha saith unto him, I know that he shall rise again in the resurrection, at the last day." Verse 24. 1. Martha did not believe that any part of her brother survived death; but that all that constituted him a man had died, and must be raised, before she could see him. 2. She did not expect to see him until he should be raised at the last day. "Jesus said unto her, I am the resurrection, and the life; he that believeth in me, though he were dead, yet shall he live. And whosoever liveth and believeth in me shall never die." Verses 25, 26. According to the last verses quoted, the only hope for even the dead who had believed, was in their resurrection to life. But why shall those living and believing at the last day never die? The Apostle Paul answers this question. Addressing the Church at Corinth he says: "Behold I show you a mystery; we shall not all sleep, but we shall all be changed; in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye, at the last trump; for the trumpet shall sound, and the dead shall be raised incorruptible, and we shall be changed. For this corruptible must put on incorruption, and this mortal must put on immortality." 1 Cor. xv. 51–55. Thus those living at the time of the resurrection at the last day will never die, because they will be changed from mortality to immortality, as Enoch and Elijah were without having tasted death. But the foregoing language of Martha and Christ plainly teach that the only hope for the living or the dead is either in the re-living of the identical men who died, or in a radical change of their mortal constitutions which shall make them immortal without having to die, and be raised from the dead. All that was represented by the name Lazarus was in the rock-bound cave. The stone having been rolled away Jesus "cried with a loud voice, Lazarus, come forth! And he that was dead came forth, bound hand and foot with grave clothes; and his face was bound about with a napkin. Jesus saith unto them, Loose him, and let him go." Verses 43, 44. Was all this a splendid farce? Or was the real Lazarus dead, and buried in that cave? Christ did not raise his eyes heavenward and call his soul down from heaven, and then down into the tomb and call for his body to come up; and then unite them, making one man out of the two. No, the intelligent man who heard and understood what his Lord said, was in the grave, and nowhere else. When Christ would give his Father the strongest assurance that He could give, that of all He had given Him He would lose none, on what did He predicate that assurance? The immortality of the soul? No. What stronger assurance could He have given Him, than that a part of his Father's immortal nature was in every one of them? He had no authority to give any such pledge. He suspends the everlasting destiny of all the Father had given Him upon their resurrection from the dead, which would be surpassingly strange if He believed that each man possesses a deathless spirit. Hear Him as with majesty He exclaims, "And this is the Father's will which hath sent me that of all which he hath given me I should lose nothing, but should raise it up at the last day." John vi. 39. This language clearly teaches that unless He should raise his people from the dead He will lose them all—thus suspending all hope of future life upon the resurrection.

Again He says, "And this is the will of him that sent me, that every one which seeth the Son and believeth on him, may have everlasting life; and I will raise him up at the last day." Verse 40. The converse of which is if He should not raise them up at the last day, they will receive no eternal life. Thus predicating all hope of the sleeping saints ever obtaining eternal life upon their resurrection from the dead. If the soul is immortal, it cannot be lost. It cannot lose eternal life, because immortality excludes the possibility of death.

☞ "I am rich enough," said Pope to Swift, "and can afford to give away a hundred pounds a year. I would not crawl upon the earth without doing a little good. I will enjoy the pleasure of what I give by giving it alive. When I die," adds the poet, "I should be ashamed to leave enough for a monument, if there were a wanting friend above ground."

At Reading, Kansas, August 2, 1874, of congestion of the brain, EDGAR THOMAS youngest son of Brother Thomas and Sister Louisa Noyes, aged four months.

We extend our sympathy to our brother and sister for the loss of their little one, and with them look forward to a time when there shall be no more death, neither sorrow nor crying, when all tears shall be wiped from off all faces, by Him who is the resurrection and the life.

ORIGINAL POETRY.

MOUNT ZION.

Break from thy womb illustrious morn,
In radiant beams of light—
On the glorious Mount of Zion, Hallelujah!
And usher in Messiah's reign
With glory, power, and might,
On the glorious Mount of Zion, Hallelujah!

Attending angels round him wait,
Descending from above,—
On the glorious Mount of Zion, Hallelujah!
In robes of light his courts adorn,
And feast upon his love,
On the glorious Mount of Zion, Hallelujah!

'Tis coronation's blissful morn,
The Bride in purest white,—
On the glorious Mount of Zion, Hallelujah!
The Bridegroom with his Bride adorned,
Are crowned on Zion's height,
On the glorious Mount of Zion, Hallelujah!

Rejoice, oh virgin born, rejoice!
Messiah's reign has come,—
On the glorious Mount of Zion, Hallelujah!
And his redeemed obey his voice,
And come rejoicing home,
To the glorious Mount of Zion, Hallelujah!

Then let the law and word go forth
From Zion's lofty brow;
On the glorious Mount of Zion, Hallelujah!
Till all the haughty tribes of earth
The knee to Jesus bow,
On the glorious Mount of Zion, Hallelujah!

Then 'neath the fig tree and the vine,
Earth's weary ones are blest,—
On the glorious Mount of Zion, Hallelujah!
The promised crown the saints receive
And enter into rest,
On the glorious Mount of Zion, Hallelujah!

The trump of jubilee blow loud,
And let its echoes roll;—
On the glorious Mount of Zion, Hallelujah!
Till over vale and mountain top,
It sounds from pole to pole,
On the glorious Mount of Zion, Hallelujah!

No more shall Judah's exiled sons
Without a sceptre* roam
From the glorious Mount of Zion, Hallelujah!
And Israel's long lost tribes shall come
With shouts rejoicing home,
To the glorious Mount of Zion, Hallelujah!

Upraise the kingdom banner high,
And with its gleaming hue,—
On the glorious Mount of Zion, Hallelujah!
Triumphant wave o'er man redeemed,
And o'er the earth made new;
On the glorious Mount of Zion, Hallelujah!

COMMUNICATIONS.

Gleanings.

Brother Buzzell of Wisconsin sends us on a new subscription for the RESTITUTION, and says rather pointedly that he has no doubt more money has been spent by the brotherhood for vain amusements and show, than we have sunk the past year in printing the paper, and exhorts the brethren as follows:

If this estimate is correct, it is certainly a foul blot on our character and must be removed. I repeat it, it must be removed. Brethren arouse yourselves! Gird on the armor; prepare yourselves for the conflict, the battle will soon be over, and the victory will soon be ours if we press the battle to the gate; but if we throw down our weapons and let our paper go down, that so successfully wields the sword of the Spirit, the victory may not be ours. Let us think of these things, and act accordingly. The fact is, we get articles in almost every paper, each one of which is worth a year's subscription. We need just such articles, they are cheering to us. As we come in weary and care-worn and take up the weekly messenger and read of the glories which are so soon to be revealed, it gives us new life and courage to battle on for that priceless gift—eternal life. Let us take heed lest a promise being left us, we should come short of it.

Brother W. S. Finn of Vineland, New Jersey, begins to see the effect of persistent teaching of the truth "in season and out of season," as is evidenced by the following good report:

We have meetings in Vineland every two weeks. The other Sundays in the country at different places. Truth is very unpopular here—but now and then one that will listen at all. We had the privilege of baptizing two for the remission of sins not long since, and expect two or three more will yield to the obedience of faith soon. There is nothing that stirs the ire of the orthodox like Bible truth. They say that State prison is the proper place for such disturbers of the peace, but still we run at large, willing to suffer the scoffs of those false prophets who have a form of godliness, but deny the power thereof.

Brother Isaac S. Miller of Kansas writes of the cause in his neighborhood as follows:

It may be of interest to some to learn of our progress, and of the kind of preaching we have. We have a variety of preaching—the Methodist, Reformers and N. P. churches. We have had no Gospel preaching for some time. Brother T. E. Adams was to visit us two weeks ago. We are glad to hear he is still in the harness, doing something for the cause of Christ. What a pity that he could not spend more of his time in publishing the glad news of the approaching kingdom. We expect to hold a meeting of some days this fall at, or near Brother Adams'. Due notice will be given through the RESTITUTION, so all can come that will, or can. We shall expect all the brethren and sisters in our reach to attend. Now get ready, brethren, the time is short, the enemy is strong; deception is being practiced more and more every day, but thanks be to God, He that has promised to come, will come and will not tarry. Christ being the rightful Ruler, will settle the controversies with the nations; all wrongs will then be made right; the faithful shall go to inherit the things promised, and the wicked shall at their time receive justice.

Brother Lewis Bush of Michigan responds to the call for more subscribers readily, as will be seen by what he says below:

Seeing Brother Wilson's remarks in the RESTITUTION on the "financial" circumstances of the paper, I think it best to say nothing more at present about another paper, either a monthly or a child's paper, but give better support and build up the one we now have. It now makes its weekly visits, and verily, of all the papers that reach us none come so fresh and so deeply laden with the truths of God's soon coming kingdom. My mother has taken this paper under all its changes of name and change of publishers since 1850. We hope to have the reading of it as long as our pilgrimage to the better country shall last, and if we are cut off by death before the Lord shall come, we hope it may sound out the great truth of Messiah's reign over the nations, till the glad time of restitution is ushered in. As for myself, my health is, and has been for many years, very poor. I lay by a small portion of the sales from my garden for purchasing tracts, or other purposes to further on the cause. I have now two dollars laid by, which I now send enclosed. Please send me the RESTITUTION for one year, and having already the reading of it, I will distribute the numbers where they will be read. That will add a small mite to aid the RESTITUTION, and distributing the numbers will be better than tracts, as they will give more variety. Hoping there will be a general response from the brethren, and the paper relieved from embarrassment, I am your brother in the Gospel hope.

"Sister Mary" writes as follows:

Yesterday I attempted to speak with a neighbor in regard to the signs of the times. She was saying that terrible things were taking place daily, and she wondered what the end would be. Thinking it a favorable moment, I told her I was looking for just such things to happen, and was prepared for more terrible times than we had ever yet seen. She looked at me in astonishment, and asked what I meant. This gathering gloom and desolation, I replied, is but heralding the near approach of a righteous ruler, our King from heaven, who will rule the world in righteousness, and destroy all the works of the Evil One, and cut off the ungodly from our land, and in fact, cleanse out and purify by fire all the dross and impurities of our world." "What a delusion you are in," said she, "how I pity you! I am sure," she continued, "I don't know what to think of all these terrible things that are taking place, but I know what you say will never come to pass." "No more did the people believe Noah," I replied, "and were all destroyed in consequence."

Brother Churchill of Toronto sends the following:

I have been for the last few weeks with the brethren of Owen Sound, where we had the privilege and pleasure of opening a very neat, new meeting house—a brick building, capable of seating, when fully seated, about one hundred and twenty persons—in which we held a series of meetings. Of such a commodious place of meeting, the brethren may well be proud and thankful, as they could not obtain the use of any of the "Babylonian" buildings. They have here a church of some thirty-five members, holding "the faith once for all delivered to the saints," and who have not been moved by any divisions or convulsions as in other churches. Some of the brethren have visited some of the country school-houses, and if the people become interested, their visits will continue.

I am sorry to say that Brother John Harrison has had a fire on his premises, which has caused the destruction of his planing mills and a large quantity of lumber, his saw mill, however, has been saved.

In the RESTITUTION of July 16 we credited Brother Bitner with some remarks in "Gleanings" wrongfully; it was Brother J. D. Smith who wrote us. We will apologize to either of the brethren, or both, if necessary. We got a good item out of it, and are thankful.

☞ Take heed to yourselves, lest at any time your hearts be overcharged with surfeiting and drunkenness, and the cares of this life.

Young Men In Cities.

City life holds out attractions which continually draw young men from their rural homes into our large cities, where the enemy of souls is ever on the alert to allure them into sin by the multitudinous devices and agencies which abound in the city, and which are not suspected by the unsophisticated until too late.

We desire to save all such from ruin, and, in the furtherance of this object, wish to call the attention of clergymen, parents and friends to our rooms and privileges which can be secured to young men, strangers coming into our city, that they may have letters of introduction to us. To become acquainted with proper associates and mingle in good society upon their first arrival in the city, is a matter often of vital importance.

We are prepared to introduce all young men into any church of the denomination which they have been accustomed to attend, where they will be at home at once and under good influences.

Our association is as a vestibule to the church, to receive and distribute the strangers that come into our midst, and we shall be pleased to meet every young man that enters our city as a stranger.

Our reading rooms are at No. 148 Madison street, near LaSalle, open every day from 8 a. m. to 10 p. m., having the principal papers and magazines on file, and a well-selected library of two thousand five hundred volumes.

Our boarding house list has upon it nearly one hundred good Christian homes, from which strangers can select free of charge.

We conduct the following meetings at our rooms, to which all strangers are cordially invited, until they get settled in their own church home:

Noon-day Prayer Meeting daily for forty-five minutes; Young Men's Prayer Meeting every Saturday evening; Gospel Meeting every Sunday evening; Strangers' Meeting every Monday evening, when young men, strangers, can make the acquaintance of members from the different churches in the city, who will be present as delegates from the respective churches to look after them.

Conversational Bible Class every Sunday morning for one hour before the regular church services.

Young men wishing to spend their evenings pleasantly as well as profitably, are invited to the Lyceum for debates, music, readings, etc., every alternate Tuesday evening. Lectures after the completion of our new hall every Thursday evening. Other entertainments will be provided early in the fall, and whatever is most practical and feasible will be undertaken to supply young men with a pleasant place of resort to spend their evenings, and if possible draw them from the many avenues of amusement which are of a questionable character.

Our Employment Bureau is at No. 145 Fifth avenue, in charge of Mr. J. M. Hitchcock, who has been the Superintendent of that branch of the work for several years, and will do all he can toward finding young men employment. We would, however, suggest to young men not to come to Chicago for work, as there are at the present time thousands of persons without employment.

But our latch string is always out to all strangers visiting the city, and we cordially invite them to call.

In behalf of young men.

Kansas General Meeting.

Pursuant to notice published by Brother J. C. Kimsey in the RESTITUTION, a large number of the members of the Church of God assembled in Brother Perry's grove near Pleasanton, Kansas, Friday, July 31, 1874 at three o'clock p. m. No President was elected, or Secretary chosen, i. e., no formal motion was made and carried "or any such thing," but by common consent, Brother Michael Tippie was recognized as the elder brother present, and the writer was designated as the one to write those things which might be of interest to the body at large. Brother Z. Gower first stood up and spoke to the brethren and sisters in a very feeling and appropriate manner, and was followed by others in short, pointed addresses, exhorting the brethren to keep in the "narrow way." Union, peace and harmony prevailed.

Adjourned till evening, when at Brother Perry's house, a conferring meeting was held, which was opened with prayer by Brother Tippie. It seemed to me that if our orthodox friends could have just then heard that old soul-sleeper's prayer and the heartfelt "amens" of the brethren, they would no more charge that this sect which is "every where spoken against," is not in favor of prayer. But the scene was not for the eyes of the world, and I may not be permitted to raise the curtain.

Brother John Foore, after singing a spiritual song as none but he can sing, stood up and addressed the brethren upon the subject of Conferences and the Bible authority for them—the conclusion reached being that meetings of the brethren, are in accordance with the Word, but that constitutions, written by-laws, charters and worldly-titled officers, are not authorized in the sacred writings.

Saturday, August 1, at 9 o'clock A. M., the brethren re-assembled in the grove and after singing, prayer was offered by Brother Foore. Brother Kimsey then submitted the question "How can men get into the Christ?" which was fully considered by the brethren, who, notwithstanding it was the first time many had met together, all spake the same things, having learned from the pure Word that men are in Christ only when they have heard the Word, believed the "Gospel of the kingdom" and been baptized or immersed into the name of the Lord Jesus, in the order here stated, and that baptism or immersion cannot scripturally precede a hearty belief of the Gospel.

At 11 o'clock A. M., Brother Wm. J. Orem spoke from Dan ii., upon "The kingdom of God." To attempt a description of his discourse would but result in doing the brother injustice, from my inability to draw a proper pen picture of the scenery, the rivited attention of his audience, the appearance of the speaker, and masterly logical manner in which he handled the subject.

3 o'clock P. M., Brother T. E. Adams spoke from 1 Thess. iv., showing the Bible way of comforting one another. In the evening Elder Geo. M. Myers of Girard, (late District Evangelist of the Christian Church for Southeast Kansas) gave a very interesting discourse upon the "Ministration of the Spirit." The audience was held in almost breathless silence to such an extent as to be undisturbed by the thunders of a threatening storm.

Sunday, August 2. The "Social Meeting" at nine A. M., was one never to be forgotten by any present. The thought of never being able to all meet again in this age, caused tears to freely flow, which were changed to tears of joy at the bright prospect of meeting in the kingdom, never more to separate. Many brethren and sisters spoke freely one to another of "that blessed hope," and the joys of the coming age, in contrast with the trials and tribulations of this present evil age—their reliance for salvation being centered in the Lord Jesus alone. Eleven A. M. Brother John Foore preached "the Gospel" to a large and attentive audience for more than two hours, giving the truth in its purity, as it was preached by Jesus, Paul, Peter and written for our instruction and information. 3 o'clock P. M. By request of portions of the audience Brother Orem spoke again and expounded numerous portions of Scripture teaching the restoration of Israel to their own land, at the conclusion of which the parting hand was taken, as many were obliged to return to their homes, but in the evening the people came together again and were addressed by the writer upon the subject of religion, from James i. 27. Brethren Foore and Kimsey then gave short exhortations at the conclusion of which, three souls came forward demanding immersion into the Anointed One, of Brother Kimsey, which was arranged to be done on the morrow.

It was mutually agreed and understood, that about one year hence, another general meeting would be held, (the Lord willing) and that this meeting was the beginning of a forward movement in the cause of truth, yet as we separated we fervently prayed "Thy kingdom come, thy will be done on earth as it is in heaven."

Reports of Churches.

OMAHA, MO.

BROTHER WILSON:—

We held a meeting at Omaha in Putnam county, Mo., which resulted in the organization of a church, styled the "Church of God" according to Gospel rule. Brother Lewis Davis, Brother Peter Summers, and myself were appointed Elders, and Brother Wm. Loe was chosen Deacon. Brother Davis and myself have been preaching the one precious faith for some time. We have sixteen members to commence with. This is the first Church of God organized in this section of country. The prospect is good for a large congregation. The glad tidings of the soon coming kingdom must be preached throughout the land, and the Abrahamic Faith must be held up before the people. Time of meeting, first Lord's Day in each month.

O. C. DENSLOW, Clerk.

ABUNDANT OPPORTUNITIES.—The man whose heart is set on an office will find an opportunity at every turn and corner to throw his lines around a voter. So the man who sincerely desires to bring men to Christ, will find his chance to talk to men, without cant and without whine, in the field, at the forge, behind the counter, in the court room, on the street, wherever he is thrown in personal contact with them. Only let him follw the Spirit's leading, and he will be surprised how frequent are the opportunities to sow good seed when one really wants to sow it.

☞ Watch ye therefore and pray

SELECTIONS.

Fragments Gathered Up.

If an angel were sent to find the most perfect man, he would probably not find him composing a body of divinity, but perhaps, a cripple in a poor-house, whom the parish wish dead, and humbled before God, with far lower thoughts of himself than others have of him.

Many talk familiarly of sanctification in the lump, who know but little of it in the piece. The readiest way to know whether you are in Christ, is to know whether Christ be in you.

Revenge hurts both offerer and sufferer; as we see in a bee, which, in her anger, loseth her sting, and lives a drone ever after.

A prudent man is like a pin; his head prevents him from going too far.

A promise should be given with caution and kept with care. A promise should be made by the heart, and remembered by the head. A promise and its performance should, like the scales of a true balance, always present a mutual adjustment. A promise attended to is a debt settled.

God crowns with mercy, but a swollen head is not fit to have that crown put upon it. A proud man is seldom a grateful man, for he never thinks he gets as much as he deserves. When any mercy falls, he says, "Yes, but it ought to be more. It is only manna large as a coriander seed, whereas, it ought to be like a baker's loaf."

"I am a home missionary," once observed a Christian mother; "six pairs of little eyes are daily watching my looks, as well as listening to my words: and I wish my children never to see in me that which they may not imitate."

Live to be useful. Live to give light. Live to accomplish the end for which you were made, and quietly and steadily shine on, trying to do good.

If we would have powerful minds we must think; if we would have faithful hearts we must love; if we would have strong muscles, we must labor. These include all that is valuable in life.

A preached gospel by men whose life is such as to destroy all confidence in them, is like tendering water in a defiled cup; it disgusts rather than pleases.

The Moon as a Giver of Light.

When I dealt with the subject of the sun, I spoke of the worshippers of the sun, who knelt down to him and regarded him as the ruler of their destinies; but there were nations who worshipped the moon, and if we inquire into the reason of such worship we very readily find it. We notice that Job speaks of the moon as walking in brightness, and he speaks, too, of the subject of the moon's worship. It was natural that men should worship the moon. The ancients worshipped any body that seemed to move upon the heavens, and, therefore, they worshipped the sun, moon, and the planets.

Now this orb that moves around the earth seems to be there in order to give light during the night-time. Let us see what astronomy has taught us. It teaches that the moon is very much smaller than the earth, with a diameter of 2,100 miles. She is distant from the earth 238,828 miles. The surface of the moon is less than the earth's in the proportion of 1 to 13 1-2. In other words, the surface of the moon is about 14,600,000 square miles, equal almost exactly to the surface of North and South America. It is also equal approximately to the surface of Europe and Africa taken together. If the moon is the abode of life there is plenty of life there, and it is an interesting question whether she now can maintain life. We know that the volume of the moon is to that of the earth as 1 to 49 1-2, while her density is rather less than that of the earth, so that her mass is to the earth as about 1 to 81.

First of all, as to the offices of the moon. If it is shown that she discharges important offices to the earth, you will see that we are no longer bound by the argument of design to recognize her as the abode of life. First, we know she serves for the division of time. She gives light by night. God set his light in the expause of heaven, the greater to rule by day and the lesser by night alternately. There is a service performed by the moon which is so regular as to suggest that perhaps the Almighty intended the moon for that special purpose.

Laplace went so far as to say if he had made the moon he would have made it more useful to man. He would have put it four times its present distance away from the earth, when it would be far enough away to be a full moon and give a regular light continuously by night. The first objection to this is an astronomical one, for of all nuisances the moon's light is one which the astronomer dislikes most, especially when he wants to study some nebulæ, or some barely visible comet; at those times the moon's brightness seriously interferes with his observations; and I am surprised, indeed, that Laplace, himself an astronomer, should have suggested so inconvenient an arrangement a that. But there are other difficulties If the moon is in that condition she would always have to be opposite the sun. The sun would go around once a year and the moon also. The moon would no longer be a measure of time, she would no longer rule the tides in the same way. She now raises a great wave called the tide-wave, represented in height by b. You have another caused by the sun, represented by 2. These two waves are sometimes combined in a single wave, and act together, sometimes opposing, sometimes coalescing. According to these changes, the tide varies in height from the difference of 5 and 2 to the sum of 5 and 2, that is to say, 2 the least height and 7 the greatest. That is a very important matter. It is of great service, as any one who lives by the sea-shore knows; it is of great interest to the ship-builder and merchant that there should be variable tides, that there should not always be high-tides, nor always low. That important service would not have been subserved by the moon if the consideration suggested by Laplace had prevailed. There is another very important service. The moon enables the astronomer or seaman in long voyages to ascertain the longitude, which is nothing more or less than the true time at the observer's station. If she moved twelve times more slowly she would be less fit to indicate the time in exactly the same degree as the hour-hand of a watch is less fit than the minute hand. There are other very great and important advantages of the real moon over that suggested by Laplace, which I wonder did not occur to a mathematician such as he, the only man who ever lived of whom it can be said, "He was the rival of Newton." He himself said Newton was fortunate in having lived before him. In another man it would have been rank conceit, but in Laplace it was considered as a just statement. Yet he failed to notice, when he suggested this moon's being four times farther from us, that under his condition, if spread so as to give the same light, the material of which the moon would be made would be lighter than any solid element known to us. I think it was well that the Almighty did not take counsel from Laplace in creating the moon.—Proctor.

The Storm at Pittsburgh, Pa.

From an intelligent German woman the following details have been learned: She was aroused at half past three by hearing a queer rushing noise, as of water passing into the cellar. She called her husband, who on going down found water up to the pavement in front. As he lived on a nigh portion of Spring Garden avenue, he could see a considerable distance around. The water below had risen to the upper stories of buildings, and when cries for aid and heart-rending screams of drowning inmates broke upon his ears, he at once comprehended the terrible situation. Presently some of the houses began to float off, and the air was filled with distressing cries of mothers and children. At short intervals flashes of lightning would reveal ghastly, terror-stricken faces thrust from windows of floating houses.

The water rose higher and higher, and buildings began to crumble and fall to pieces. Struggling forms of men, women and children could be seen in the water, battling for life. After an interval of darkness, lightning would again reveal the place, but the victims had disappeared beneath the floating debris.

Never for a moment did the wild despairing cries cease. No sooner did the screams of one cease with death than another would burst forth. And so on during the long hours of the night they could hear screams and witness dying struggles without the least power to help. At times they could see through windows of floating houses where lights still burned and mothers kneeling with children in their arms. Presently the house would topple and fall with a crash, but not too loud to drown the piercing shrieks of the poor wretches within.

The loss of property will not fall short of $1,000,000. Fully one hundred and fifty buildings have been destroyed.

A FEW HOURS DIFFERENCE.—The benevolent Dr. Wilson, Bishop of Sodor and Man, once discovered a clergyman at Bath, who, he was informed, was ill, poor, and had a numerous family. In the evening he gave a friend £50, requesting him to deliver it in the most delicate manner, and as from an unknown person. The friend replied, "I will wait upon him early in the morning." "You will oblige me by calling directly," requested the kind hearted prelate. "Think, sir, of what importance a good night's rest may be to the poor man."

☞ Mr. Disraeli expressed in the British House of Commons, referring to the strife between the Church and State on the continent, the conviction that, however tranquil might be the general state of Europe, there were agencies at work preparing a period of great disturbances.

Chicago, Ill.

P. S. All letters for the Editor may be sent to the above place.

THE RESTITUTION advocates the final "restitution of all things" which God hath spoken by the mouth of all His holy Prophets since the world began." It also advocates as a means to this end, the establishment of the Kingdom of God on the earth, with the Christ as King of kings, and the immortal saints as joint-heirs with Him in the government of the nations; the restoration of Israel; the literal resurrection of the dead; the immortalization of the righteous, and the final destruction of the wicked; eternal life only through Christ; and many other kindred truths. It also advocates a hearty belief of the Gospel, repentance, and immersion as prerequisites to the forgiveness of sins; and a holy life as essential for final salvation.

COMMUNICATIONS.

THE EDITOR must not be understood as endorsing all the correspondents expressed by correspondents whose articles are furnished under this head. Each writer is alone responsible for the articles bearing his own signature. No personal articles will be inserted. No writer will be allowed to refer directly or indirectly to the articles of another by way of criticism. If the teaching of any writer is not enforced, an article setting forth the views of the party differing may be furnished. Free discussion of Bible doctrines on all sides will be allowed, but the Editor reserves the privilege of excluding those communications which antagonize a belief and obedience of the Gospel as a means of salvation, or which undermine its principles.

What Is Mind?

It is sometimes painful, sometimes very amusing to hear the different answers given to this much agitated question, and the idea suggested itself to me to add to the many attempts at definition, my humble opinion. We have come across a sentence made use of by John Mason Good in his "Book of Nature," that has incited us to dictate a few thoughts. He speaks of "The essence of mind or soul" and says again "Is the essence of the human soul material or immaterial?"

The first objection we have to find with the Dr. is his confounding the terms mind and soul, and the second is the idea of an essence of mind.

What is mind? Mind is nothing. It is an attribute, not a thing, nor an accumulation of things. You may have essence of ginger, or essence of roses, but ginger is something, and roses are things, from which essence may be extracted. But mind is an attribute or power of the brain, and we may not have the essence of an attribute or power. The word mind is used to define our accumulation of thoughts or ideas. Showing a person a piece of your mind is a figure of speech, as we sometimes hear wags talk of "chunks of wisdom," but none but a fool or a philosopher would think of extracting the essence of wisdom, because we know that wisdom is the power of thinking rightly.

I see. Do I make anything? No, my eye has acted. I hear. Do I make anything? No, my ear has acted. I move. Do I make anything? No, my limb has acted. I think. Do I make anything? No, my brain has acted. The first mentioned action we call sight, the second hearing, the third motion, the fourth thought or mind. May we talk of the essence of sight and discuss whether said essence is material or immaterial? or the essence of hearing, or the essence of motion? Then why talk of the essence of mind? We might have the essence of brains, but we make no hesitation in affirming that to be a material essence. Thus we see what extraordinary confusion we are led into by the error of taking an attribute for an entity, an abstract idea for a thing.

But why should a man of distinguished learning make such a profound blunder? Further on we find the key to the mystery, and it is this. He says "That the mind has a distinct nature, and is a distinct reality from the body, that it is gifted with immortality, . . . and capacited for a state of separate existence after the death of the corporeal frame to which it is attached, are in my opinion propositions clearly deducible from Revelation." If a man is capable of deducing from the facts that stare us in the face from day to day, that show the utter dependance of the mind on the body, how disease of the body enfeebles it and sometimes destroys it, and how strong drink in the stomach affects it,—any person we say who can deduce from such observations that the mind is independent of the body, is quite capable of deducing like conclusions from the Bible. The fact is he likes it to be so and he will have his way.

But we rejoice to find that there are other authors who have not been carried away by the error of immortal-soulism, that seems to steal away the brain. That there are other philosophers, who as far as the mortal condition of man is concerned, are on Bible ground. "That the dead praise not the Lord;" that "the dead know not anything," that "they are as though they had not been," in short that "man is mortal," is one of the first principles of Bible truth. Like the great truth of the One God it has maintained it for ages in spite of opposition, in spite of misrepresentation, bearing it on above the clamor and the jargon of the rude multitude. As the sun that walks in splendor through the heaven that it illuminates, so onward moves through all generations the first grand truth of the unity of God. And as the moon that sheds its pallid light upon the midnight scenery, so onward comes the other truth, that man is mortal. Celestial lights of truth that are borne onward by divine omnipotence, and by the light of which all true philosophy must be illuminated.

What then is the difference between mind and soul? The soul, correctly speaking is a living organism. According to Moses it is an animal organism, but Aristotle according to Professor Bain, "applied the term soul (ψυχη) to all characteristic functions of living bodies, from nutrition up to the loftiest attributes of intellect." 1. Nutritive souls. 2. Sentient souls, and 3, intelligent beings. Moses speaks of living souls and dead souls, and of eating souls and of destroying souls, but we never hear talk of killing a man's mind, of a dead mind, or of a mind that is edible. It cannot be killed because it never was alive. It cannot be eaten because it is not a thing. In a certain sense mind can be destroyed in that it can be made to cease by changing the conditions of its existence, by interfering with and distracting that part of the organism that produces it. By way of illustration.

Come with me into yonder cathedral, and sit beneath the vast dome that seems to rise into mid heaven. Listen! What is that low rumble? Hush! 'Tis music. Low and deep it moans. Hark! how it rises, how it fills the vast vault above us; how it soothes our spirits. Now it languishes, now it cheers; now it fills the soul with ecstasies. What a power is music. What is music? Oh, philosophy! Thou art the destroyer of sentiment. Music is a variety of sounds, and sound is a vibration of the air, and the vibration in the above illustration was caused by a pair of bellows, that blow through a series of pipes that are arranged so as to be at the will of a person that operates on them, and this machine is called an organ. Music is not a thing. It is a certain commotion of the atmosphere caused by an organ or some other instrument. But you may destroy that condition of things, you may stop that commotion by destroying the instrument. Send a cannon ball crashing through those pipes and the musician may press the keys in vain.

And exactly so is it with mind; it is the music of that organ called the brain, it is entirely dependent upon a brain and not upon that only but upon certain conditions besides; for a dead brain will not produce mind, nor will a dormant brain produce it; it must be a live brain and a waking brain. A diseased brain will produce a disordered mind, unharmonious music (if such can be) it is an organ out of tune, a lute unstrung.

These truths are expressed very well by Professor Bain in his book "Mind and Body." He says, "So far as concerns our feelings and emotions it is the universal testimony of mankind, that these have no independent spiritual subsistence, but are in every case embodied in a fleshly form." Again, "The more careful and studied observations of physiologists have shown beyond question that the brain as a whole is indispensable to thought, to feeling and to volition." And yet again he says, "In actual fact it (mind) exists in company with a peculiar mass of matter containing in a very superior degree the properties known as living or organized." The same truth is still more eloquently put by the Duke of Argyle in his admirable work, the "Reign of Law." He says, "In the exercise of pure reason when by an effort of our will we turn our attention to a new question, and in the twinkling of an eye pursue a new train of thought; above all, when our affections go forth towards the object of them, in all these operations if anywhere, we feel as if we were free from mechanism, from organism, from matter in any form." So it seems till we are brought face to face with the terrible phenomena of disease, then our delusion is dispelled and we know how frail we are. Then we find the same stroke that paralyzes the movement of a limb may paralyze not less effectually all the power of reason, of memory, and of will. And the affections what becomes of them? These too which seem so purely spiritual, we find out to be dependent on material structure. The French physiologist Lelut has expressed the same idea in his book, "Physiologie de la pensei." He says: "It is—if you will—in this living body the mind that feels and that thinks, but in the sense of things feels not nor thinks but by the body and its organs."

These are but reiterations of the same old truth, taught by Moses and the Prophets, that man is of the earth earthy, a mere animal but endowed with rather more mental power than the rest.

And looking at it from my point of view the mind does not appear to be such an inexplicable mystery; in fact it is easy to understand what mind is. We can read the minds of each other, and we can express our own minds by pen or tongue, but the mystery, the amazing wonder, is in the matter, in the wonderful mechanism of the brain, the handicraft of the Great Mechanic. In thus considering it, we may exclaim with the Psalmist, "I will praise thee for I am fearfully and wonderfully made! Marvellous are thy works and that my soul knoweth right well. My SUBSTANCE was not hid from thee when I was made in secret and curiously wrought in the lowest part of the earth. Thine eye did see my SUBSTANCE, yet being imperfect, and in thy book all my members were written, which in continuance were fashioned, when as yet there was none of them."

Essentials.

DEAR BROTHERS AND SISTERS:—Much has been said about what faith is essential to salvation. We can surely over-estimate the benefit of a correct faith, and enlightened understanding. It is vastly important that we believe the record God gave of his Son, the promises made to Abraham, and through him to all the children of God. In fine that we believe all "the holy scriptures which are able to make us wise unto salvation through faith which is in Christ Jesus."

Surely the intellect can find no loftier subject to investigate than those embraced in the plan of man's redemption. The resurrection, (and retaining the personal identity,) of countless multitudes from the degradation of sin, and the corruption of death, to an equality with angels, the bestowing of an immortal existence upon beings made from the dust, the restitution of all things spoken of by the mouth of all his holy prophets, restoring this accursed earth to a Paradise more glorious than Eden, and as enduring as God's eternal throne; the establishment of God's kingdom, and reign in righteousness of his well beloved Son, the gorgeous splendors of the New Jerusalem, and its glorified inhabitants coming from the desolations of the grave, and how men may become heirs of the kingdom, members of this royal heavenly family, and receive a crown of life with the untold glories of the eternal ages, is not only all-important and heaven-inspiring, but is more exalting and ennobling to the intellect than all the treasures of classic lore.

However glorious and important this may be, can we trust to it as all that is essential to obtain eternal redemption? We often fear in getting so much head religion, we trust too much to it, and look upon it as the Alpha and Omega, the all-essential road to salvation, the one thing needful, that will carry us over every obstacle into the kingdom of God. And so we may in one sense esteem it, for a faith that is well pleasing to God will produce works in accordance with his law; but He has requested man to prove himself worthy of eternal life, before he can receive it, to develop his divine character before he receives the divine nature.

God is love, and love is an all-essential element of Christian character, the Christian's crowning grace. There is not, in the whole Bible, another thing so strictly enjoined on believers, as love—love to God and love to man. Love is an absence of selfishness. It is moral goodness, kindness, patience. It is, so to speak, the foundation from which flows every christian grace. It is a godlike trait of character which we must cultivate on all occasions, if we would be partakers of a divine nature and receive the priceless boon of eternal life. It matters little how intelligent we are, or how much knowledge we possess; all is vain without love. The Apostle tells us if we could speak in every language of men and of angels, yet without love we should be no better than brass that resounds, or a cymbal that makes a noise. And to show us how essential it is to our salvation, he tells us, "though I have the gift of prophecy, and understand all knowledge, and though I have all faith so that I could remove mountains, and have no love, I am nothing." Our lives spent in vain, no prospect of eternal life; all our hopes, all our prospects are, and will amount to nothing at all.

This is just the estimate and emphasis the inspired Apostle places upon love. Then have we not a right to consider it essential to salvation? It is the very climax of the christian graces. By its exercise we become likened to our blessed Savior, and conformed to his image, learn to shun that which is evil, and cleave to that which is good. All who share the honors of the world to come, must be conformed to the image of God's Son; must have a moral and spiritual resemblance in character and disposition, as well as a future physical likeness to our glorious Lord. This glorious likeness we can never possess until God sees in us a character worth preserving.

I sometimes fear we do not realize the stress which the Bible lays upon love. In Paul's letter to the Corinthians, it is set forth as the one thing necessary from which springs forth every christian grace, such as joy, peace, long-suffering gentleness goodness, faith, meekness. And love is fulfilling of the law. If our hearts are filled with it, there will be no room for pride, envy, evil thinking, selfishness, or any other evil work. Let us show forth the praises of God by keeping his commandments, and be ready to meet our coming Lord.

The New Translation of Job.

[Copy of a letter to Mr. Forester Kelly, Hartford, Conn.]

Mr. Forester Kelly.

Dear Sir: Yours of Sept. 29 was received yesterday. I feel much obliged by your proffered aid in obtaining subscribers. I can not tell yet whether a sufficient number will be obtained to justify the publication.

You are aware, perhaps, that the "American Bible Union," of New York, have put out a translation of Job. It has been sent to me, and I have compared it with mine; and I am more than ever satisfied that mine ought to be published. The gentleman who sent it to me sent me also a copy of the "Rules for Revision" of the Bible, adopted by the American Bible Union. A part of one of the rules is, "The common English version must be the basis of revision." And the title page is, "The book of Job. From the original Hebrew on the basis of the common and earlier English versions." The gentleman who sent it to me had previously told me that it was not an independent version, but that the persons employed to do it were put under rules. And he told me he had seen one of them, and asked him why they did not make an independent version, and was answered, that he wanted to do so, but they were not allowed to do so. The version they give shows how faithfully they adhered to the rule prescribed. The glorious doctrine of the book as to the destiny of the race, is mangled and spoiled by perversions and evasions, in endeavors to make it agree with a theory of man, and that the theory of the great apostasy (that is, departure from the faith), Romanism, the Papacy, by which it has ruled so-called christendom, including so-called Protestantism, for 1300 years or more—the most enormous cheat ever inflicted on ignorance and unenquiring credulity.

In conversation with the gentleman, I spoke of the revision which was being made in England; and he answered that that also was being made under rules, and would not be an independent version.

Has it indeed come to this, that in this nineteenth century of the christian era, three-fourths gone, an independent version of the Scriptures from the Hebrew can not be obtained? It would seem that the class of men from whom it should be expected, are determined it shall not be had if they can prevent it. The call for a new translation has been so loud that it could not well be longer unheeded. And the class looked to for it seem to have felt that they could not well longer disregard the call. And who have undertaken to furnish a new translation. But they are so determined that the system they have so long taught shall not be disturbed, that they forbid an independent version. And, unfortunately, the greater part of the lay-world have so fully confided in the honesty and supposed learning of their professed teachers, as to receive as God's system the system taught from the pulpit; and another class have rejected the system taught, and the Bible, too, assuming that the Bible teaches what the pulpit does. And this latter class is multiplying rapidly.

Among letters received from persons giving their names as subscribers I have just received one ending, "Yours for truth in translations." The same letter says, "May your success be such as to encourage you in a further prosecution of the work of translation of the sacred scriptures." Can it be possible that I am the only layman who has given sufficient attention to the Hebrew to embolden him to undertake to supply to some extent, what men professing to be ordained and installed as religious teachers forbid to be given?

You inquire the price per copy, including postage. I think it can be mailed for $1.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

O. S. HALSTED.

Personal Identity in the Resurrection.

An argument used against the resurrection of the body by those who deny the doctrine, is that when death reduces the body to its original elements, they enter into other combinations and lose their identity, and what we call a literal resurrection, would be a new creation. But we think the resurrection of the body is plainly taught in the Scripture, and is a very important feature of the plan of salvation. Without personal identity it would scarcely be a resurrection, but would be more of a creation. Did we not come up in the resurrection with the same bodies which went to the grave, we would not know that we realized our Christian hope, and that we received the reward of having believed in Christ, and laid hold on "eternal life" by "seeking for glory, honor and immortality;" and as this is held out to us to strive to obtain, and to encourage us to persevere in the Christian race, it follows that when it is obtained we shall know that it is the reward of having had faith in Christ.

Paul anticipates the question (1 Cor. xv. 35,) or perhaps it was asked in his day, "How are the dead raised up, and with what body do they come?" He proceeds to answer, and after making an illustration of sowing grain, he says, "So also is the resurrection of the dead. It is sown in corruption, it is raised in incorruption; it is sown in dishonor, it is raised in glory; it is sown in weakness, it is raised in power; it is sown a natural body, it is raised a spiritual body." He does not speak of it as another body, but speaks of it as a changed body; changed from a natural body to a spiritual one; from a corruptible body to an incorruptible one. "So also is the resurrection of the dead. It is sown in corruption, it is raised in incorruption." Verse 42. What is it that is "sown" and "raised?" The body (verse 44,) the same that went down into the grave in dishonor, weakness, corruption, mortality. Further on in this commentary on the resurrection, (1 Cor. xv.,) Paul says, "As we have borne the image of the earthy we shall also bear the image of the heavenly." Verse 49. The same body that bears the image of the earthy now, or the mortal nature of the first man, Adam, will also bear the image of the heavenly, or the immortal nature of the second man, the Lord from heaven. 1 John iii. 2. "We know that when he shall appear we shall be like him, for we shall see him as he is. Then shall we bear the image of Jesus when He comes at his second appearing, when David expected to be satisfied when he should awake in the likeness of the Lord, and should behold his face in righteousness. Psa. xvii. 15. David could not be satisfied with the Lord's likeness, unless he had his identity of person to know that it was what he looked for when he should awake.

Job speaks very plainly of his identity in the resurrection, and of his faith in the coming of the Redeemer and Life-giver. "For I know that my Redeemer liveth, and that he shall stand at the latter day upon the earth; and though after my skin [illegible] flesh shall I see God, (or after I shall awake, though this body be destroyed, yet out of my flesh shall I see God,—Margin) whom I shall see for myself, and mine eyes shall behold." Job had strong faith that in the resurrection he should see God with the same eyes he was then possessed of, and out of the flesh which composed his body. Had he not identity in the resurrected state his hope could not be realized. Abraham too, must have a personal, identical resurrection, that the promises made to him and his seed might be fulfilled—that he and his seed may together inherit the land of promise forever.

In the Scripture history of those resurrected to life, and who are examples of the great resurrection, their identity was a distinctive feature. When Jesus met his disciples after his resurrection, and they doubted some of its being Jesus Himself, but supposed they had seen a spirit, or apparition, He said to them, "Behold my hands and my feet, that it is I myself." Then they knew that He was the very same person whom they had loved and trusted as their Savior. They knew Him to be the very same Jesus they had known before. Jesus resurrected is the pledge of the resurrection of his people, and as He preserved his identity, so will his people know and be known. They will be immortalized and glorified, but will be the same identical individuals they were before. The denial of identity in the resurrection, is too vague an idea to be entertained by Bible Christians. How much more comforting the thought that we shall have a literal salvation, a complete and eternal resurrection to life.—Advent and Sabbath Advocate.

Coolness Between Russia and Germany.

Is the cloud which now seems no bigger than a man's hand, destined in a short time to cover the whole horizon of European politics? That is the question being anxiously asked on all sides. The sudden coolness between Russia and Germany, springing from the fiasco of the Brussels Conference, may mark a turning point in history. At any rate, the unexpected reappearance of the Schleswig question on the scene is most significant. Poor little Denmark would never have dreamed of provoking her big neighbor, unless she had been privately assured of support and sympathy. Prince Bismarck has enough on his hands, one would think, without wantonly making a fresh enemy for Germany on her northern frontier. Hence it is scarcely likely that the fresh persecutions in Schleswig which form the staple of the complaint of the Danes, are anything more than a political move to show to Denmark that the friendship of, and probably closer connection with Germany, are more useful to her and of more immediate importance than the smiles of Russia. If Russia really fears the absorption of Denmark by Germany, she may think it politic to resist this step, which must inevitably imprison her northern fleets in the Baltic as those of the south are confined to the Black Sea; and, without waiting until France has reorganized, may try a game of conclusion with Germany, hoping, no doubt, to find a ready ally in Austria. All these clouds may pass off, but it can only be a temporary truce. The German Empire has an implacable and never-tiring enemy in the church of Rome on the one hand, and in the various schools of radicalism on the other. These two cannot unite for any practical object, but they can by turns rouse against the rule of the Hohenzollerns passions of various kinds, and prepare the way for its ultimate downfall.—Sel.

☞ This book was not sent to the priest, or the church, or the minister, to be doled out at their discretion to the people, but it is addressed directly to the laity, or the servants of God. The Bible is their lamp, and charter, and sword: it is their privilege to hear Christ speak in the scriptures in his own blessed voice, and not in spent echoes, diluted by man.

"Take Heed."

"And take heed to yourselves lest at any time your hearts be overcharged with surfeiting, and drunkenness, and cares of this life, and so that day come upon you unawares."—Luke xxi. 34.

Who spake these words? Jesus. How well He knew the tendency of these adverse influences. How careful He is to warn his followers against them. None knew better than He the natural inclination of the human heart. It was towards self gratification; towards everything pertaining to the present life, even at the expense of carrying a heavy burden. We see worldly men madly rushing on, bargaining with each other, and striving in every way possible to gain some advantage for self. Principle is sacrificed, men's honor trampled under foot, lying indulged in, and every course is pursued if by any means they may attain unto wealth or official position. Thousands have struggled in vain, and fallen by the way, mere wrecks, yet the warning is unheeded by thousands more who are following in their footsteps. Life is too short for such men. Even those who in a measure succeed in reaching the goal of their ambition, do so often with health impaired, only to drag out the rest of their days in misery, and at last dying, leave their riches for a pack of voracious relations to squander.

When we turn from the world to that chosen flock—those whom Jesus said were "out of the world," as He had taken them "out of the world," what do we see? Are they dead to it? Do they give the go by to the allurements it promises? Do they turn with disdain from its proffered pleasures and wealth? How is this brethren? You know how it is with you dear reader. Are you entirely free from the load of worldly cares that so many around you are carrying? Remember the words of Jesus—"take heed to yourselves, lest your hearts be overcharged," etc. This word "overcharged" in the original signifies "weight, heaviness, a burden, anything grievous and hard to be borne." And the word "cares" in our text signifies "anxious interest, solicitous, that which occupies the thoughts, and we feel an interest in, and concern ourselves about." So that if our hearts are burdened, weighed down, heavy with things of the present life that we have an anxious interest in, then we may be sure of one thing, we have ignored our Lord's warning voice—we have not taken heed.

And why have we not? Is it because we like the world, feel anxious to grasp its wealth? Is it that we are not willing to be content with food and raiment as Paul exhorted us to be? Or is it not because we lack faith in God as a Father? We think the the latter. We are not willing to trust Him for anything in the present life, hence we busy ourselves as does the world, with a thousand schemes for money making. Yet this only adds to our load of anxiety. for when a sweeping disaster overtakes the world, it involves us in the general ruin. And then it is evident, if not before, that we have pursued a wrong course. It is then manifest that if we had taken heed as our Lord so plainly warned us, we should have passed through life much more comfortably, and at last have been eye witnesses of the disaster of others, instead of joint-participants.

Brethren depend upon it, we shall always be on safe ground if we do just what our Lord commands, and give heed to his warning voice. He knows better than we. Let us be careful then how we indulge in worldly cares. Do not take on too big a load. It will only break you down at last, and cause you to regret forevermore that you had not heeded the words of Jesus. Take heed, brethren, take heed!

Brother J. T. Ongley has been at Cowdersport, Pa., preaching the Word of the Gospel and has met with good success.

☞ Faithfulness and constancy mean something else besides doing what is easiest and pleasantest to ourselves. They mean renouncing whatever is opposed to the reliance others have in us—whatever could cause misery to those whom the course of our lives has made dependent on us.

Scientists not in Agreement.

We publish in our columns this week an article headed "Physical Science and the Supernatural" which we have clipped from the N. Y. "Independent," to which we call our readers' especial attention. It shews that however much these searchers after truth in the scientific world may theorize and speculate, or how much of demonstratable truth they may get, they all run against the wall that towers above them at the end of their investigations, recorded in the Word, "In the beginning God created." Tyndall himself says, in his last celebrated address, "the whole process of evolution is the manifestation of a Power absolutely inscrutable to the intellect of man. As little in our day as in the days of Job, can man, by searching find this Power out."

Let these investigations go on, for whatever of truth they discover, will be found in harmony with a true exposition of the Scriptures, however much it may differ from theology.

COMMUNICATIONS.

A Sea Voyage and its Incidents.

For aught I know to the contrary the steerage accommodation on the steamship "England" may be as good as on any of the steamers plying between America and Europe. Much should not be expected at the passage price of thirty dollars. Every morning we were inspected by the captain, doctor, etc. The floors were swept; chloride of lime was scattered; and on the score of cleanliness, I think the officers are worthy of commendation. Our steward also was a remarkably civil and patient man. A paper was drawn up and signed by nearly all the men in the part of the vessel appropriated to the adult male passengers, expressing satisfaction with him. His post was a hard one to fill; he bore, and preserved temper, where many would not have kept their tongues from hot words, and perhaps not their hands from dealing blows. There were among the passengers, steady, sensible men, and as I am speaking of the nicer part, I will say more about them.

A young Englishman, a Roman Catholic, displayed some of the amiable traits of humanity. An invalid Irish youth was cared for by him in such a manner, that I myself, if I had been a well man, should have felt admonished. He did not seem to be at all influenced by the supposed fact of the Hiberian being a Catholic. He was attentive to me; and seemed pleased to afford me any aid or comfort in his power. (Brethren and sisters, are we mindful of the sick and weak? Let us think of our profession and responsibility; and let us take heed that men and women of Rome rise not up in judgment against us and condemn us.) I lent the youth a copy of the "Millenarian." He thanked me for it, and returned it with thanks. A wild young Irishman whose berth was next to mine, acted in a gentlemanly manner to me. He said he had been brought up a Catholic; but he had thought for himself. He had been presented with a publication on the state of the dead, by some Advent lady. He was athirst for reading. I lent him one or more copies of the RESTITUTION, and having a few Hartford dailies with me he was much gratified. He frankly owned that he gave way to his disposition to spree. He was educated and intelligent. Who knows but he may be checked in his career by reflecting upon what he read, and upon a few words I told him before he got off for Queenstown?

There were a few others with whom I conversed, and to some I gave papers. An English woman told me how her grandfather, an Independent minister, would read the RESTITUTION. There was of course but little passing between us and the cabin passengers. But hearing that a Spanish gentleman supposed to be connected with the embassy at Washington, was one of those passengers, my curiosity was stirred, and I moved to him as he walked on the deck among us. He responded gracefully, and we talked about Spain. He was a Carlist; hoped for success, but did not feel sure of it. Don Carlos is the grandson of the Don Carlos who warred with the Queen's troops nearly forty years since. The young Carlos is twenty-six years old. When I spoke to the gentleman about the drain on the country by the war, he remarked that the country was rich. This had not been my opinion, and I doubt the correctness of his impression. The Southern provinces of Spain are tranquil. He gave a reason for this, but as his English was not perfect I did not catch the reason clearly; and lest I should appear unduly inquisitive I judged best to say no more. His bow at our parting was a bow the like of which we see not among English and Americans. Spain has not been admired by you or me, but let us give credit for what of good we find in its people. I was pleased with this gentleman for bringing fruits to the children in the steerage, greatly to their joy. So something good came out of Spain.

One point in our conversation just occurs to my mind. The Franco-Prussian war was mentioned. He said that France got what she deserved; agreed with me about the foolishness of the reason Napoleon gave for starting the war. The Spaniard's mother was a French woman, but this fact did not blind her son to the folly of the French government.

But no converse was of interest equal to what passed between a student and myself. This young man being corrected for the Catholic priesthood, had attainments and learning which he knew how to employ in argument. He had studied deeply. So versed was he in history, that he seemed at home about anything pertaining to the church of Rome in past centuries; and his knowledge of general history was scarcely (apparently) less. A scholar in languages he was already. Thus qualified, he not only did not fear opposition, but rather seemed to desire it. At one interview he said that seeing I was a person who had to attend to business, he would not be hard with me in view of his advantage in Latin, Greek, etc. True, indeed, but I feel too much to see to for many a year to pay much attention to the dead languages; yet I retain something of them that I learned in boyhood; and I hinted to him that I was not affrighted. I freely admitted to him that if it could be certainly proved that the Catholic clergy were a body of Apostolic succession, my wisdom and the wisdom of every one outside of his church would be to become Catholics without delay. As we conversed, he expressed sympathy for me. He discovered that I had thought much; had investigated, and had suffered. He thought the way for me to find rest to my soul was to enter the church, of course the Catholic. Having a publication with me in which was an article of my own, and hearing quotations from Scripture that I presented in argument, he expressed surprise that, having to work for my living, I could have attained so much. Well, one afternoon we came to close quarters in argument. My physical debility was my disadvantage. The Irish cheered the student; but this weighed little with some who thought for themselves. I made some remarks after the cheering, and fearing I might suffer from a strained effort to speak much more, I left the company. Some words however of mine were heard; there may be result another day. More might I write about the interviews with the student. Long letters you do not like, and seldom do I send you one. When I saw his ground, and how his mind was made up—Catholic—and if that were unreliable, infidelity at once; I thought again as I thought before when I lived in Ireland nearly forty years since and heard intelligent Catholics argue, what a wonder the Reformation was! Although our conversation was earnest in the afternoon I speak of, I will say the student was a gentleman.

On board there were a few Italians about a dozen Swedes, and two Norwegians who occupied the berth under mine. To the credit of the men of these nations, they acted in a respectful manner to others, and were quiet and orderly throughout. The two Norwegians were men who won my respect. So far from fear of my pilfering by them, I left my bag with them in Liverpool, while I went to make some inquiry at another depot. When I returned one of them with smiling face pointed my bag to me; he really seemed glad to do me a little favor. I was curious to know the mind of the Italians (from Naples) towards Garibaldi, Victor Emmanuel, and Pio Nono. With the aid of the student we drew from the men that they abhorred Garibaldi, and did not like Victor Emanuel; the Pope was their man. As straws show what way the wind blows, we may infer that among the lower classes in Italy the Pope has many adherents, and if there be a rising thousands will take his part.

Now, having said so much about the orderly conduct of persons on board, I have to tell you something different. Profane, and otherwise bad and noisy talk, at first waking, at meals, and at night, was what I endured, and others who did not like it, endured. Well, one may say, You had Irish on board. Yes, we had, and English too; and you may form some idea of a part of them by what an English gentleman said to me; these were his words: "The English are worse than the Irish." It seems rather unpleasant to remark so about our countrymen, but giving you the exact words of my English friend, do not find fault with me for telling you what I do. My English friend said that it several of us had at first gone to the captain, and reported the behavior of some fellows, it would have been better. And here I will say, if these lines are read by any persons thinking to take steerage passage, and if on board men behave in a disgusting manner, I advise that the order loving passengers go at once to the captain. This course might prevent much abominable talk, and some creatures would learn that their "rights" were not rights to din the ears of others with their profanity and filthy utterances. A young English fellow occupying a berth in our department, seemed to try to put in all the oaths and uncouth talk he could in his words. A pious Dutch captain whose berth was opposite mine, said that the Englishman's words went through him. Still nobody liked to say a word to the fellow. A Welsh gentleman told me it was of no use speaking to the man; that if I did say anything to him, I should get blackguardism in return. The second Sunday at dinner time I did let out on him; it seemed too much to bear; and though he was a rough one, I did not get back as hard words as the Welshman thought I should, and we had some abatement of the nuisance. I was told there was another man who outdid our Englishman in vulgarity, one who occupied a berth in another part of the vessel, but I had no desire to hear oral proof. I heard plenty without hunting for it. One night when the rabble were noisy and profane over their card-playing, a young Englishman said they had a right to do so; that the few must submit to the many! He had some democratic ideas which reminded me of a piece I once read in the "N. Y. Express," descriptive of Louis Legio. The togtean reasoned that as the people ruled in America, and he belonged to the people, he had a right to appropriate goods in the possession of others if he wanted certain articles of provision or convenience. I gave my young countryman to understand that the "majority" had not a right to violate individual rights, at least in my view of right.

With regard to the food furnished I could not "go it" as Yankees would say. And as to feeing the steward, I felt I could not afford to take such advice after paying four dollars for bedding and utensils which I could have furnished myself with for less than half. My ticket for this "outfit" was given us at the office in New York for four dollars, but some who had known by experience about the business, took no office ticket; and one fellow passenger furnished himself for one dollar. Others, however, paid too much like myself; but a second steerage passage will be by them and me an improvement perhaps, if we recross. I once ventured to eat some pea soup—that once deterred me from another attempt. I eat some hard tack, and some crust on our rolls, and I drank some of what they called tea and coffee, and I had no burdened stomach, at least not from quantity.

I may be tedious if I say much more about the voyage. The motion of the vessel prevented my offering a discourse on the things of the kingdom on the second Sunday of our passage. Something however will be remembered of conversation. Seed was sown, the result is with God.

On the night of the thirteenth day after taking ship, I arrived here. I was prepared to find affliction, and I did find it. My elder sister has had two paralytic strokes. The second deprived her partly of articulation. This visitation falls heavily on my younger sister, who has to attend to the sick one, and living on a farm has heavy work besides. Kindness indeed has been shown by neighbors, but my sisters have been plundered during the affliction, and had I not learned to value the true riches, I should be sorely vexed at the thieving, the waste, and losses my sisters have had to bear.

Bless the living God for treasure where thieves break not through nor steal.

The Challenge.

As Brother Hicklin asked to be challenged to produce proof from ecclesiastical history that the early church took the Lord's supper on the first day of the week, I hereby challenge him. It is not denied that the early sects varied as to time of taking it, but we do deny that any history written by a disciple of the apostles says any such thing. And if they did, did not some after disciple clearly show that it was taken at the passover eve, the same as the Jews took it? Now how are we to settle the difficulty when left in such uncertainty? It is true men have wrote what is called ecclesiastical history, and said many things too absurd to notice. And as soon as we appeal to such testimony from history is it not proof that scripture is not sufficient? But still we are anxious that Brother H. at once produce his proof for the satisfaction of others besides himself.

But why are we to care what is proved by sects who have departed from the faith. And what cannot be proved by some dreamy author? Authors are to be credited for what they know, or if they are learned, their opinion of matter long since having transpired, especially if they state what makes against them, or against those whom it would offend.

If Polycarp, a disciple of John the apostle, took an active part in contending for the supper to be taken at the same time the Jews took the passover, and that as an agent for the church in Asia Minor in opposition to those in Europe, it shows that at least in that early day two sides were taken. And which deserves credit, the disciples of the apostles, or men far away of whom it is doubtful whether they were a sect or not?

The fact that sects began to exist in the days of the apostles is evident from their own writing, and is confirmed by the very earliest writers. There is abundant evidence that sects existed in the days of Clement, bishop of Rome, as will be clear by reading his first letter to the Corinthians But what they split off for is not said; and as Mosheim says, "nothing is reliable that has come down to us." Therefore it matters not what may be proved, it is the credibility of the author we are to look at, and his object. We not only admit that it can be proved as Brother H. claims, but the contrary can be proved too. That the disciples adopted the custom of meeting the first day of the week and having a feast and other matters, is also allowed, but that was without a commandment to do so. We find in the epistle of Barnabas, xiii. 19. "For this cause we gladly keep the eighth day," which was according to Hebrew time, but the first day according to Roman time. But it mattered not whether that or any other day be kept, as we find Paul addressing the Romans about "days and meats" without giving any order about it, only that each could regard them as they liked. "Let every one be fully persuaded in his own mind."

And perhaps it was because the Corinthians were in the habit of meeting on the resurrection day, and getting drunk, that Paul wrote to them about it, when he said, "When you come together into one place this is not to eat the Lord's supper," for he notifies them as to the time, that it was instituted the "same night in which he was betrayed." And why allude to that time but to have it attended to on the betrayal night? However bring it toward the proof as you claim Brother H., and make the most of it you can, and I hope the brethren will give due attention to the claims you make, as they merit. And further we insist that now is the time (as the question is in full headway) to properly adjust the question of when to take the supper. And we are well pleased that a kind feeling exists with most of those who have taken part in discussing it.

For the sake of truth.

The Doctrine of Universal Salvation.

BROTHER WILSON:—

I have heard and read a good deal from time to time, concerning the salvation of the whole of the human race, if not under this present dispensation, yet under some other, which the advocates of this theory do not define, and for this purpose great numbers without any true knowledge of God, or his Christ, will be raised to life again.

I have a few points to set forth on this subject, which I have never heard spoken, or seen written. One is, that it never was the intention of Jehovah to save every mortal man and woman, or why classify them from the first, as the "seed of the woman, and the seed of the serpent," and put enmity between them, which has never been removed? It becomes a question whether it would not have been much easier for Him, to send the Gospel under the present dispensation to the ends of the earth, than to take the trouble of again giving existence to the myriads of heathens and others who have died without its knowledge, by forming them from the dust as Adam was formed. For I maintain that they never can be brought into existence otherwise, there being no promise in either Old or New Testaments to that effect; nor any principle in them by which they can be raised as they have no union with Jesus Christ, nor no knowledge of Him, who alone is "the resurrection and the life." John xi. Or is it a lack of power that prevents Him from now sending the knowledge of his saving name through the earth? Few indeed, if any, would have the hardihood to make any such bold assertion.

Another reason is concerning the sentence passed upon the woman, Gen. iii. 16. "I will greatly multiply thy sorrow, and thy conception," etc. It may be noticed, that the sentence is not sorrow in conception, but an increase of conception itself; or in other language that the woman and her sex would have to undergo the sorrow and labor of bringing forth into the world, more children than would be necessary for God's purpose under the circumstances which would be introduced into the order of things, in consequence of the woman's disobedience to an easy law, given whilst yet in Eden and in innocence. This idea I am positive may be fairly deduced from the sentence without any unnatural straining, or twisting; and whatever objections may be raised against it, must apply to the language used in passing the sentence. Then if Jehovah saw fit to inflict this as a punishment, so that an excess of population might be brought into existence, where lay the obligation upon Him to save them all? I say there is no obligation whatever in the case. Indeed if there existed any such thing, I cannot see, upon that ground, how it could be considered as a punishment at all, but rather a strong expression of his approbation, or a premium for the woman's disobedience! Such an idea, however, cannot be entertained for a moment, and the recorded historical facts of God's dealing with the human race up to the present time, fully testifies the correctness of what I have now stated. And his threatened destruction of evil doers, frequently executed upon them, and very much of it to be further executed in the future, fully confirms the facts I now mention.

But it may be asked, What are the facts? Just these; that Jehovah has never revealed Himself to the whole of the human race to this day! I ask again, Is it for lack of power or means? It is well known that for a period covering some two thousand years, He passed by the greater portion of mankind; about the end of which time He called one man, Abraham, by whom He brought into existence a small nation. For He tells them by Moses. (Deut. vii. 6–8,) "For this cause we gladly keep the eighth day," which was according to Hebrew time, but the first day according to Roman time. But it mattered not whether that or any other day be kept, as we find Paul addressing the Romans about "days and meats" without giving any order about it, only that each could regard them as they liked. "Let every one be fully persuaded in his own mind."

"For thou art a holy people unto the Lord thy God: the Lord thy God hath chosen thee to be a special people," etc.—"the Lord did not set his love upon you nor choose you, because ye were more in number than any people, for ye were the least of all people." Why this? "Because the Lord loved you," etc., etc. Why not pay attention to the rest of the world if He had purposed to save them? Much easier than raise them again, in order to save them all.

Again when He sent his beloved Son into the world, the knowledge of his advent was limited to comparatively a few, and remains so to this day! Notwithstanding the fact, that there have always existed numbers of men who have been clamoring for money to convert as they say, the world, and millions of dollars have been subscribed and paid over for this purpose, with the best intentions by the subscribers, and probably, by those who advocate this theory; yet all this put together shows very little result, and in fact it has been questioned, and set forth to the public in print, that not more than the one-third of the amount collected, ever reached its legitimate destination! I have read this myself, in English periodicals, and as far as I recollect, it stood there without any attempt at a refutation, by the accused parties. The fact is simply this; Jehovah values the mere flesh of men, as He does the flesh of other animals, and no more: except so far as they are found in obedience to whatever laws or appointments may have been heretofore set forth by Himself, or what are now the standing appointments of his beloved Son, into whose hands He has given all power, and all authority, to work out his purposes, and will. For proof of these see Deut. xxviii. 26; Jer. vii. 33; xvi. 4, and several other places, where He tells them "their carcasses shall be as dung upon the face of the earth;" and that "they shall be meat for the fowls of the air, and for the beasts of the earth." After all these threatenings and examples which have been made, there have been men, and there are now in existence men, who tell us all men will, and must be saved, or forsooth God is unjust!

And now Brother Wilson, do not start when I tell you that the Gentile, or heathen nations, have never yielded, are not now yielding, (neither professors nor profane of them) and never will yield a cheerful, loving, willing obedience to Jesus, even under the millennial reign. Of course this idea will be hooted down by many flaming professors, but what of that? Just nothing. For proof of the first point, it is only necessary to read the first chapter of the letter to the Romans, and see the frightful picture drawn by the Apostle Paul, showing that the heathen as such paid no attention to Jehovah, nor He to them Much easier to have sent them the Gospel at that time than to raise them for this purpose. It can be read, that Paul was prevented from preaching in certain places. See Acts xvi. 6, 7.

For proof on the second point see the present condition of the Gentiles, under a profession of the Gospel, divided as they are into more than six hundred sects and divisions, and not a single sect of them yielding the full obedience required by the commission of Jesus, or by the example of the Samaritans, (believing the things of the kingdom and the name). Where is there one sect, that thus believes and obeys? Not one of them which does not lack something or hold more than the book sets forth. And what has divided them thus? Not the Bible, but the opinions of men of corrupt minds, who think and make things out of the Bible which were never in it, nor never intended to be in it, mere human opinions.

For proof on the third point, you are referred to several passages of the Word, all of which are conclusive. For instance what means this, "ruling with a rod of iron?" Is such the rule of an obedient, willing, loving people?—Verily not, see Psalm ii., also Psalm cx. 2. "Rule thou (Christ) in the midst of thine enemies," What! enemies in a converted, obedient world? Nay verily. Enemies amongst the heathen nations who are kept in subjection by sheer force, or iron rule. Again, "Let us break their bands asunder, and cast away their cords from us." Jesus, and his people must be in a position of rule before this can be said of them, and who says it? The heathen nations as a vast majority. The exception is those (people) now taken out of the Gentiles for his name. Further look at Psalm xviii. 44. "They will submit themselves unto Him,"—Margin or "yielded a feigned" (pretended) "obedience." Here then we have a clue to this "iron rule," "ruling in the midst of his enemies," and "ruling until all enemies are put under his feet." And last though not least, we have a clue to, and the positive reason of the last rebellion, when the whole of the Serpent tribe will be driven off the earth, "as a man wipeth a dish," (see 2 Kings xxi. 13,) when they (the Serpent's seed) shall have "encompassed the camp of the saints about, and the beloved city," and fire came down from God out of heaven and devoured them"—made a total end of a surplus population.

Here then we have an explanation of several passages of God's word. Who believes that a willing, loving, cheerful, obedient people would exercise in rebellion against a good government, such as will be ably administered by Jesus Christ and his associates in the affairs of the kingdom? For it is an undeniable fact that according to the word of eternal truth his people taken out of both Jews and Gentiles for his name, under the present dispensation, will have the honor in conjunction with their great head Jesus, of bringing the affairs of the world to rights, and keeping them so during the reign of their beloved Master.

May God keep us in an obedient, waiting, watching, praying position, so that at the appearing of our beloved Lord we may have the honor of being recognized by Him, as witnesses for his truth. Yours for the truth.

THOMAS CHURCHILL.

SELECTIONS.

Dives and Lazarus.

G. W. Stetson takes one "Rev." R Newton to task in the "Advent Christian Times" on his preaching, and among his (Stetson's) many objections gives him the following basting:—

On another occasion he preached on the rich man and Lazarus, made it a literal history, put the "spirits" of all good and bad in "hades," as "intermediate," with a dividing gulf between "paradise," and "the place of torment," not otherwise named by him, but by the Romanists, called "purgatory," and in Grecian fable, the "regions of Pluto." I was present to take notes, and when he finished reading his prepared subject, so carefully was it worded in Bible language, I had not a pencil mark made. But he had to talk a little, and added "I have said there was talk in hades but you must not suppose there was any sound there, for there can no more be sound without an ear, than there can be color without an eye." That was sufficient for my purpose; and I made a note of it, and now I'll "print it."

On meeting him again, our conversation turned on the sermon, and after commending his effort, I presented objections. I understand you to say, "There was no sound there for want of an ear." "Yes," he answered, "I did say so, and meant it."

Very well! that alone overthrows all your effort to prove it a literal history, and also your assumed application of it to the spirits of Dives and Lazarus; for if literal, there were tongues, and fingers, and persons, and flames there, and water was called for by these dead persons. If it was their spirits that were in hades, then they had no eye, and could not see; no ear, and could not hear; no tongue, and could not taste; no nose, and could not smell; no nervous organization, and they could not feel; and this, according to your own statement. Now when a person can neither see, hear, taste, smell, or feel, please tell me what can they do?

"Why not anything."

Very true! now how much do they know?

"Why nothing."

Thank you brother Newton, I am glad that you have come out on our side, for that is just what the Bible affirms of the dead in hades, and we believe it.

"But you carry that too far, brother Stetson."

Yes! too far to suit your theory, but no farther than your declaration, and the Bible, warrant me in carrying it.

A Child's Faith.

How straight and simple is the way a child comes to Jesus! No doubt, no hesitation, only simple faith and simple love. A little girl of my acquaintance was once looking at a picture, with which most of you may be familiar, which represents a rock in the midst of a stormy sea, bearing upon its summit a cross, to which a female figure, just recovered from the angry waves, clings, faint and exhausted, while at her feet a hand grasping a part of a wreck is just disappearing in the black water.

"What does that mean?" asked the child.

"It is called 'The Rock of Ages,'" was the answer.

"That means Jesus to whom we cling for salvation."

"You know the hymn says, 'Other refuge have I none'"

"Oh yes!" said the child, after a moment's hesitation, "but that rock isn't my Jesus; when I cling to Him He reaches down and clings to me too."

Teach the little ones of this Jesus "who reaches down and clings too," to whom we hold not so much from fear of falling, since underneath us are his everlasting arms; but because, like the trusting child whom its father safely carries, we love to cling that we may draw Him closer.—National Sunday School Teacher.

Talking With Jesus.

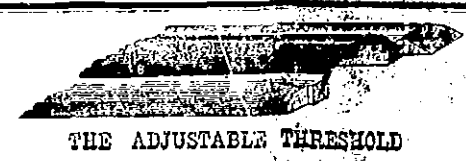
A good minister of the gospel was visiting among the poor one winter's day in a large city in Scotland. He climbed up into a garret at the top of a very high house. He had been told that there was a poor old woman there, that nobody seemed to know about. He went on climbing up till he found his way into that garret room. As he entered the room he looked round; there was the bed, and a chair, and a table with a candle burning dimly on it; a very little fire on the hearth, and an old woman sitting by it, with a large Testament on her lap. The minister asked her what she was doing there. She said she was reading. "Don't you feel lonely here," he asked, "No, sir," was her reply. "What do you do here all these long winter nights?" "O," she said, "I just sit here, wi' me light and wi' me New Testament on my knees, talking wi' Jesus!"

☞ The following which we extract from Il Univers Israelite, are choice specimens of the manner in which the minds of the rising generation in Roumania are poisoned against the Jews in that country. In a collection of arithmetical problems given by Roumanian teachers to their pupils as exercises in the four rules, are the following questions: If a small town contains 4,000 Jewish inhabitants, of whom 800 are thrown into the Danube and drowned, 900 killed, and 1,000 stabbed during the melee, how many after a thorough pillage will there remain to be hunted down? Another worthy (?) priest asks: If among 5,000 Roumanians there dwell 1,200 Jews, how many amongst the population may be put to death with impunity? Or worse still: If fifteen Jews were daily expelled from Roumania, in how many years and days would we be rid of them all, supposing that they number in the entire country 40,000 souls? These questions are of so base a nature, and savor so much of the barbarity and cruelty of the middle ages and the Inquisition, that it is scarcely possible to give credence to their authenticity, or to believe that such things can be perpetrated in any European country in the nineteenth century.

☞ One thing that suggests itself to the reader of Eastern travels as he turns page after page, is the marvelous accuracy of Scripture in small things. The narrative spreads itself over more than two thousand years, or at least the narrators, from Moses to John, extend along this line, no one having any communication with the other. Yet in their minutest details there is harmony. As to men, places, names, distances, how singular the concurrence! Impostors avoid details. He who compiled the apocryphal book of Enoch has shown some sagacity in keeping to general statement. He names places, but he never commits himself to relative position or distance. The Bible, in almost every chapter, commits itself to both of these; nor in any one known instance has geographical incorrectness, or even indistinctness, been detected. Each new traveler is discovering fresh examples of precision and accuracy, not merely greater than that of Jerome and Eusebius, but even of Josephus himself.

THE LIGHT LIES AHEAD.—We walked to-day under the shadow of the mountains, where the sun no longer shone upon our path, but far up the valley, beyond the range of hills, the sunlight still flooded the landscape. We were reminded how often in this life we walk through vales where some sorrow, for the time, casts its shadow over us, but beyond, the eye of faith sees the light of hope shine across the way, and we have but to go forward that we may escape the shadow and chill which would fall upon us with increasing power if we were to linger in the old places where trouble found us. They who go forward find the openings where the sunshine lies.

☞ Victor Hugo has written a letter declining an invitation to the Peace Conference at Geneva. He says peace can not be established until another war has been fought between France and Germany. He points to a deep and underlying hatred between the two countries, and declares the war will be a duel between the principles of monarchy and republic.



THE ADJUSTABLE THRESHOLD

Is the only invention that will positively keep out cold, rain, dust and snow from coming under the door bottom, and is meeting with unprecedented success in all parts of the United States. We receive words of praise concerning it almost daily. Parties who have used it say they would not be without it under any consideration. Carpenters, and those who are not carpenters are making money by introducing it. One Agent in Alton, Ill., sold twelve in an hour, and has sold over four dozen in a short time. Others are sending in larger orders. Now is the time to begin active work. If you are doing nothing, buy a threshold, and go to work canvassing at once.

We also furnish door cushion for use on the top and side of the door, making it air-tight, and keeping out a great deal of cold during the winter months.

We also have the best invention for windows that has yet been introduced. Parties interested had better write to us at once.

Drones.

We cannot go back far enough with the records of the bee-history to get the biography of the first "drone" that inflicted its laziness on the sweet industry of a stinging community. What amazement, and indignant protest, what buzzing indignation meetings marked the first attempt to set the character of the drone in a bee-hive, who can tell? This much we know, that from the first droning act until now, some degenerate bee has been able to keep up the line of succession, and in it will probably continue to the end.

If drones were confined to hives we would be content to let the matter rest with them, leaving them to sting their way through the difficulty as best they can; but they have gotten into the church which is a more serious matter. If the church is a community organized for Christian work and culture, there is no seat prepared in the original plan for the drone. Then the church has no place within that can be lawfully given to the drone. Do you know what plan has been adopted by the bees? Throwing out! If the church is a ship, the christian is not a lazy passenger riding to glory on a paid ticket, but a sailor with work to do. The church is not a parlor to lounge in, but a vineyard to work out the Master's great plan for the coming harvest day. Paul says: "If a man will not work neither shall he eat." As far as this applies to labor in the Lord's vineyard we render it: "neither can he eat." If any will not work he will have but poor appetite for spiritual food, and will go groaning with dyspeptic pangs, from table to table, finding nothing to suit his taste. The rewards of heaven are for those who labored to enter into the blessed rest, and whose "works follow them." The cry of Him whose pitying eye sweeps the wide harvest field of the world, is evermore; "Go, work!" To the weary, the faint, the despondent, He says: "occupy till I come."

Rest ye toilers on the sea of life, bend to your oars, for the Master is coming through the shadows to cheer your tired hearts. And see! there lies the beautiful shore that sweeps up the green hills of the Eternal Beulah.

"Work for the night is coming
Under the sunset skies;
While their bright tints are flowing,
Work, for daylight flies;
Work, till the last beam fadeth,
Fadeth to shine no more;
Work, while the night is darkening,
When man's work is o'er."

—Evangelical Messenger.

☞ "Laborare est orare"—to labor is to pray—was a favorite maxim of a wise monk of the twelfth century; and there is a profound meaning in it. Labor is worship, because God exacts it from man by a positive law, and obedience to divine law is worship. Labor should be respected for God was the first laborer, Christ worked while on earth, and angels work for God and for man. The fact that a person has pecuniary resources so large that he is not forced to work for a livelihood, does not justify him in being idle. He should work for the benefit of others. St. Paul says he must "labor, working with his hands the thing that is good, that he may have to give to him that needeth."

DIED

At Lemont, Cook Co., Ill., Oct 12, 1874, RICHARD CLEAVELAND, aged seventy-seven years, and seven months.

Brother Cleveland was a member of the Chicago Congregation, having united with them some years ago. He was an intelligent and consistent brother, and beloved by those who had the pleasure of his acquaintance. He was remarkably bright for one so old. We are informed that he had been failing very fast, and some two months ago fell down cellar receiving injuries from which he never fully recovered. On the morning of Oct. 12, he was found dead in his bed, having apparently fallen asleep the night before and never awoke. Not a struggle was apparent. Our informant says he thought a great deal of the RESTITUTION, and intended visiting the church at Chicago this fall, as had been his custom for some time past.

We rejoice to know that he sleeps the sleep of the just, and when "the resurrection of the just" takes place, we expect to meet him again—not as before, but in perfect health, and bodily perfection, being made like unto our Lord and Savior, Jesus Christ. —[EDITOR.

☞ There is faith which tends to idleness, trusts God to do all, and leaves the soul stupid and powerless. There is a faith that worries and works, and hopes that God will help. And there is a better faith, that works mightily because it loves frequently, and never worries because it never fears. Love will, must work, and can not be idle; it comes from God, breaks out in prayer praise and service, like springs that can not be suppressed. It is spontaneous and grows by use. Faith that works by love is a tonic to the soul, girding it by bold endeavor, making it like God in active doings, in every service which can assuage a grief, relieve a pang or impart a joy.

BEYOND.

Beyond life's toils and cares,
Beyond its joys, its weariness and sorrow,
Its deepest blights, its days of nails and tears,
Will be a long sweet life, unbroken by grave,
One bright, unending morrow!

Beyond Death's crystal stream,
Beyond the swelling wave of death's dark river,
Where Death's receding clouds and gilded gleams Reflect in the calm and brighter ocean,
[illegible]

There, where no sin can enter,
No love of sinful joy, no fear of sickness wasted,
No dark cloud in pale through pearly air,
No sighs, no tears, but tears all the more dear,
No shade nor loss untasted.

No sun from which to hide,
No fitful gleam of glory much to glean,
But Christ, the Lamb of God, all bright and fair,
Himself the city with endless rays,
The glory and the light of heaven.

No more, I ope hath seen
The gates of that land beyond the river,
[illegible]
Unbelieving flow to roll the unchanging shore,
Around the throne forever.

But hushed to rest the song
Of rapture, whose melodious pleasure,
No heart of man hath dreamed which joy belongs
To that nation of an happy Heaven called Home

COMMUNICATIONS.

Glenmills.

Brother G. W. Young of Brooklyn, writes of the fraternal meeting in his city in glowing language as follows:—

We have just got through our Conference, and a happy time we had of it. I wish all the Brotherhood could have been with us. You will hear further from our Secretary.

In our Conference we fully appreciated the sentiment of Psa. cxxxiii., and I am sure God overruled all in our delightful interchange of thought to his own glory. Our hopes were (are) brightened by the word of encouragement, from those at a distance, and the united prayers of all who attended seemed to be that the prayer of our blessed Master might find an answer in our future experience, "That they all may be one." Oh my brother what have we that we have not received? and having freely received, shall we not as freely give? Yes, we say, and by God's grace assisting, we not only "say," but are determined to do till the Master appears to crown the labors of this pilgrimage with glory, honor and eternal life. For many years I have felt assured that the differences between brethren who having believed the Gospel, and who entertain the "one hope," and have shown this by obeying the command—I say I believe the "differences" have been imaginary rather than real; and if we will only lay down the old man, i. e., keep him where we laid him, in the bath of regeneration, we should more as we ought ever to have done, show a bold front to opposition to the simple truth, and where only a few are induced to lay down their arms of rebellion, we should see many flocking to the standard of the cross and find salvation in the blood of the Lamb. Let us then exalt Christ as a Savior, exalt Him as a Lord, exalt Him as King. Show men they must "kiss the Son," i. e., be reconciled to Him, so that in the day of his exaltation by Jehovah they may not perish from his way.

Brother Thomas Churchill of Toronto has been out proclaiming the Word of Truth, with success as shown by his words which follow:—

In the month of September, I have made a fruitless trip eastward, about three hundred miles below Toronto. I found the place to be hard and cold, and in possession of the usual amount of opposition, and old questions which have become threadbare, by answers given to them hundreds of times,—Paul's "desire to depart," "the rich man and Lazarus," "the thief going into Paradise" the same day,—just as many thieves and murderers go into heaven in the present day, as they are told. Men who are considered not fit to live in society, are fit to be swung from the gallows platform, into the very presence of God! Is it any wonder that the earth is corrupt, and fitted for destruction by such teaching? How can it be otherwise?

After my return, I was asked to go westward to Chatham. Here I had a much better time, although not quite without opposition. I domiciled with Brother John Davis very comfortably. The intention was to immerse one young man, but during my stay of two weeks, "the things of the kingdom of God, and the name of Jesus Christ," also the nature of man, and the resurrection, and other remarks upon baptism, etc., were presented and two others came forward, who had understood some of these things previously, and I had the privilege of immersing, into the six-covering Name, three persons, i. e., the young Brother referred to, named Coon, and another Brother Savage, and a Sister Snellgrove. May God keep, and preserve them, in the faith.

Report of Conference.

BROOKLYN, N. Y.

Seldom does it fall to the lot of men and women to experience such pleasure as did the brethren and sisters who gathered in conference at the meeting house of the church in Brooklyn. There was evidence among us of that christian unity which is so precious in the eyes of our Father and our Lord Jesus Christ, and which reminds us with redoubled force of the meaning of the words of our Savior, "My peace I leave with you."

On Saturday Oct. 24, at twelve o'clock M. delegates began to arrive, and at two o'clock the gathering was formally organized. It would be unnecessary to give you a detailed account of our deliberations, and it would occupy too much of your valuable space, therefore a brief record will suit all the purposes in informing our dearly beloved brethren wherever located, of the labor and success of the conference.

We had present the greater part of the church in Jersey city, who are known as Christadelphians, and a few of the same body from other sections, which, to say the very least, was decisive evidence on their part of an advance toward the all desired position of a united front of all believers in the glorious works which have been done, and the still more glorious deeds which are soon to be accomplished by the King of kings, "when he standeth in the latter day upon the earth." I said their presence was evidence of a desire for unity; but I have surer proof to show you. Several brethren connected with them gave expression in living words to their desire for renewed relationship with all who hold the "One Faith," and had been baptised into the Lord Jesus Christ, leaving all minor matters and beliefs upon secondary topics, to the care of time. All this was timely and comforting, and I may say on our part, we were not backward in expressing the same sentiments, but exerted our utmost endeavors to prove to our brethren that our desires were the same, by offering them a warm and hearty welcome, for are we not all one in Christ?

On Sunday afternoon 25 inst. we all partook of the bread and wine in commemoration of our Lord's sufferings and death for us. And Oh! Brother Wilson, what a joyful gathering it was to see so many together, inspired by the same hope, united in christian fellowship and unfeigned love, eating of the same bread and drinking from the same cup. Indeed, it was a foretaste of the joy we will experience when we drink wine with our Lord in his kingdom, and there meet Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, and all the holy ones of old, and go no more out. We could more fully realize the beauty and simplicity of the bread representing Christ's body, and the wine his blood, and we all eating and drinking of Him by faith; in other words, actually living on Him and in Him. Words would fail me to picture the love that prevailed. It may be very imperfectly expressed by saying we were one.

The object of the conference was fully realized, and we feel assured that it was the work of the Lord. To Him we ascribe all the praise, all the honor and glory. I feel certain that I express the sentiments of all the brethren present when I say, that they would exhort with all love, for all brethren of our most precious faith wherever situated, to unite and draw near to God and each other, and show to the world that we are all children of one great family, Christ is our elder brother and the Lord God our everlasting Father. Meet more often one with another, brethren, establish conferences, and exchange words of love, encouragement, and hope, and rest assured your Father in heaven will bless the effort. May our Lord when He comes not find any one of us beating the "men-servants and maidens" of his household, but may He see us all as faithful and wise stewards giving each other meat in due season. "Blessed is that servant, whom his Lord when he cometh, shall find so doing."

Brethren Dull, Campbell, and Ennis respectively delivered lectures to which the public were invited, and to use a common and expressive phrase, "we had a crowded house." May God grant fruit for their planting, for without Him there can be no increase. Brother A. Miller presided over the conference. Officers for the next conference, which is to be held in Philadelphia, Pa., next year (the Lord permitting,) were elected as follows: Chairman, Brother Ennis of Jersey City Secretaries, Brother Gellefly of Baltimore, Brother Hoffner of Philadelphia, and Brother J. Donaldson jr. of Brooklyn. Tract committee the same as last year, comprising Brother Dull of Philadelphia, and Brother Forman of Brooklyn. It would have given me great pleasure to have given you all the names of brethren and sisters who were present, but that is impossible, as I feel certain I would not mention one third by name, consequently, I will simply say that the churches at Baltimore, Philadelphia, Elizabeth, Newark, and Jersey City, N. J., Milton, Florida, and Halifax, N. S., were all well represented not forgetting the church at this place.

Hoping that this feeble report of a great and glorious event may stir up others to "consider one another to provoke unto love and good works," and to love as we have been and are loved, I am your brother in Christ.

JOHN DONALDSON, Secty.

SELECTIONS.

Physical Science and the Supernatural.

"The savage saw," says Tyndall, "in the fall of a cataract the leap of a spirit; and the echoed thunder-peal was to him the hammer-clang of an exasperated God. . . . . One by one natural phenomena have been associated with their proximate causes, and the idea of direct personal volition mixing itself in the economy of Nature is retreating more and more." Thus, says Darwin: "He who is not content to look, like a savage, at the phenomena of Nature as disconnected, cannot any longer believe that Man is the work of a separate act of creation." And yet Darwin must elsewhere limit himself in this remark by citing the language of "a celebrated author and divine" who considers "that it is just as noble a conception of the Deity to believe that He created a few original forms, capable of self development into other and needful forms, as to believe that He required a fresh act of creation to supply the void caused by the action of his laws."

In order to avoid agreeing with those who, like Darwin, must concede that "an immediate and personal creative power" doubtless, at least, "created the first organisms and endowed them with the faculty of propagation," Buchner has declared: "We might answer these believers that the germs of all living beings had from eternity existed in universal space, or in the chaotic vapors from which the earth was formed; and that these germs, deposited upon the earth, have there and then become developed according to external necessary conditions."

And, in order to avoid agreeing with those even who, like Buchner, must refer us for the origin of all organic life, if not to a personal creative power, still to the germs of all living things assumed to have been exterrally existent, Prof. Huxley has affirmed: "Looking back through the prodigious vista of the past, I find no record of the commencement of life, and, therefore, I am devoid of any means of forming a definite conclusion as to the condition of its appearance. . . . . But, ... were given me to look beyond the abyss of geologically recorded time, ... I should expect to be a witness of the evolution of living protoplasm from not living matter."

To all of which Prof. Tyndall shall first of all respond:

"It is perfectly vain to attempt to stop inquiry as to the actual and possible actions of matter and force. Depend upon it, if a chemist by bringing the proper materials together, in a retort or crucible, could make a baby, he would do it. There is no law, moral or physical, forbidding him to do it. His inquiries in this direction are limited solely by his own capacity and the laws of matter and force. At the present moment there are, no doubt, persons experimenting on the possibility of producing what we call life out of inorganic materials. Let them pursue their studies in peace; it is only by such trials that they will learn the limits of their powers. But, while I thus make the largest demand for freedom of investigation, ... if you ask me whether science has solved or is likely in our day to solve the problem of this universe, I must shake my head in doubt. You remember the first Napoleon's question, when the savans who accompanied him to Egypt discussed in his presence the origin of the universe, and solved it to their own apparent satisfaction. He looked aloft to the starry heavens and said: 'It is all very well gentlemen; but who made all these?' That question still remains unanswered and science makes no attempt to answer it. As far as I can see, there is no quality in the human intellect which is fit to be applied to the solution of the problem."

And let us now likewise listen for a moment to the late and great Agassiz:

"Darwin's works and those of his followers have added nothing new to our previous knowledge concerning the origin of man, ... or, indeed, of any animal. The facts upon which Darwin, Wallace, Haeckel, and others base their views are in the possession of every well-educated naturalist. It is only a question of interpretation, not of discovery of new and unlooked-for information. . . . Indeed, both with Darwin and his followers, a great part of the argument is purely negative. It rests partly upon the assumption that in the succession of ages, just those transition types have dropped out from the geological record which would have proved the Darwinian conclusions had these types been preserved, and that in the living animal the process of transition is too subtle for detection. How these types were first introduced, how the species which have successively represented them have replaced one another—these are the vital questions to which no answer has been given. We are as far from any satisfactory solution of this problem as if development theories had never been discussed. The world has arisen in some way or other. How it originated is the great question; and Darwin's theory, like all other attempts to explain the origin of life, is thus far merely conjectural."

The foregoing citations, then, the reader first of all perceives, relate to the general subject of physical science and the supernatural, where the whole question at last touches bottom and reaches the final outrage—namely, where the problem is at officially to solve the origin of organic life, and all the various species of that life, with which the Cosmos teems.

Secondly. These citations as and by themselves considered, forthwith place the merest novice in these matters upon a perfect parity with the entire world of modern savans in his personal competency to form an intelligent judgment pro or con, on the relations of physical science to the supernatural in this especial field. Darwin, Buchner, Huxley, Tyndall, and Agassiz, taken all together, assuredly ought to represent that entire world both fairly and fully—first, in the exhaustive knowledge which they between them possess of all the scientific data bearing on the point, and, secondly, in the thoroughly scientific consideration which from every conceivable point of view, they have among them at one time or another given to those data.

Thirdly. If, therefore, any one individual could in his single self represent all the requisite qualifications of a Darwin, Buchner, Huxley, Tyndall, and Agassiz combined, to pronounce a final verdict in this case, what would he still be obliged to say? He would still be obliged to say simply that all hypotheses, without distinction or exception, thus far advanced by the mere physical scientist in explanation of the problem before us, are at bottom equally and only conjectural. Agassiz may say that he will undertake to solve the enigmas of the origin of life, etc., if you will merely permit him to assume, on the part of a personal creative cause, a given number of specific creative acts. Darwin may say that all he finds it requisite to take for granted in the premises is that the Deity at the outset specifically created a few original forms, capable of self-development into other and needful forms Buchner may wax builder and only crave to assume the eternal existence of the merest germs of all living things. And Huxley may only desire the concession that at some epoch or in the vast cycles of the geological past, living protoplasm became in some way evolved from not living matter. Or Tyndall may only wish to "discern in that Matter which we, in our ignorance and notwithstanding our professed reverence for its Creator, have covered with opprobrium, the promise and potency of every form and quality of life." But in either case the hypothesis begins with a mere and sheer assumption. And this assumption, be it what it may, is, as we have already suggested, not only unverified but unverifiable. For example, certain prominent naturalists—Darwinians of course—some three or four years ago announced that they had at last discovered a direct structural connection between primary types in the instance of the Mollusks and Vertebrates. But Agassiz merely looks at the Ascidians, thus confidently proclaimed to be our ancestors, with his trained and microscopic eye, and quietly avers: "To say that the first Vertebrates, or their progenitors, carried their backbones in this fashion is about as reasonable as to say that they walked on their heads. It is reversing their vertebral column where the abdominal cavity should be." Nor is this all; for Buchner would, of course, at this late day find it utterly impossible, first, to discover, and, secondly, to identify his original and eternally existent germs of life, even if they ever did exist at all. And, should Professor Huxley be required to furnish some rigid experimental proof that living protoplasm ever was, in fact, evolved from not living matter, he could and does merely say: "That nobody has done as yet, and I suspect it will be a long while before anybody does do it. But the thing is by no means so impossible as it looks; for the researches of modern chemistry have shown us, I won't say the road toward it, but the finger-post pointing to the road that may lead to it."

Finally. Looked at, therefore, solely from the standpoint of the physical scientist or specialist, and taking into account only the data strictly furnished in his field, the entire question of the supernatural both now is and ever must remain a most profound enigma. At bottom, every argument and every hypothesis here, and whether pro or con, can only rest upon conjecture; can only be based upon the unknown and the unknowable, the unverified and unverifiable. Seeking certain footing here, in either way, for a scientific belief about the supernatural is only like seeking certain footing on the wind or in the sea. —Augustus Blauvelt, D. D.

Russia and Germany.

The mistrust and jealousy with which Russia watches the growth of German power and influence often betray themselves in such utterances as the following, which we find in the "Gazette" of Warsaw, a semi-official organ: "An injury inflicted upon the Latin races," it says, "is an injury to the Sclavonian races. Prussian interference in Spain is a blow aimed at Sclavonian interests. This is the reason why Russia refuses to recognize the Madrid Government, which is merely the helpless tool of German policy."

In spite of the friendly personal relations which exist between William and Alexander, and the intermarriages between the Romanoff and the Hohenzollern families, there is, and always has been, a large and powerful party in the Czardom which is hostile to Germany and friendly to France. To the higher Russian nobility France represents all that is charming, desirable, and attractive. In its way of living, in tastes and sympathies, this class is essentially French. Its scheme of felicity is a residence in Paris. Hence the bombardment of the city by the Germans in 1870-1 was regarded as much an act of vandalism on the banks of the Neva and in the Kremlin as on the banks of the Seine. While such are the sentiments of the aristocracy, those of the democracy are equally, though on different grounds, inimical to Germany. In "Young Russian" circles the word republic is a talisman, and the continuation of the war after the fall of the empire at Sedan was therefore stigmatized as a crime against humanity. Young Russia has yet to learn that a republic is not necessarily synonymous with liberty. In addition to these classes, the abler and more influential portion of the press in Russia, represented by papers like the "Golos" and the Moskau "Gazette," which preached a formal crusade against the Germans during the late war, are on the side of France. On one occasion the "Golos" uttered substantially the same sentiments which we have quoted above from the Warsaw organ. "A war with the Spaniards, the French, the Italians, and even the English, could never find a hearty sympathy in the hearts of the Sclavonians. . . . . It is otherwise in the case of the Germans and Turks, and especially in that of the former. . . . . With the French, Spaniards, etc., the Sclavonians fight only as long as the war lasts; but with the Germans and the Turks they maintain a perpetual strife along the whole line on which these races come in contact with them, entirely irrespective of the relations between their respective governments. . . . . The French are the natural friends of the Sclavonians because they are the foes of their foes."

Another cause for this antipathy against Germany is that the natives of that nationality monopolize many of the highest and most lucrative posts in the army, navy, and civil service of the Russian Empire. In private life, also, the Germans are noted for their superior success in trade and commerce, higher intelligence, and greater opulence—all of which contribute to make them hated by the Russians. The press, if it reflected only the opinion of the masses, would be powerless, and a hint from the Czar might suffice to silence it, for the great body of the people are still without political influence in the government. But behind the press stands a compact, well-organized, powerful political party, which includes the whole bureaucracy, the larger portion of the army whose chiefs are near the throne. The majority of the St. Petersburg Cabinet belong more or less openly to the anti-German party, and even the Imperial Princes are on that side. The Grand Duke Constantine, of whose ambitious schemes strange reports are current, seeks to obtain the control of the opposition, but he has a rival in his nephew, the successor to the throne, not to mention the formidable competition of Prince Tcherkaski, the municipal head of the city of Moskau. The heir of the crown, who has married a Danish princess, despises Western civilization, and the Germans, who are its pioneers in Russia.

In view of these facts, the current which sets so steadily in the direction of anti-German policy may become too powerful to resist. The Czar can suppress newspapers, dismiss ministers, governors, generals, and councillors of state, but the tendency remains the same. If one paper is suppressed, the party starts another. If he fills a vacancy, he must elect between a German and a Panslavist, for all Russians are in this sense Panslavists. In this way Russia drifts further away from Germany, and the gulf widens in proportion to the ascendancy which the new empire acquires in European affairs.—Inter-Ocean.

"THE GLORY TO BE REVEALED IN US."

For we know that if our earthly house of this tabernacle were dissolved, we have a building of God, a house not made with hands, eternal in the heavens.
Eye hath not seen, nor ear heard, neither hath it entered into the heart of man, the things that God hath prepared for them that love Him.
That He might make known the riches of his glory on the vessels of mercy which He hath before prepared unto glory.
Henceforth, there is laid up for me a crown of righteousness, which the Lord, the righteous Judge, shall give me at that day; and not to me only, but unto all them that love his appearing.
When Christ who is our life shall appear, then shall ye also appear with Him in glory.
And so shall we be ever with the Lord.

Total. . . . "An eternal weight of glory."

The Apostle Paul having carefully examined the foregoing account, deliberately makes the following declaration: "I am persuaded that neither death, nor life, nor angels, nor principalities, nor powers, nor things present, nor things to come, nor heights, nor depth, nor any other creature, shall be able to separate us from the love of God which is in Christ Jesus our Lord."

The Riches of God.

"Oh the depth of the riches both of the wisdom and knowledge of God!"—Rom. xi. 33.

When the Psalmist had contemplated God's work in the earth, air, and sea, he exclaimed: "The earth is full of thy riches." He did not say, the earth is full of plants, animals, and insects, but of "thy riches." Thus will it be in the world to come. Angels as they gaze on God's complete work, will sing, "The universe is full of thy riches." Just as creation displays riches of power, wisdom, and goodness, so redemption will display, in addition to these, riches of mercy, grace, and faithfulness. This was God's original intention. The creation of matter in all its various forms, the creation of pure spirit endowed with wondrous capabilities, brought out but a small part of the riches of God. He whom God had placed at the head of creation, and raised far above the other part of his works, fails to fulfill the part assigned him in the wondrous work of creation, and then is discovered how manifold are the riches of God's mercy. Oh, the riches of the manifold wisdom, and manifold grace of God!

In heaven and earth, and air, and sea,
His greatness his fame declares,
And by his saints it stands confessed,
That what he does is ever best.

The Cross of Christ.

To bear the cross always is to do right always. It is no less than to fulfill the high commands of the Savior under all circumstances. It is to deny, control, and conquer self. It is to watch, pray, and have constant hold upon Christ. It is to glorify God before men by a holy walk and godly conversation—forgiving enemies, loving all men, aiming to do them good temporally and spiritually—in a word it is to follow Christ as far as the disciple can follow his Lord, in piety toward God, in benevolence toward man.—Sel.

THE BIBLE.—It is the star of eternity, whose mild rays come twinkling to the nether sphere; erring man's guide to wisdom, virtue and heaven. In comparison, Byron loses his fires, Milton his soaring, Gray, his beauties, and Homer, his majesty.

HOW TO ADDRESS LETTERS.

All business letters, or communications for the RESTITUTION, must be addressed as follows:—

THE RESTITUTION,
PLYMOUTH, INDIANA.

P. S. All letters for the Editor may be sent to the same place.

THE RESTITUTION advocates the final "restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all His holy Prophets since the world began." It also advocates as a means to this end, the establishment of the Kingdom of God on the earth, with the Christ as King of kings, and the immortal saints as joint-heirs with Him in the government of the nations; the restoration of Israel; the literal resurrection of the dead; the immortalization of the righteous, and the final destruction of the wicked; eternal life only through Christ; and many other kindred truths. It also advocates a hearty belief of the Gospel, repentance, and Immersion as prerequisites to the forgiveness of sins; and a holy life as essential for final salvation.

COMMUNICATIONS.

THE EDITOR must not be understood as endorsing all the sentiments expressed by correspondents whose articles are inserted under this head. Each writer is alone responsible for the article bearing his own signature. No personal articles will be inserted. No writer will be allowed to refer directly or indirectly to the article of another by way of criticism. If the teachings of any writer is not understood, no article setting forth the views of the party differing may be forwarded. Free discussion of all the Scriptures on all subjects will be allowed, but the Editor reserves the privilege of eliminating those communications which antagonize a belief and obedience of the Gospel as a means of salvation, or which undermine its principles.

Coming of the Bridegroom.

"And at midnight there was a cry made, Behold the bridegroom cometh; go ye out to meet him.—Matt. xxv. 6.

Most of us who are professedly expecting the coming of the Lord or any event very soon to occur, are more engrossed in the theoretical teachings of revealed truth in regard to the second advent, and the doctrines of the Bible in relation to human destiny, than in its requirements concerning the formation of Christian character. While we are very careful to understand doctrine, prophecy, and ordinances, we neglect the cultivation of the affections. We acquire a wealth of knowledge, but in love are beggared paupers. We converge all the shining rays of revelation on the mysteries of future existence, on the re-genesis of our earthly abode, on the universality and eternity of its future administration of government under the dominion of Messiah, and on the future glory of the church of God, but ignore almost every thing that bears upon our moral fitness for the heavenly inheritance. What a fearful awakening awaits a slumbering multitude, with their untrimmed lamps, worldly affections, and unholy dispositions, at that mystic hour that closes forever this "dispensation of the Gospel." In the graphic words of another: "That midnight cry, Behold the Bridegroom cometh," will be the death-cry to many a feeling of security and sense of readiness even in the best of Christians. When that cry is once made evident in the soul, and the solemn reality of the Savior's close proximity is upon us, there shall come with it a sudden laying open of the heart to itself, such as it never experienced before. And with that disclosure shall weaknesses and deficiencies become manifest to each one's conviction of which there was never the remotest suspicion. A flood of light, suddenly pouring into all the darkest corners of the inmost spirit, will then show every man to himself as he really is. He shall awake in a new world, where every thing is tried by new measurements and new and more searching tests. And the result will be more startling even to the very holiest than they ever previously imagined. Then shall the whole life come under quick review; the weaknesses of childhood long since forgotten, the hilarities of youth inwrought with sin, the ambition and worldliness of riper age, and every act from childhood onward, all shall rise before the conscience with every defect evident and unmistakable, and with great troops of moral ills and crimes, of which we have never dreamed, thrown out as if by magic from their hidden ambuscade to menace and overwhelm our peace. Whatever may be our attainments, we are all a great deal worse than we think we are. No living man has ever yet sounded all the depths and subtleties of his own depraved heart. No living man can take up in one grasp a just estimate of his entire history. The variety of events which succeed each other here below, and divide our life, fix our attention only on the present, and do not permit us to recollect it in the whole, or fully to see what we really are. We never regard ourselves but in that point of view in which our present situation holds us out; the last situation is always the one which determines our judgment of ourselves; a sentiment of salvation, with which God sometimes indulges us, calms us on an insensibility of many years; a day passed in exercises of piety makes us forget a life of crimes; the declaration of our faults at the tribunal of penitence effaces them from our remembrance, and they become to us as though they had not been; in a word, of all the different states of our conscience we never see but the present. It will not be so when we come to that moment of intense awakening when we are aroused to the reality that the Bridegroom's coming, with all his glorious train, is just upon us. Then shall the whole heart, for the entire life, stand out to view, with all its long-hidden depths revealed, all its unsuspected secrets suddenly laid bare, and every act, desire, word, thought, and deed, from its first feeling to its latest sigh, with the true estimate to be put on each, and the grand sum total of the entire account, made visible in a moment; and we shall see at a single glance what we never before could rightly search out,—that is, our true selves. Not a crime but shall then be present to us; not a departure from holiness but shall display itself; not an omission, of which the catalogue is almost interminable, nor a vile motive entertained, nor a mean compliance, nor an opportunity neglected, nor a truth avoided or a good deed undone, nor a moment wasted or a day unimproved, but shall then confront us. And the few prayers with which we now satisfy ourselves, and the few brief weekly services through which we pass with hardly interest enough to keep from falling asleep, and the few dollars given to God, and the few good acts for which we credit ourselves so largely, and that feeble round of experiences which makes up the record of most men's piety,—how shall they dwindle down from the significance which we now attach to them, and seem to change into miserable mockeries that call only for an everlasting detestation of ourselves that ever we could think of seriously relying upon them! The mere thought of how we shall then appear, startles us as we dwell upon it, and almost makes us afraid to entertain it for a moment. As we thus feebly anticipate the nature and results of that last self-searching for readiness to meet the Lord, who that does not see and feel that the fund of goodness, faith, charity, and consecration must needs be vastly ampler than that which most Christians possess, from which to garnish their lamps into fitness to join the glorious marriage-procession of the Lamb!"

We may slumber now and take our ease;—we may feid our arms in Laodicean lukewarmness;—we may set all our affections on the perishable objects of this present world, and heap up its treasures for the last days;—we may neglect all our duties to God and the cause of the Redeemer;—we may be careless about watchfulness and prayer;—have a name to live and be dead, and pass along with comparative credit in this world, but how different all when at the judgment-seat of Christ! Time flies, and moments are jewels. Whatever we do or neglect, let us prepare for the soon-coming Lord. And let us rejoice that it is still an accepted time and yet a day of salvation.

Words to Preachers.

Make no apologies. If you have the Lord's message, declare it; if not, hold your peace. Have short prefaces and introductions. Say your best things first, and stop before you get prosy. Do not spoil the appetite for dinner by too much thin soup. Leave self out of the pulpit, and take Jesus in. Defend the Gospel, and let the Lord defend you and your character. If you are lied about, thank the devil for putting you on your guard, and take care that the story shall never come true. Let your beard grow. Throw away your cravat. If you do not want to "break down," make your shirt collar an inch larger, and give your blood a chance to flow back to the heart. Do not get excited too soon. Do not run away from your hearers. Engine drive-wheels whirl fast on an icy track, but when they draw anything they go slower. It takes a cold hammer to bend a hot iron. Heat up the people, but keep the hammer wet and cool. Do not bawl and scream. Too much water stops mill wheels, and too much noise drowns sense. Empty vessels ring the loudest. Powder is not shot. Thunder is harmless. Lightning kills. If you have lightning, you can afford to thunder. Do not scold the people. Do not abuse the faithful souls who come to meeting rainy days, because others are too lazy to attend. Preach the best to the smallest assemblies. Jesus preached to one woman at the well, and she got all Samaria out to hear Him next time. Ventilate your meeting room. Sleeping in church is due to bad air oftener than to bad manners. Do not repeat sentences, saying, "As I said before." If you said it before, say something else after. Do not end sentences, passages of Scripture, or quotations with "and so forth;" say what you mean, and stop. Leave out all words that you cannot define. Stop preaching and talk to folks. Come down from your stilted ways and sacred tones, and become "as a little child." Change the subject if it goes hard. Do not tire yourself and every one else out. Do not preach till the middle of your sermon buries the beginning, and is buried by the end. Beware of long prayers, except in your closet. When weariness begins, devotion ends. Look people in the face, and live so you are not afraid of them. Take long breaths. Fill your lungs, and keep them full. Stop to breathe before the air is exhausted. Then you will not finish off each sentence*ah* with a terrible gasp*ah*, as if you were dying for want of air*ah*, as some good people do*ah*, and so strain their lung*sah*, and never find it out*ah*, because their friends dare not tell them*ah*, and so leave them to make sport for the Philistines*ah*. Inflate your lungs. It is easier to run a saw-mill with a full pond than an empty one. Be moderate at first. Hoist the gate a little way. When you are half through, raise it more. When you are nearly done, put on the full head of water. Aim at a mark; hit it! Stop and look where the shot struck; then fire another broadside. Pack your sermons. Make your words like bullets. A board hurts a man most when it strikes him edgewise. A pound of feathers is as heavy as a pound of lead, but it will not kill a man as quickly. An ounce bullet will kill quicker than a sack of wool. Do not condense too many words into a few thoughts. Make your discourse proportionate. If your talk is narrow and shallow, do make it short. If it is deep, and strong, the stream may run longer. Do not think every brook is deep, because you cannot see the bottom of it, nor call a man a deep diver because he always brings up mud. Have a clear head, and your words will be clear. Know what you are talking about; then you can make others understand you. Stand for God if you stand alone. Keep out of the clutches of party hacks and religious politicians. Preach a straight gospel, and live up to it. Keep your distance from sin. Do not play with edge tools, nor fool with temptations. Look to the stars instead of weather-cocks for guidance. Be in earnest, but not wild. Keep open ears, and a close mouth. Do not be a clown. Let the devil make his own fun, carry his own mail, settle his own quarrels, and foot his own bills. Make few promises. Learn to say no very sweetly. Keep out of debt. Do not let any one owe you more than you are able to lose. Speak to the people like your Master, as they are able to hear. Do not feed bones to babies. Do not abuse people for believing what you once believed yourself. Respect honest convictions. Judge no man. Be patient towards all. Make friends with the children. Be cheerful with the young. Keep clear of gluttony, dyspepsia, and pious grumbling. Remember, each sermon may be the last you shall preach, or your hearers shall listen to. Keep the judgment in view. Please God, and you will please Christians. Let others praise you. Live for Christ. Preach the Word.—H. L. Hastings.

GREATNESS OF LONDON.—The population of London, according to the last census, is 3,883,000. This vast multitude is more than the combined population of New York, Philadelphia, Brooklyn, St. Louis, Chicago, Baltimore, Cincinnati, Boston, New Orleans, San Francisco, Buffalo, and Allegheny City, Pa. To light its streets at night 320,000 gas lights are required, consuming every twenty-four hours 22,270,000 cubic feet of gas.

Christ Gave Himself a Ransom for All.

BROTHER REED:

I see a writer in the RESTITUTION of Nov. 5, has put forth the theory of "two seeds," which he says he has "never heard spoken, or seen written." That may be true. If so, his knowledge is limited; for several writers have employed their time and talents in presenting the same theory, in some parts of the country, for two or three years past, and have been replied to. The theory of your correspondent is precisely that promulgated by R. V. Lyon and some others, and is plainly this:"It never was the intention of Jehovah to save" only a few of our race: and that there are by birth, "two seeds," viz., the seed of the woman and the seed of the serpent; that for this last named class the Creator made no provision and never designed any salvation for them,—they were brought into being fore-doomed to be utterly destroyed, and that hopelessly, without the possibility of escape. Will you allow me to bear my protest against such a theory?

The theory is old-fashioned Calvanism revived, revamped, and attempted to be passed off as a new discovery. The reprobates, under the old theory, were from all eternity doomed to be damned, do what they would. Such was the theology taught sixty years ago, and shall an old man, who lived in those days, now be told such blasphemy is a veritable fact? Of the same character, only worse if possible, is the doctrine of a seed, or part of the human race, for whom Christ never died, and for whom God has no love; and yet Christ commanded the Gospel to be preached to them, because He commands it to be preached to "every creature."

I say nothing of the character or motives of the publishers of the theory, that I leave with Him who knoweth all hearts; but the theory is fatalism in its worst form, and calculated to destroy all confidence in God's Word; and lead some to fancy they are the favored ones who are to be saved, at all hazards, whatever risks they may run.

By this theory Cain is supposed to be the first of the "surplus," or "serpent's seed." But the record says that Cain was the son of Adam (Gen. iv. 1,) and Eve says, at Cain's birth, "I have gotten a man from the LORD;" and the record further says, "And she again bare his (Cain's) brother Abel." Verse 2. So the two are brothers. Are the seed of the serpent and the seed of the woman brothers? Cain was wroth because his offering to the Lord was not respected, as Abel's was. "And the Lord said unto Cain, Why art thou wroth? and why is thy countenance fallen? If thou doest well, shalt thou not be accepted?" What! the seed of the serpent, can they do well and be accepted! Truly a marvelous utterance to a seed fore-doomed, before they were born, to be a cursed seed, and placed at birth out of the pale of salvation on any terms! Is not the Lord justly chargeable with dealing deceitfully with Cain, if he was the fore-doomed being the "serpent's seed" theory represent him to be? Does not the theory charge God Himself as the producer of this class of men thus doomed to wickedness and ruin? for the text, on which the theory is built, reads, "I will greatly multiply thy sorrow and thy conception." God, then, is the author of the birth of this imaginary "serpent's seed," and makes them what they are, a hopeless and cursed seed, regardless of any acts of their own, simply because mother Eve had sinned! Surely, such a view represents Jehovah as swearing to an untruth, when He says, "Say unto them, As I live, saith the Lord God, I have no pleasure in the death of the wicked; but that the wicked turn from his way and live." Ezek. xxxiii. 11. It also represents the Savior as using deception, and as acting under false pretences when He said to certain Jews, "Ye serpents, ye generation of vipers, how can ye escape the damnation of hell." Matt. xxiii. 33. Did he know they were the "serpent's seed"—the "surplus seed"—that God brought into existence, fore-doomed to hell, and their salvation impossible by the author of their existence? If so, why tantalize them with their birth and doom? Plainly, He reproached them with their own wicked and avoidable conduct, by which they had justly merited the character and doom He sets before them.

The "two seeds," say the authors of the theory, are "not related to each other." Yet it is seen that they were both born of the same parents,—Adam the father, Eve the mother; and God Himself says they were "brothers." After Cain slew Abel, "The Lord said unto Cain, Where is Abel thy brother?" And again, the Lord said unto him, "The voice of thy brother's blood crieth unto me from the ground." The Apostle John says, Cain "slew his brother." "Not related to each other," says the theory! God says, Cain and Abel were brothers, and John says the same.

The theory of "two seeds" by birth, practically and theoretically denies that the Savior "gave himself a ransom for all," and was "the propitiation for the sins of the whole world." 1 Tim. ii. 6; 1 John. ii. 2. If such testimony is not true, then to "preach the Gospel to every creature" is hypocrisy, or practicing duplicity; pretending to have made provision for all men, that they might obtain life unending; while, in fact, no such provision exists. To deny this truth, is, virtually, to charge the angels who announced the birth of Christ, with a scandalous falsehood,—which the Apostle John would call being a "liar," and an "anti-christ." As no true Christian would commit such a sin, the truth must stand that "Jesus Christ gave himself a ransom for all," and "tasted death for every man." Not only did the Apostle Paul make these statements to Timothy and to the Hebrews, but presents the subject to the Corinthians in the following language: "For the love of Christ constraineth us; because we thus judge, that if one DIED FOR ALL, then were all dead; and that he DIED FOR ALL, that they which live should not henceforth live unto themselves, but unto him who died FOR THEM and rose again." 2 Cor. v. 14, 15.

The love of Christ, founded on Christ's love to him and to all men, "constrained" the Apostle to make prominent the great truth that Christ died for all; and on this fact to build another fact, viz: that henceforth men should live not for selfish ends, but unto the gracious person who had subjected Himself unto death for them, that He might deliver them from death and the dominion of sin. No stronger argument can be used to induce men to forsake and hate sin, than that Christ's love for them was so great, that, though "he knew no sin" (verse 21) "he died for all" those who "were dead in sins" (Eph. ii. 5,) and "while we were yet sinners." Rom. v. 8. To proclaim this truth successfully to men, there must be no possibility of deception in the message; for, if there is an exception, and a few or many of the family of Adam are not included in Christ's work in his death "for all," then to ask such to believe in Him is to ask them to believe a lie, because they were not included in the love of Christ which caused Him to die for men; and if He did not die for all men, then, really, faith is impossible in any man; for he may truly say, "I do not know that Christ died for me, as there are some for whom He did not die, and I may be one of them." To tell that man, "If you will believe you may know that you are one for whom Christ died," is but to mock him with deceitful words. Faith cannot exist without evidence first presented; and you ask him to believe without evidence, and tell him the testimony will come afterwards.

Such is the folly of any theory that denies or carries with it a doubt as to the fact that Christ gave Himself a ransom for all men of every language, tongue, nation and people. The man who does not understand this matter is not qualified to proclaim God's message of "Good tidings of great joy, which shall be to ALL PEOPLE." Luke ii. 10. The idea, therefore, that there is a portion of those we call "men," who are only "the seed of the serpent, by birth; and that Christ never died for them; and that there is no salvation for them, and God never designed they should have any thing beyond what pertains to things temporal," is to represent God's dealings with men as anything but frankness; yea, it represents Him as acting with a deception which, if found in men we would call them "hypocrites, dissemblers, liars." Shall we be guilty of placing the God of truth among such characters, even by implication, saying that Christ did not die for all men, and that no salvation was intended for a part of those we call "men?" I trust not.

GEORGE STORRS.

Suffering and Reigning.

The suffering is present. The reigning future. The suffering is in fact, the reigning in faith. But faith makes the triumph as real as the trial,—the joy as sure as the sorrow. Faith clasps the promise—"If we suffer with him we shall also reign with him," and faith sees them in every thorn and every spear, in every chain and every fetter, every faggot and every flame, the promise of eternal glory—of sublime and endless exaltation to Christ's own right hand.—The bloody block is but the threshold of the golden palace, the gory axe but prepares us for the fadeless crown, the prison is but the portal of eternal bliss, the grave but the waiting chamber whence the beauteous and immortal bride shall emerge in joyous triumph to welcome her descending bridegroom and to repose in the holy ecstacy of his fond embrace. Reader, do you suffer with Christ?

The way to the kingdom is neither flowery nor easy. Our flowers are blooming beyond the swelling flood. . . Soon shall the crown be bestowed upon the faithful saints of the most high God.—Soon shall the martyrs and apostles and saints come forth from their prison houses to reign with Christ. Reader, will you reign there?

"I or the joy that's set before thee,
Bear a momentary pain,
Die, to live a life of glory,
Suffer, with the Lord to reign."

The River of Life.

"There is a river the streams whereof shall make glad the city of God."—Psa. xlvi. 4.

Far back in the world's bright morning we read of a river that "went out of Eden to water the garden." No discription of it is given in that brief sentence but its fountain head is found in a sinless earth—it springs from the bosom of Eden, and on its banks are the trees and flowers of Paradise, while its clear bosom flashes back the beauty of those skies which no storm cloud had ever darkened. The tree of knowledge is there, and the tree of life also flourishes near its waves. The first Adam is placed amid these scenes of beauty to form a character of purity and virtue, but when temptation comes he falls before its force. Death follows in the track of sin and reigns with royal power over the sons of men. Sorrow and suffering walk hand in hand through a sin-cursed earth. The hills are smitten, the plains are blighted and the ocean tempest tossed, while the very skies frown with angry clouds

THE RESTITUTION

PLYMOUTH, IND., DEC. 9, 1874.

EDITORIAL DEPARTMENT.

To Our Readers.

In view of our having taken the Editorial management of the RESTITUTION a few words setting forth our views and plans may be deemed proper in this connection. Having been associated with the paper most of the time, under its various names for the last twelve years, we have some idea of the responsibilities and difficulties attending our present position. We know full well that we cannot meet the expectations of all our readers, and indeed such a result would be impossible for any one, seeing that there are, on certain points, differences of opinion which render universal approval impossible. What will be suited to one is not liked by another, and yet both of these parties demand a hearing on the ground that they have important truths to set forth. We will therefore here state summarily what appears to us to be the only fair and tenable ground.

We shall give all our readers a fair opportunity to express themselves through our columns, upon all Bible questions, but no writer shall be permitted to speak unkindly of others with whom he may not agree in matters of doctrine. The columns of the paper must not be burdened with long, prosy articles upon subjects of no practical bearing on the Christian life and hope. Writers should avoid, as far as possible, all crochets which tend to alienate and sever the children of God. Undue prominence to theories which seem to be fairly inferred from the Scriptures, but not directly taught, should be presented with great caution, and in a dispassionate spirit, and without dogmatism. Stick closely to the Bible, enforce no tests which grow out of speculative doctrines. Ask no one to believe that for which you cannot find a "thus saith the Lord." Try and speak to the edification of those standing in need of instruction and encouragement rather than to appear as a pioneer in some unheard of notions which further investigation will show to be untrue. In short, speak and write as far as in you lieth, according to the oracles of God. And write with a full, free heart to do good to the household of faith and to those who are yet in the ways of death.

We shall labor to produce harmony and peace, to build men up in Christ, and to diffuse a kindly spirit among all who are looking for the Blessed Hope. We stand in need of more zeal and devotion, more of that living faith which will bring us nearer to the Divine Master, and prepare us for his reign of glory and peace. Let there be more forbearance and love, and less indifference on the great questions of purity of heart and of life. Thus far our people have proved themselves "valiant in fight," and have put to flight the armies of the aliens, and have won the distinctive appellation of the Church Militant! During these years of conflict we may have partially forgotten the other side of Christian faith and duty, and become too combative in our zeal for the truth.

We do not wish to be understood that we are willing to yield one iota of truth for which we have contended during all these years of earnest effort. But it occurs to us that we should exhibit more of that sweet spirit which characterized our Master while setting forth that sublime message of peace on earth and good will to men. In view of the great events which are crowding in upon us, of the spirit of scepticism which is overshadowing the world, of the formalism and pride which have taken possession of the professed church, and our nearness to the everlasting kingdom, it becomes our earnest duty to have our lamps trimmed and burning that we may be ready for the coming Bridegroom. Let the coming year mark a new era in our history, bringing us to a higher standard of religious life, more unity of action and to greater sacrifices for the truth of heaven.

In conclusion we would ask for the fraternal co-operation of all who love the appearing of our Lord, and pray that we may be the humble means of winning men to Christ by a pure Gospel, and a life of trust in Him who is the giver of every good and perfect gift.

The Christian Publishing Association.

As our readers will be anxious to know something about the Association which has been recently organized in this State, we shall proceed to give such information as will be of interest.

The Christian Publishing Association was organized under the State laws of Indiana, Nov. 16. Brethren R. S. Dwiggins, Wm. Railsback, Cyrus Taber, Thomas McDonald, and S. A Chaplin were elected a Board of Directors for the first year. The headquarters of the Association are located at Plymouth, Ind., which is one of the most central points which could have been selected. The mail facilities are unexceptionable, there being two railroads leading to the great distributing centres of Chicago and Indianapolis, while the Eastern mail is more easily dispatched than at either of the points above named.

The capital stock of the Association for the present is five thousand dollars, which can be increased as the business may require. The shares of stock are ten dollars, which is sufficiently small to enable almost any one to become a member. About one-half of the stock is already taken, but we shall need to have the whole amount within a given time in order to faithfully prosecute the business and pay such debts as have already accrued by purchasing the entire office of the RESTITUTION, including the books, tracts, plates and subscription list. It is not expected that all the stock will be needed at once, but it can be paid by installments. Twenty-five per cent down and the balance as it may be called for by the Board.

The Association is organized strictly upon legal and business principles, and is a body corporate, and is fully prepared to execute its work according to the laws of the State. The Board of Directors are business men and enjoy the entire confidence of the brotherhood wherever known, and have good report from those "who are without." Matters of a business character had so shaped themselves as to render it important that Brother Wilson should be relieved from the care of the paper. He has borne the burden for sometime, and it is but right that others should put their shoulder to the wheel to aid the truth in these days of great events. The brethren of Indiana have taken upon them the responsibility of publishing the RESTITUTION, and it is expected that the entire brotherhood will co-operate with this movement and help onward the work. That the Association needs help in its infancy every brother well understands. It is therefore expected that assistance will come from all who have the truth at heart. Brethren here are willing to make sacrifices for the truth, provided others will work in unison with them. We hope our friends throughout the State and in other states will take this matter under serious consideration and do what they can to push forward the enterprise. In union there is strength, and in no better way can this be illustrated to the world and to our hearts than by a strong co-operative movement for the work of saving men from error and sin.

We will say in conclusion that if there are any points upon which any brother may want further explanation relative to the Association, we will cheerfully give it. In the meantime we hope all who can will subscribe for one or more shares of the capital stock, which will entitle them to a membership in the Association, and to have a voice in its proceedings. We sincerely trust that our united efforts will redound to the glory of God and to the advancement of the truth among men.

☞ From the intelligence elsewhere given, it will be seen that our dear Brother Hornaday has parted from us. An enemy hath done this. We deeply sympathize with the dear family and friends whose hearts are bleeding beneath this heavy stroke. But there is hope in this dark hour; the lights of faith shine over his lonely grave, and soon the Life-King shall come and break the cold bars which imprison our sleeping Brother. Another brave soldier has fallen, but he fell at his post, and his name shines on the golden page of the book of life, and his crown gleams in the hand of the King. We fully endorse the beautiful tribute given by Brother Halstead, and trust all our readers will act in harmony with his suggestions.

All Things New.

The world has grown old. The curse is here. Men grow old and die. The promises of the new life and of a new world are becoming old and the heart faints at the long delay. Yet the word seems more precious as the years go by. Man's life is short and the times of God are reaching far beyond human grasp. The vision tarries but the promise has gone forth, "Behold I make all things new." The old Paradise with its life-tree is seen restored in the visions of Patmos. The old heart which is given to sin must be made new; the old man must become a new man in Christ; the old heavens and the old earth will be changed to the new, and the Jerusalem now in weeds of mourning and clothed in garments of widowhood, shall become the bride the Lamb's wife, and her days of mourning shall end. She shall become the new city wherein shall dwell the elect church in the spotless linen, which is the righteousness of saints. The new heart, the new man in Christ, do not mean another heart and another man, but the same man is changed into the new. So with the old heavens and the old earth—and so it will be with Jerusalem the city of the great King. God's plan contemplates no waste in creation. The miracles did not involve new creations, but existing things were made to serve the power which acted upon them. So God will take the things which are, and from them shall come forth the blessed results foreshadowed in the divine promise and prophecy. "He that sat upon the throne said Behold I make all things new." Not new things, but the things which are shall be renewed and made to shine forth in the glory of that day when the old shall cease and the new shall come. Blessed consummation! May divine love quicken the years and bring us to that morn when all things shall be made new!

☞ The doctrine of future endless misery is being rejected as unscriptural by some of the most talented ministers of the orthodox faith, both in this country and in England. Dr. True of the M. E. church of New York, and Newman Hall (Congregationalist) of England, are among those who have ceased to preach the terrible doctrine of ceaseless woe. From present indications it will soon be quite orthodox to preach from popular pulpits, "The soul that sinneth it shall die."

The idea of offering a god for sale through a newspaper is rather novel, but in view of the fact that this god was made at Sheffield and was cast in bronze, there can be nothing wicked about it. The points which seem to have recommended this heathen god are its six arms and its height—fifteen feet. It would hardly do for a missionary to present to these heathen a a god "without body or parte."

☞ In this number will be found two articles bearing upon the question of what some are pleased to call the fair chance theory. The views set forth in the two articles are in some respects directly opposite. We give place to these articles as we have a great supply of them treating upon the same subject, handed over to us by the former proprietors. While we believe in the utmost freedom upon questions of opinion, yet it must not be expected that we shall be able to publish all the articles now in our possession. We do not wish to abridge the liberty of our correspondents, but the size of the paper is such that we cannot allow too much discussion upon controversial subjects. We expect to publish much that we do not believe, reserving the right, however, to criticize such articles as we think may require it.

Personal Items.

Brother J. M. Fike has moved from Nebraska to West Irving, Iowa.

P. B. Morgan, formerly an Advent minister, but now a member of the Episcopal Church, is talked of for Bishop of Iowa. "They have their reward."

Brethren Barnhill and Albertson have been holding a series of meetings in Polk Township, in the (Marshall) county, and baptized twelve persons. We understand that a great interest has been awakened in that community.

We received a call from Brother D. T. Halstead on Friday last. He was on his return home from Ross' Mills, where he gave nine discourses and baptized two disciples. He recently visited Goodland and preached the Word. Two intelligent believers were baptized. The truth has some warm friends in that locality. Brother H. is an efficient proclaimer of the ancient Gospel, and we hope the brethren will hold up his hands in his work for Christ.

Brother D. O. Amos, of Kansas, after more thoroughly investigating the subject has renounced the seventh day Sabbath delusion. Christ never commissioned his disciples to preach the law, but He did command them to preach the Gospel, which Paul declares to be "the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth." The law was given by Moses, but grace and truth came by Jesus Christ. The Apostles never enforced Sabbath-keeping upon the Gentile disciples.

Duties of the Hour.

Very peculiar and solemn responsibilities are now resting upon every true disciple of our Lord Jesus Christ. As individuals we have a character to form that we may be recognized as the children of God. Religion is eminently a personal matter between ourselves and our Lord. To pass the scrutiny of him who searches the hearts and tries the reins requires the exercise of the most unfaltering activity and engagedness on the part of every believer of the Gospel. We have learned from the living Oracles that our calling is a "heavenly calling"—even to share in all the honors of the "princely priesthood" in the soon coming kingdom. The coronals of glory will never wreathe the unbalanced brow. To the accepted honors of the world to come none but the pure in heart, and holy in life, will ever be exalted. We must then "give all diligence to make our calling and election sure." We also owe duties to the "Church of God." For eighteen hundred years, in widowed bereavement, has she been the object of the world's scorn, detestation, and bitter persecution. In sorrowful anxiety, in wearying labors, in ceaseless watchings, and hourly perils, has she marked the desert pathway with her bleeding foot-prints, in constant conflict with merciless superstitions, and every form of relentless unbelief. The blood of her martyred children has crimsoned the earth. Her surviving sons and daughters have pressed onward through tears, and even increasing perils, fainting, sighing, and dying all along the way. Her pathway is now through the perils of the last days. Her enemies are strong, numerous, well-disciplined and confident of ultimate victory. With diminished numbers, failing strength and fainting heart, she is now marshaling her forlorn hope for the last struggle in the "conflict of ages." We must stand by the colors of Immanuel now. Now is the time to signalize ourselves as soldiers of the cross. Darkness gathers in impenetrable shroudings above; dangers of every conceivable form thicken around; but final victory will be on the Lord's side. Our exhortation will be to personal conformity to our Lord Jesus Christ,—to active and unremitting diligence in labor in His vineyard,—to continually and faithfully holding forth the word of life to the perishing;—and to comforting one another in these last evil times. For a crown of glory we must cheerfully sacrifice, at least, a share of worldly wealth. This dispensation nears its close.

With these few words of friendly admonition we greet the readers of the RESTITUTION. We hope to make the paper, what it has already been, a medium of instruction and comfort. We want both your aid and your prayers. May our efforts be blessed, and our readers edified.

S. A. CHAPLIN.

TORONTO, Dec. 2.—In the Provincial Lunatic Asylum yesterday, a female patient named Mrs. Nowell, an English emigrant, afflicted with the notion that her five children's souls could not be saved unless she herself died some terrible death, set fire to her clothing, and then knelt in devotion while enveloped in flames. The fire was extinguished, but the patient died this morning, after great agony.

The Ten Kings of Rome.

"The beast which thou sawest was, and is not; and shall ascend out of the bottomless pit, and shall go into perdition.

And the ten horns which thou sawest are ten kings which have received no power as yet; but receive power as kings one hour with the beast. Rev. xvii. 8, 12.

We invite the reader's attention to the following extracts from a letter written from Rome, by Joseph Medill, now editor in-chief of the Chicago Tribune. Mr. Medill, of course wrote this letter without any idea of the prophecy, and yet it seems to point to the same great facts as set forth by John. Rome was, then ceased to be, during the reign of the Papacy, and now exists again after a lapse of between twelve and thirteen centuries, and there are just ten kings in reconstructed Italy or Rome. But here is the letter which speaks for itself:

After this hasty and imperfect retrospect, let us take an and see what the profits of this fortunate season's business for Victor Emanual footed up.

Island of Sicily, acquired	19,549	2,232,795

There were two links still missing to complete the grand chain, viz: Venitia, with 7,765 square miles, and 2,496,442 inhabitants, yet under the iron yoke of Austria, and the Pontifical States, with 4,716 square miles, and 692,106 unwilling subjects of His Holiness, pinned down by French bayonets.

VENITIA WAS TRANSFERRED by the treaty of Prague, Aug. 23, 1866, to Prussia, who turned it over to Italy the same day, and then "gobbled" up all the North German states for her own share of the spoil, annexing "Principalities and Powers" Dukedoms and Margravates, right and left, to the number of about three dozen or two-score. Bismark thereby simplified and reduced the map of Germany to the comprehension of school-boys, which it had not previously been, but was known as the "labyrinth of geography." But the "Man of Destiny" stood by and bit his finger nails. He had been completely euchred by Bismark and Emanual.

There now only remained one sister state out of the fold to complete Italian unity; but, while that was the smallest, it was the most important of all. It was the Hamlet of the play; it was the state which had originally created the Italian Republic, and drew Italy around itself as the center of gravity, and held all the states in its fraternal embrace for 1,200 years,—the same length of time which they had been torn from the parent state.

Time ran on, and the span connecting 1866 and 1870 was a short one. Prussia was once more to befriend Italy and advance her cause. Solferino had given to Emanual Lombardy. Sadowa had added Venetia, and expelled Austria from Italy, and created a nation, but without a capital. Sedan was now to give Italy its capital and crown the edifice. The German invasion of France necessitated the withdrawal of the 20,000 French soldiers who had stood guard for the Pope and held the Romans down for eleven years, while Italy watched and waited. The hour had now struck, and the time for the delivery of Rome was at hand. The last French regiment had scarcely embarked at Civita Vecchia, before the citizens began to hand out the tri-colored flag, and send deputations to Florence urging the king to take possession of the ancient capital of Italy. As usual he was bold and prompt, and no time was lost in appearing before the gates of the ancient Aurelian wall, and demanding that they be opened forthwith. A few shots were fired in the air for form's sake, when the Pope ordered the gates to be opened to spare the effusion of blood, and the Italian army MARCHED INTO THE ETERNAL CITY, amidst the frantic shouts of welcome of the overjoyed citizens. From every window was thrust a national flag (and, the wonder was how or when so many thousand banners were made). At night the city was illuminated until the light almost rivaled that of the day; rockets mounted into the heavens by millions; bells were rung; cannon roared and shook the city; bonfires were lighted on each of the Seven Hills; the people danced, waltzed, and embraced, and blessed each other in the streets; there was a perfect carnival of rejoicing,—for Rome, after twelve centuries of night had emerged into day, and again was the capital of Italy. Rome was occupied by the Italian army on the 20th of September, 1870; a plebiscite was ordered, and the vote for annexation was nearly unanimous,—only the monks and priests voting in the negative. On the 9th of October, 1870, the Pontifical states was annexed to the kingdom by royal decree, and Rome was solemnly proclaimed to be the capital of united Italy. The national parliament held its first session in Rome the ensuing winter, and thus the Roman senate was re-established after a lapse of nearly 1,300 years. As the King of Italy marched into the palace on the Quirinal Hill, King Pius retreated in good order across the Tiber to the Vatican, where, laying down the earthly crown, he took up his spiritual mitre.

Rejoice!

Rejoice! dear scattered band. Your sufferings are almost over. It is but a little while now—such a little while, until the once pierced feet shall stand upon Olivet's cleaving brow, and the dear hands, once nailed to the cross, wave a scepter of righteousness over all the earth.

O Palestine, rejoice! Rejoice! beautiful historic land, for thou wilt soon be redeemed from the curse. The conflicts that have raged within thy borders for so many ages past, will soon be over. The Roman will despoil Jerusalem no more. No more will the Crusader and the Saracen meet in deadly conflict upon thy shores, oh beautiful lakes of the Holy Land. Not much longer will the crowned monarchs of earth dispute each other's right to thy possession. The city of God will shine like a resplendent gem within thee, and the glory of the nations and their honor will be there. The covenant that God made with Abraham, will be a sure covenant. The restored Canaan will be his for an everlasting possession, and Jesus our Savior, will reign!

He is coming soon, Oh, He is coming! Our best Friend, who died for us! How the glories of this world pale before that solemn thought! How vain they seem, how trifling! It is all vanity. What need of toiling like slaves for such ephemeral treasures? We are on our way home, and our elder Brother is going to meet us and escort us to our Father's house.

Let not the wild surging waves sweep any away from the Rock. Cling to Jesus. Sow the good seed with diligence. Use well the talents given. Lay up treasures in heaven. There remaineth for the faithful rest, and a crown.

The Hidden Man of the Heart.

"Whose adorning, let it not be that outward adorning of plaiting the hair, and of wearing of gold, or of putting on of apparel; But let it be the hidden man of the heart, in that which is not corruptible, even the ornament of a meek and quiet spirit."—1 Peter iii. 3, 4.

The above language from the Apostle Peter has been deemed positive proof of the immortality of the soul and its continued conscious existence after death. It is assumed that the hidden man of the heart is the soul and that it is not corruptible, etc., which is deemed demonstrative of the position named above. But it is evident Peter is not talking about the nature of the soul, but of the true adorning which should characterize all true Christians. That this is the case will be seen from all modern translations.

WAKEFIELD. "Nor let your ornament be that outward ornament of plated hair with braided gold or of costly raiment, but the hidden man of the heart with the imperishable ornament of a meek and gentle mind."

IMPROVED VERSION, printed in 1809. "But let it be the hidden person of the heart, in the incorruptible ornament of a meek and quiet spirit."

MCKNIGHT. "But let the hidden man of the heart be adorned with the incorruptible ornament of a meek and quiet spirit."

DOUAY BIBLE. "But the hidden man of the heart in the incorruptibility of a quiet and meek spirit."

WESLEY. "But the hidden man of the heart in the incorruptible ornament."

It will be seen from these various translations that it is the ornament that is called incorruptible, and this adorning is to be something peculiar to the child of God. If it refers to the soul of man and not to the adorning which should become the Christian, then all men both saints and sinners have the ornament and Peter's exhortation was superfluous.

As to the hidden man of the heart we think Peter means no more by this than Paul does when speaking of Christ "dwelling in our hearts by faith" and of Christ "formed within, the hope of glory." The inward man is possessed only by righteousness; the Bible does not speak of wicked men having the inward man. Hence it does not refer to the soul in any sense. The word heart means the mind, and the hidden man dwells in the mind or heart by faith, and what better ornament than a true Christ-like character formed within us, can we aspire to. We conclude therefore that Peter is not talking about souls but about the true ornament which Christians should have. May that adorning dwell in each of us.—R.

The Resurrection a Necessity.

Were we to inquire of all believers in a future existence, who lose their faith upon the teaching of the Bible, How do you prove a future state of existence for the dead? Would not the uniform answer be, We prove it by showing that there will be a resurrection of the dead. This is certainly a fair and logical way of answering the question in a general way, but to be a little more explicit let us inquire a little further: 1. Is it necessary to believe in a literal resurrection? Will the same organic structure that dies be raised? Will identity be restored? Will there be no difference between the resurrected body of Moses and that of Paul? Can there be a recognition of individuals in the resurrected state? If not why talk about sitting down with Abraham, Isaac and Jacob in the kingdom? Properly speaking no two are exactly alike physically. This answers a wise purpose in the present state of existence, and reasoning from analogy, in the age to come it will be necessary to distinguish persons by the physical form, therefore identity must be restored, in other words the same physical organization that dies must live again, the change being one of nature and not of form.

In all the instances found in the Bible, where a resurrection has actually taken place, a literal reliving of the dead has been the result. Not a single departure from this rule can be shown. And in all cases where a resurrection is yet future the exact location of the dead is referred to. "They that are in their graves shall hear his voice." "And the sea gave up the dead which were in it." And to crown this grand Bible truth, take the resurrection of Jesus Christ that is given as a specimen of all the saints, who slumber in death's dark shades; For God who raised Jesus from the dead will also quicken the mortal bodies of the saints, and "we look for the Lord from heaven who will change our vile bodies and fashion them like unto his glorious body." Now the identity of Jesus was established subsequent to his resurrection from the dead; not by an exact resemblance of character or faith but by an exact physical resemblance, even the imprints of the nails and the spear wound. The idea that God will organize other matter and flesh a character upon it similar to the one developed here in altogether a different body, may suit a believer in metempsychosis, but does not satisfy my longing, to live again.

The objections urged against the foregoing literal, but very scriptural views of the resurrection of the dead, are of two kinds, viz: 1. Philosophical, and 2. Scriptural.

1. We are told that after death the materials of which our bodies are composed gradually decompose and assimilate with the earthy matter that goes to form vegetation, which in its turn forms food for animals that finally serve the human family for food, and thus in course of time what once formed a human organization has become component parts of animals and other human bodies!!! and like the Sadducees the objector asks: "In the resurrection whose body shall it be, since so many have had it?" The weight of the objection depends altogether upon the standpoint from which it is viewed. I admit if it is viewed from a human or even "scientific" standpoint the objection seems weighty!! But would not the same objection weigh if the body should be confined at death in a hermetically sealed cast steel casket that would prevent any of the particles of the body escaping. Suppose a human body to have been thus confined four thousand years ago and could to day be viewed from a human or "scientific" point, what is there in the unrecognizable mass that would warrant the belief that from this mass a human body could be formed? Nothing, simply nothing. Eternal oblivion might as well be written upon it! Let the everlasting shades of the black night of forgetfulness envelop it in its somber folds. For there is no power residing in mortals that can rearrange the atoms forming a perfect structure and even if it could where is the power to give the inanimate form life? But if the wonderful phenomena of raising the dead and giving them life is to be wrought by God, then the difficulty vanishes; for who can limit the power of Him that formed the vast globe and whose power sustains it whirling through space?

> "Tell all the waves that roll across the sea,
> With fury dashed against the shore,
> Then ask if God who raised the storm
> Can calm the dead to rest once more?
>
> When every scene on which we gaze
> By God is painted in each eye
> How can we doubt his power to raise
> The dead who for a time lie?"

Then let my faith be based upon the eternal, unchangeable Word of God, for He has spoken it and cannot lie, "I will redeem them from death."

2. The "Scriptural objection" is based upon a misapplication of the language used by Paul in 1 Cor. xv. "Thou fool, that which thou sowest is not quickened except it die, and that which thou sowest thou sowest not that body that shall be but bare grain, it may chance of wheat or some other grain, but God giveth it a body as it hath pleased him, and to every seed his own body." Verses 36-38

Now if this language is made to apply to each resurrected body, then, to argue for the identical body to come up in the resurrection, that goes down in death, is sheer folly!!! No such thing could result; the only argument that could be drawn from Paul's illustration on the above hypothesis is this: The human body is planted like a grain of corn; the original grain that is planted does not re-appear in the new crop, but a number (not an individual) of grains is the result, each grain being in shape, quality, size and nature just like the grain that was planted. Who will say that the original grain planted, is the one or rather the number produced in the new crop? Is it not plain that if the figure is applied to individual bodies, that where one BODY is PLANTED a number just like it will be RAISED? Not one of them however being the original one buried!!!

The difficulty vanishes at once if we apply the figure to Christ where it properly belongs, Christ being the typical grain, germ, or seed whose antitypical crop or harvest is the saints resurrected with bodies just like the original typical grain (Christ). This is the proposition. Now for facts to sustain it. Paul is simply using the language of Jesus as recorded in John xii. 24. "Verily, verily I say unto you except a corn of wheat .... into the ground and die it abideth alone, but if it die it bringeth forth much fruit." This language uttered with direct reference to his death and .s results is susceptible of but one meaning, and that meaning Paul has with logical effect woven into his argument, proving that the saints (the harvest would be raised because Christ (the germ or first fruit) had been raised. Note carefully the fact that two questions are propounded at verse 35. The first question is this: "How (implying cause or means) are the dead raised up?" and the second question is this: "With what body do they come?" The first question is answered strictly in accordance with the nature of the question, i. e., The death, burial, and resurrection of Christ (the grain) is a grand cause; the resurrection and incorruptible nature of the saints (the crop) will be the grand effect.

The answer to the second question "With what body do they come," certainly harmonizes with the foregoing view and will not harmonize with any other. Notice carefully Paul's language, "So also is the resurrection of the dead. It is sown in corruption, it is raised in incorruption, It is sown in dishonor, it is raised in glory. It is sown in weakness, it is raised in power. It is sown a natural body, It is raised a spiritual body. And so it is written the first man Adam was made a living soul, the last Adam was made a quickening spirit."

This language certainly conveys the idea that the same it that goes down corrupt, dishonored, weak, and natural, must come up incorruptible, honored, powerful, and spiritual. Long has the difficulty of reconciling Paul's figure with a literal re-living of the dead perplexed honest Bible students, and as we hail with delight expositions that show harmony in Revelation, we submit the foregoing to the candid judgment of men and women who love the truth.

The Nations Shall Come to Worship in Jerusalem.

The Redeemer having, with wonderful condescension, designed to dwell with men, and his temple being rebuilt in Jerusalem, the nations are represented as coming to worship before him. "And it shall come to pass in the last days, that the mountain of the Lord's house shall be established in the top of the mountains, and shall be exalted above the hills; and all nations shall flow unto it; and many people shall go and say, Come ye, and let us go up to the mountain of the Lord, to the house of the God of Jacob; and he will teach us of his ways, and we will walk in his paths; for out of Zion shall go forth the law, and the word of the Lord from Jerusalem," Is. ii. 2, 3. This prophecy is repeated in nearly the same words, Micah iv. 1, 2. Again, "At that time, they shall call Jerusalem the throne of the Lord; and all the nations shall be gathered unto it to the name of the Lord to Jerusalem; neither shall they walk any more after the imaginations of their evil heart," Jer. iii. 17. "Thus saith the Lord of hosts, It shall yet come to pass that there shall come people, and the inhabitants of many cities: and the inhabitants of one city shall go to another, saying, Let us go speedily to pray before the Lord, and to seek the Lord of hosts; I will go also. Yea, many people and strong nations shall come to seek the Lord of hosts in Jerusalem, and to pray before the Lord," Zech. viii. 20-22. "Because of thy temple at Jerusalem shall kings bring presents unto thee," Ps. lxviii. 29. "They that dwell in the wilderness shall bow before him, and his enemies shall lick the dust. The kings of the Tarshish and the isles shall bring presents; the kings of Sheba and Seba shall offer gifts. Yea, all kings shall fall down before him, all nations shall serve him," Ps. lxxii. 9-11. "It shall come that I will gather all nations and tongues; and they shall come and see my glory:—and it shall come to pass that from one new moon to another, and from one Sabbath to another, shall all flesh come to worship before me, saith the Lord," Is. lxvi. 18-23. "And it shall come to pass that every one that is left of all the nations which came against Jerusalem shall even go up from year to year to worship the King, the Lord of hosts, and to keep the feasts of the tabernacles. And it shall be that whose will not come up of all the families of the earth unto Jerusalem to worship the King the Lord of hosts even upon them shall be no rain. And if the family of Egypt go not up and come not, that have no rain, there shall be the plague wherewith the Lord will smite the heathen that come not up to keep the feasts of the tabernacles. This shall be the punishment of Egypt, and the punishment of all nations that come not up to keep the feast of tabernacles. In that day shall there be upon the bells of the horses HOLINESS UNTO THE LORD; and the pots in the Lord's house shall be like the bowls before the alter. Yea, every pot in Jerusalem and in Judah shall be HOLINESS unto the Lord of hosts; and all they that sacrifice shall come and take of them, and see thee therein; and in that day there shall be no more the Canaanite in the house of the Lord of Hosts," Zech. xiv 16-21.

J. A. BEAN.

Paul's "Desire to Depart."

In the "Improved Version" of the New Testament, we find the following note in connection with the translation of Phil. i. 22-24. The translation reads: "But if it be given me to live in the flesh, this preaching of Christ is the fruit of my labor; yet what I shall choose I know not; but I am in a strait between two, having a desire to depart, and to be with Christ; for this would be very far better."

The words in italics are thus in the translation. The following is the note in the margin:—

"The Apostle probably thought that the advent of Christ to raise the dead was very near. See 1 Thess. iv. 13-18, and therefore judged that a quiet rest in the grave till that event, would be to himself preferable to a life of suffering and persecution; though he was content to continue in his present suffering state for the benefit of the church. At any rate he could not mean to express an expectation of an intermediate state of enjoyment between death and the resurrection; for he hints at no such topic of consolation to the bereaved Thessalonians in the passage above cited. And if he had expected that a state of felicity would have immediately succeeded the dissolution of the body, it would have been impossible for him to have declared to the Corinthians, 1 Cor. xv. 17, 18, that if the dead rise not, their faith would be vain, and that all who had fallen asleep in Christ were perished."

In the same version we find the following translation of 1 Thess. iv. 15-18:—

"For this we say unto you by the Word of the Lord, that we who shall be alive, and who shall remain to the appearance of the Lord, shall not be before those that are fallen asleep. For the Lord himself will come down from heaven with a shout, with the voice of the archangel, and with the trumpet of God; and the dead in Christ will rise first; afterward, we who shall be alive, and who shall remain, shall be caught up together with them into the clouds, to meet the Lord in the air; and then we shall ever be with the Lord.—Wherefore comfort ye one another with these words."

In the margin is the following note on the foregoing:—

"Observe here, that all the consolation which the Apostle administers to the bereaved and mourning Thessalonians is derived from the Christian hope of a resurrection, and from what would happen at that awful and glorious period. He takes no notice of an intervening state of perfection and felicity of which their deceased friends were even then in possession. A circumstance which the Apostle could hardly have omitted had the existence of such a state been revealed to him."

We think the foregoing sensible remarks commend themselves to every candid reader, and are in strict harmony with the teachings of the Scriptures.

Rest.

Thank God that there remaineth a rest for his people. The weary, wayworn pilgrim is to have a rest that will far more than compensate for all the toils, all the sufferings, all the griefs, that he can have to endure here. He will have a rest, which, with a body made immortal, with no proclivity to evil, will be far more than a recompense for all the vicissitudes of this mortal state.—Yes, a rest in a land where no sin shall enter; where no sorrow shall be known; where Jesus shall dwell, where all shall be peace and blessedness, is worth living for, hoping for, fighting for.

Brethren and sisters, are you all longing for that keeping of a Sabbath? Are you sighing for the day of deliverance to come? or are any of you growing cold and lifeless? Has it a lovely character of Jesus less charms for you now, than it had last week, or month, or year? Does his dying love affect you less than when you first believed? If it does, you are in a dangerous position, and unless you watch, and strengthen the things that remain, so that your works may be approved of God, you can never realize the blessedness of the rest which is for the people of God.—Maine View Jubilee.

From Brother Amos.

Dear Brethren, and readers of the RESTITUTION, have returned to Missouri again, and considering the bad weather we had a good meeting with the brethren in Holt Co. A good interest was manifested, and others are seeking for the truth. As we travel from place to place we have many calls for labor, the harvest is ripe but the laborers are few. We find great opposition at different places, and when we look back on the race our Savior run, and how He was persecuted it should strengthen us, dear brethren, and encourage us to bear the burden and heat of the day, that we may at last reign with Him in his kingdom.

Yours in the hope,

D. O. AMOS.

Sad Intelligence.

On the 24th day of the present month at Hartford City, Ind., our beloved Brother Wm. H. Hornaday fell beneath the hand of the destroyer—death, after a severe illness of typhoid fever. We accompanied his remains from the place of his death to Windfall, Tipton Co., the place of his former residence, where he was laid away in peaceful rest until the regathering and reunion of God's holy dead. He was in his thirty-third year, in the prime of life, full of ambition and zeal in the cause of Christ, for which he unselfishly sacrificed all. He died poor in this world but rich in faith; heir of the kingdom which God has promised to them that love Him. He fought the good fight, he finished his course, he kept the faith. Noble generous soul, beloved by all who knew him. He practiced what he preached, his living voice is no longer heard cheering the pilgrim, nor imploring with the erring and the wayward,—though dead he yet speaketh. May you and I dear pilgrim, imitate his noble and virtuous life—remembering in sympathy, in prayers and deeds of kindness our worthy Sister bereaved with her little ones, whom he has left to our care. She nobly gave to the cause we love, him so dear to her, on whom she depended for care and protection, for sympathy and support. May the blessing of the divine Father, the comfort of the blessed promises sustain her and them with all the bereaved ones, until the long dark night of sorrow and of death shall be over. May you and I greet them there. Amen.

Literalism vs. Mysticism.

"In the day thou eatest there of thou shalt surely die," or as the margin more correctly reads, "Dying, thou shalt die."—Gen. ii. 17.

The sense evidently is, from the moment Adam sinned, he was placed in a dying state, and continued there until he died, which was nine hundred and thirty years after his creation. Gen. v. 5. This is true literalism, which needs only to be read to be understood and believed.

Mysticism justifies reading the passage thus: "In the day thou eatest thereof thou shalt surely die a spiritual death," thereby changing the penalty threatened in the case, from a real to a spiritual death, which is said to be alienation from God,—hence alienation from Him is the penalty of sin, or the result of sin is its punishment. If this be true, the penalty might have run thus: "In the day you sin, you will become a sinner!" To escape this absurdity, the mystical principle justifies the addition of eternal death to the penalty thus: "In the day thou eatest thereof thou shalt surely die a spiritual death, from which, if you are not freed when you die a natural death, you will be punished with eternal death, which will be unending torment in hell."

This is mysticism, and which lies at the foundation of all the false doctrines of christendom. When man had the folly or presumption to change the irrevocable decree of the Creator, from a corporeal to a moral death, he was prepared to make any perversion of the Word of God which would best subserve the cause of error.

☞ Shipments of firearms and ammunition from the United States to Europe are constant, and on a scale of magnitude that would excite surprise could the facts be known. Scarcely a week passes that large quantities of "hollow ware" are not quietly put aboard ship, appearing in the manifest as nothing more than so many "cases." These shipments for the most part are installments forwarded from the American manufacturer in execution of orders given, perhaps, years ago.

State Evangelist.

It will be remembered by the brethren who attended the Indiana Conference at Antioch last August, that D. T. Halstead was unanimously chosen State Evangelist, that he proposed to labor as such for eight hundred dollars, the ensuing year, that pledges to the amount of nothing over six hundred dollars were made at once.

The financial committee was required to appoint solicitors in each congregation, to raise funds to assist in paying said Evangelist. We made the appointments at an early day, after Conference. Quite a number of those who made pledges, have paid the first installment, one-fourth. We have had no report from a number of congregations, as yet. We have not been advised whether these congregations purpose to assist in paying brother Halstead. "The Lord loves a cheerful giver." All acknowledge that he is admirably qualified to discharge the duties required of an Evangelist.

We desire those whom we appointed solicitors in the congregations, to report to us at once, and let us know what they propose to do. If we do not get more funds brother Halstead will have to leave the field before the year closes.

It was not my purpose to give the brotherhood a moral lecture when I commenced, but merely to "stir up their pure minds by way of remembrance." Let us act according to our convictions of right and we promptly.

THE RESTITUTION

WHEN WILL HE COME?

It may be when the spring's mild breath
Awakes the buds from wintry death;
When opening flowers allure the bee,
And birds rear nestlings to the tree.

It may be when the yellow grain
In golden waves moves o'er the plain;
When gladdened reapers bind the sheaves,
And summer zephyrs fan the leaves.

It may be when the boughs are mute,
When garnered is the autumn fruit;
When the sweet rose of June is dead,
And buds to sunny climes have fled.

It may be when, at dewy eve,
The son of toil his work shall leave,
To seek his pillowed rest at home—
At close of day the Lord may come.

It may be at the midnight hour,
When locked in slumber's soothing power,
The trump may summon thee to meet
The Judge upon the judgment seat.

It may be when the dawning ray
Of rising sun first gilds the day,
Thy guardian angel thee may bear
To meet the Savior in the air.

Unknown the season, hour, or day,
When Christ will call his bride away;—
Before the close of passing year
The King of glory may appear.

O, church of God, thy falling tears
Have "watered deserts" years and years;
Lift now thy head,—for soon at home,
Thy song shall be—The Lord has come.

S. A. CRAFTS.

Discussion.—No. 3.

My third negative argument, or scriptural array upon the proposition, Resolved that man retains his consciousness after the phenomenon called death, consisted in what inspired writers say of the condition of man in death.

1. Job in lamenting his condition in affliction says that had he died in infancy, "then would I have lain still, and been quiet, I should have slept; then had I been at rest, with kings and counsellors of the earth, which built desolate places for themselves; or with princes that had gold, who filled their houses with silver; or as a hidden untimely birth I had not been; as infants which never saw light. There, (where Job then would have been, or in death) the wicked cease from troubling, and there the weary be at rest. There the prisoners rest together; they hear not the voice of the oppressor. The small and the great are there; and the servant is free from his master." Job iii. 13-19.

2. But where this quiet? where this sleep? where this rest? Spiritism and orthodoxy say in heaven, but what says Job? See xvii. 13-16.

Indeed the inspired writers harmonize; the sentence was "Dust thou art, and unto dust shalt thou return."

3. Job. xiv. 1-5. Here Job says his bounds are set, but spiritism and orthodoxy say not so, that when death takes place then man will know no bounds, that he will then be as a bird freed from a cage and at liberty to go where he may see proper.

Turn from him that he may rest. Rest where? In the dust. Job xvii. 13-16.

"For there is hope of a tree, if it be cut down, that it will sprout again, and that the tender branch thereof will not cease. Though the root thereof wax old in the earth, and the stock thereof die in the ground; yet through the scent of water it will bud, and bring forth boughs like a plant." Job here brings forth an incident in nature and makes an effort to establish by analogy a conclusion in reference to the destiny of man. But hear what the conclusion is when reached: "But man dieth, and wasteth away; yea, man giveth up the ghost, and where is he? As the waters fail from the sea, and the flood decayeth and drieth up; so man lieth down, and riseth not; till the heavens be no more; they shall not awake nor be raised out of their sleep." Job with this conclusion before him then exclaims: "O that thou wouldest hide me in the grave, that thou wouldest keep me secret, until thy wrath be past, that thou wouldest appoint me a set time, and remember me! If a man die, shall he live again? all the days of my appointed time will I wait, till my change come. Thou shalt call, and I will answer thee; thou wilt have a desire to the work of thine hands." But where does Job desire to be hid? Spiritists want no hiding, but perfect freedom.

Job desires secrecy there in the grave; but spiritists public life in the spirit-world.

Job desired a set time when God would remember him, but spiritists set that time themselves and set it at death.

Job asks a question: If a man die shall he live again? Spiritists and orthodoxy say no, he never dies. Consequently no broken link, no living again, but a continuance of this life.

4. "Oh that my words were now written! oh that they were printed in a book! That they were graven with an iron pen and lead in the rock forever. For I know that my Redeemer liveth, and that he shall stand at the latter day upon the earth. And though after my skin worms destroy this body, yet in my flesh shall I see God; whom I shall see for myself, and mine eyes shall behold, and not another; though my reins be consumed within me."

The marginal reading of verse 26, is "After I shall awake, though this body be destroyed yet out of my flesh shall I see God," showing evidently that Job was (1) to sleep; (2) to awake, and (3) to see God, and that at the latter day when He would stand upon the earth. But spiritism and orthodoxy say no sleeping, no awaking, but a sight of God immediately after death, and that not on earth but in heaven. Which shall we follow? Spiritism, or what the Inspiration says—the inspired man.

5. Psa. vi. 4, 5. Here David, whom Peter declares on the day of Pentecost to have been a Prophet says that in death there is no remembrance of God. But the exponent of spiritism and orthodoxy says not so David, in death the memory is quickened, and man remembers not only God, but all his past actions with ten fold distinctness.

6. Psa. xxx. 9. Here David gives us to understand that when the sentence "Dust thou art and unto dust shalt thou return," is carried out, and that when the rest is in the dust that then this dust is incapable of giving God thanks, of praising God, or of declaring his truth. And again to the point.

7. Psa. lxxxviii. 10-12. There are a few points worthy of notice in this language. 1. That God will not show his wonders to the dead. 2. That as the dead cannot praise God, in the dust, neither can they ARISE and praise Him (at least till He bid the time—the resurrection morn.) 3. That his loving-kindness will not be declared in the grave. 4. That his faithfulness will not be declared in destruction (to where man goes in death.) 5. That his wonders shall not be known in the dark. And (6) that his righteousness shall not be known in the land of forgetfulness.

But further upon the inability of man in death to do homage to God we will give two more quotations. Psa. cxv. 17. "The dead praise not the Lord, neither any that go down into silence," and Isa. xxxviii. 18, 19. "For the grave cannot praise thee; death cannot celebrate thee; they that go down into the pit cannot hope for thy truth. The living, the living, he shall praise thee, as I do this day; the father to the children shall make known thy truth."

8. Psa. cxlvi. 3, 4. We would remark that we have seen from the quotations thus far made that man returns to the dust; that he rests in the dust, that he sleeps in the dust, that he then is in the land of darkness, in the land of destruction, in the land of forgetfulness, incapable of doing any homage whatever to God; and now in this last quotation, that in that very day (day of death—when his breath goeth forth) HIS THOUGHTS PERISH. Most assuredly then the proposition is lost. But that it may sink too deep ever to be exhumed in this community I will cite three other Scriptures.

9. Psa. xlix. 6-20. This Scripture is sufficiently plain without any comment, and I only desire to call particular attention to verse 8, where David declares that the soul of the character here described ceaseth forever. Then we may speculate in reference to the condition of the soul after death. but David settles this question for us. It ceases forever. No continued conscious misery in the death of the soul but an entire cessation.

10. Eccl. iii. 18-22. I will remark for the benefit of the reader that since the discussion and after returning home I have examined the rendering of the Douay Bible, a Catholic version made from the Septuagent on this text and will give it: "I said in my heart concerning the sons of men, that God would prove them, and show them to be like beasts. Therefore the death of man, and of beasts is one, and the condition of them both is equal; as man dieth, so they also die; all things breathe alike, and man hath nothing more than beast; all things are subject to vanity. And all things go to one place; of earth they were made, and into earth they return together. Who knoweth if the spirit of the children of Adam ascend upward, and if the spirit of the beasts descend downward?"

11. Eccl. iv. 3-19. This completely establishes the negative of the proposition; no need of any more testimony, nor any more comment. But we will briefly sum up from these quotations.

Man then is made of the DUST and unto DUST he returns. His rest is in the DUST. He goes into the land of DARKNESS, of DESTRUCTION, and of FORGETFULNESS. There he is incapable of offering prayer to God, of praising Him, and of publishing his law. There is no work nor device there. No wisdom there. No knowledge there. There his thoughts perish and he knows not anything.

These are the words of the Apostle Jude, evidently written for the people of God in the "last time." In the third verse of his scintillous epistle this "servant of Jesus Christ," says: "Beloved, when I gave all diligence to write unto you, and exhort you that ye SHOULD EARNESTLY CONTEND FOR THE FAITH which was once delivered unto the saints." "Contend for the faith:" How suggestive the expression! The Apostle in looking down the vista of time, amid the perils of the last hours of this age, saw the antagonistic principle of Truth and Error arrayed in close combat, and hence his admonition to the soldier of the cross. If not before, we have now reached a crisis where we can determine the necessity of the Apostle's exhortation. The people of God are compassed with dangers, and the combat deepens. Trials always test the valor and faith of the Christian; and it is by these that many stumble and fall: still the Holy One of Israel has declared he would have a "tried people." Jude, by the prophetic Spirit, saw the Lord's children in conflict with the enemies of Truth—he saw them in violent rencounter with the powers of darkness, the beast and his image, and in addition to this outward pressure, he saw traitors and cowards in their ranks, "spots in their feasts of charity," so he cheers them on to the contest and says, "Contend for the Faith."

The man who can breast opposition in a Christ-like spirit, who can stand the shock of attack without beating an inglorious retreat, such an one is morally brave, and for him there awaits a "crown of rejoicing." The words of the Savior are, "He that endureth to the end, the same shall be saved." And again, "Strive (i. e., agonize, or strain every nerve,) to enter in at the strait gate." Says Paul, "I press toward the mark." And he exhorts the church to "Fight the good fight of faith;" "Work out your own salvation with fear and trembling;" "So run that ye may obtain;" "Strive together for the Faith of the Gospel;" "Labor therefore to enter into that rest;" "Stand fast in the faith; quit you like men; be strong."

Letter From Brother Gibson.

DEAR BROTHER:—

I have been a reader of Dr. Thomas' works for the past twelve months, and revere his memory very highly in that said works have been the cause of dispelling from my mind many errors that are taught by orthodoxy, but cannot but think that his teaching is in error in regard to the resurrection. Do not the Scriptures teach two resurrections and one judgment, and that at the first resurrection the righteous only will have part. I cannot find any mention in Scripture that at the first resurrection there will be a judgment. Did we not have the revelation of the Spirit through St. John? In the revelations we should have no record to more than one resurrection and no testimony of their being one thousand years apart. I think that the RESTITUTION teaches that at the coming of our Savior that the righteous and the unprofitable servants will both be judged, if so are its teachings sustained by Scripture? Does not the whole of Scripture teaching on the subject teach in regard to the resurrection (that is the first) that all who have part in it shall die no more, and does it teach of judgment in relation to these? My impression is that the fact of their being accounted worthy to attain to it by being raised then will be a powerful judgment in their favor, and the only one as I can see by God's Word that they undergo.

Luke xx. 35. "But they which be accounted worthy to obtain that world and the resurrection from the dead, neither marry nor are given in marriage, (verse 36,) neither can they die any more, for they are equal unto the angels, and are the children of the resurrection." Rom. vi. 5. "For if we have been planted together in the likeness of his death, we shall be also in the likeness of his resurrection." Phil. iii. 11. "If by any means I might attain unto the resurrection of the dead." Rom. xx. 6. "Blessed and holy is he who hath part in the first resurrection, on such the second death hath no power. But they shall be priests of God and of Christ, and shall reign with him a thousand years." Rev. xx. 5. "And the rest of the dead lived not again until the thousand years were finished, this is the first resurrection." 28. John v. 28, 29. "Marvel not at this, for the hour is coming in the which all that are in their graves shall hear his voice and shall come forth, they that have done good unto the resurrection of life, and they that have done evil unto the resurrection of damnation." In the last two verses it will be observed that the hours named above, is one thousand years apart, between the resurrection of life and the resurrection of damnation. In Dan. xii. 1, 2, speaking of the time of the end,—"At that time thy people shall be delivered, every one that shall be found written in the books. And many of them that sleep in the dust of the earth shall awake, some to everlasting life, and some to shame and everlasting contempt." Here also between the awakening of each class one thousand years transpires, and upon the awaking of this latter class of those who have lived upon the earth previous to the millennium (that is the unrighteous) the judgment will then commence and not before, if I am not wrong in my views. To sustain my views further, that the judgment takes place only at the close of the thousand years, I will quote Rev. xx. 11, 13. "And I saw the dead small and great, (after the one thousand years) stand before God, and the books were opened, and another book was opened which is the book of life, (I suppose by the last book being called the book of life, it would contain the record of those upon whom immortal life will be conferred) and the dead were judged out of those things that were written in the books, according to their works, and the sea gave up the dead which are in it, and death and hell delivered up the dead which were in them, and they were judged every man according to his works."

Dear Brother: I have never seen these views advocated before. They appear to me to be Scriptural and if I am in error please let me hear from you either through your valuable paper or by letter, as I feel a great interest in understanding this subject. It is truth only and light that all those who are seeking the kingdom want that they be prepared for the coming of the King.

My prayer is that He may soon come.

Truly Yours in the one faith.

The Judgment of the Dead.

"Who shall judge the quick and the dead at his appearing and kingdom." 2 Tim. 4. 1.

The penalty of the law given to Adam was death. "Thou shalt surely die." The first punishment under the gospel was death. "In sorrow, and in the sweat of thy face shalt thou eat bread, till thou return to the ground; for out of it wast thou taken; for dust thou art and unto dust shalt thou return." Adam was excluded from the tree of life lest he should eat of it and live forever. "And all the days that Adam lived were 930 years, and he died." This is the death that has passed upon all men. "Wherefore, as by one man sin entered into the world, and death by sin; and so death passed upon all men, for that all have sinned.

This accounts for all the death that will ever occur in this world. If no provision had been made in the gospel to save man from death, no further notice would have been taken of the dead. There would have been no need of the judgment of the dead. But Christ died for all, because all were dead. He died to save men from death. He said, "For God so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son to die for it, that whosoever believeth on him, should not perish, but have everlasting life," and be raised up at the last day.

This office of life, from the dead, to those who believe in Christ, removes the certainty that the first appointed death will be final to all; and puts those to whom the offer is made on a second trial, a probation. The object of this trial is to save men from being lost in death, by a resurrection from the dead. "He that believeth on the Son shall not perish, but shall have everlasting life, and I will raise him up at the last day." Under this offer of life from the dead, men have lived and died. Some have complied with the conditions of life from the dead, and some have not. They lie together in the grave; their worthiness or unworthiness is not known. This condition of the dead, and the promise that those who shall be accounted worthy, shall be raised up, render it necessary that the dead should be judged. When the Lord comes he will come to the living world. The world that has passed away will be dead. He will come to judge the living and the dead, but he will first

JUDGE THE DEAD.

"And he commanded us to preach unto the people, and to testify that it is he which was ordained of God to be the judge of the quick and the dead." Acts, x. 42. The living are one class to be judged. They are those who have not died. The dead are another class to be judged, they are those who have died. Again: "I charge thee therefore before God, and the Lord Jesus Christ, who shall judge the quick, and the dead at his appearing and kingdom."

These are the same two classes to be judged, the living and the dead. And again the same fact is stated in Rev. xi. 19. "And the nations were angry, and thy wrath is come, and the time that the dead should be judged, and that thou shouldst give reward unto thy servants, the prophets, and to the saints, and to them that fear thy name small and great." Here are the living nations to be judged, and here are the dead to be judged, and then rewarded. Then, there will be a judgment of the dead in distinction from the judgment of the living world.

2. THE DEAD WILL BE JUDGED WHILE THEY ARE DEAD.

They cannot be judged at any other time. The conditions of the resurrection require this. If we are Christ's we shall not be lost in death, but we shall be raised up at the last day. If we believe in him we shall not perish but have everlasting life, and be raised up at the last day. If we are taught of God and come to Christ, we shall be raised up at the last day. If we eat his flesh and drink his blood, we shall have eternal life, and be raised up at the last day. John vi. 39. 49. 44. 54. If the spirit of God dwell in us while we live, our mortal bodies will be quickened. If we have the first fruits of the spirit, our bodies will be redeemed. Rom. viii. 11.23. If we strive to attain unto the resurrection of the dead as Paul did, we shall attain unto it. If our conversation is in heaven, from whence also we look for the Savior, our vile bodies will be fashioned like unto his glorious body. Phil. iii. 11. 12. If we sleep in Jesus, we shall be raised from the dead. If we are included in the harvest of which Christ is the first fruits, we shall be made alive at his coming. If we are found worthy to obtain that world and the resurrection from the dead, we shall be made like the angels, so that we can die no more. Luke xx. 36. These assurances of being raised from the dead, all depend upon the conditions specified. If these conditions have not been complied with, the dead will not be raised up at the last day. The judgment of the dead determines who have complied with these conditions, and their resurrection is the award of this judgment. The judgment must precede the resurrection, for only such as are found worthy to be raised, will be raised up. The dead will not be raised up to be judged, but they will be judged in order to raise up such as shall be worthy of a resurrection. The decisions of this judgment will be according to the conditions of our probation. "He that believeth on the Son shall have everlasting life, and I will raise him up at the last day. He that believeth not the Son shall not see life, but the life of God shall abide on him." That the dead, then, will be judged previous to the resurrection of the dead, is an unavoidable conclusion.

3. THE AWARD OF THE JUDGMENT OF THE DEAD.

The Lord himself will descend from heaven; he will stop in the region of the clouds, before his feet shall stand upon the earth, and while there he will judge the dead by the word which he had spoken, or endorsed while in the flesh. He looks over the dead of all nations. He remembers the words by which they were to be judged in the last day. He may be supposed to repeat the words which have been spoken, and apply them to the dead before him, as follows: "Man that is in honor and understandeth not, is like the beasts that perish," they shall never see light; but God will redeem the righteous from the power of the grave. Ps. xlix. 12. 20. "The man that wandereth out of the way of understanding shall remain in the congregation of the dead." Prov. xxi. 16. The wicked are dead, they shall not live, they are deceased they shall not rise, but the righteous shall live, "together with my dead body shall they arise." Isa. xxvi. 14. 19. The saints are preserved forever, but the wicked have passed away; and, lo, he was not, yea, I sought him, but he could not be found. Ps. xxxvii. 28. 36. "He that believeth on the Son hath everlasting life, and he that believeth not on the Son shall not see life, but the wrath of God abideth on him." John iii. 36. "This is the will of the Father, that of all which he hath given me I should lose nothing, but should raise it up at the last day. Not to be raised up at the last day is to be lost. John vi. 39. My Father hath given me power over all flesh, that I might give eternal life to as many as he hath given me. John xvii. 2. And this is the will of God, that every one that believeth on the Son might have everlasting life, and I will raise him up at the last day. John vi. 40. Finally, all the dead of whom Christ is the first fruits, all who are accounted worthy of the resurrection from the dead, will be made alive at his coming, and be caught up in the clouds to meet the Lord in the air, and so shall they ever be with the Lord. But all who have not become Christ's and who do not belong to the harvest of which Christ is the first fruits; all who are not accounted worthy of the resurrection, will not be raised from the dead, they are perished, they are lost, they have passed away, so as to never see light or life. This judgment will be passed upon the dead while the Lord is in the air, before the saints are raised up, and before his feet will stand upon the earth.

4. THE AWARDS OF THIS JUDGMENT WILL BE FINAL.

The judgments of the Lord are true and righteous altogether. Ps. xix. 9. Therefore they will never need to be changed. If the judgment of the righteous is final,—which none deny—the judgment of the wicked also will be final, for the judgment of both classes is at the same time, and by the same authority. If to have everlasting life is a final judgment; not to see life is equally final. Those who will not be worthy of a resurrection at the time of this judgment, never can become worthy of it. "For there is no work, nor device, nor" knowledge, nor wisdom, in the grave where they lie. Eccl. ix. 10. God is immutable, therefore his judgments in the judgment of the dead, will be final to both classes. Then in this judgment will be determined the destinies of all who have died before the coming of the Lord. The decisions are obviously just. Every man is judged according to his works. All who are found worthy to live, will be raised from the dead, and live forever. And all who are not found worthy to live will not be made alive, but remain under the sentence of death which has passed upon all men. Without the resurrection they are perished, they are lost, they have returned to dust, so as to be as though they had not been.

RECAPITULATION.

1. The dead will be judged while they are dead, at the appearing of Christ, by the word which he had spoken or endorsed while in the flesh.

2. All who have complied with the conditions of the resurrection, being worthy of it, will be raised from the dead at the last day, to live forever. But those who have not complied with the conditions of the resurrection, not being worthy of it, will not be raised from the dead at the last day, but will remain under the sentence of death which has passed upon all men, as they would have done if no resurrection from the dead had been offered to sinners.

3. The awards of this judgment are true and righteous altogether, and are therefore final. They will never need to be changed, therefore the judgment of the same dead will never need to be repeated.

Life in the Holy Land.

Extract from a letter received from the Rev. F. S. De Haas, U. S. Consul to Jerusalem, by Francis P. Harper, N. Y.

We enjoy our new position and home very much. Nothing could be more charming than life in this sacred land. Near this all the great events in the history of the world transpired. Here all the patriarchs lived, died, and are buried; here our blessed Lord redeemed us from the curse of sin, and secured our glorious resurrection by his victory over death. The whole country seems to breathe an inspiration. You never tire visiting the holy places. We live on the very summit of Mount Zion, and scarcely a day passes without our seeing the place where Christ was crucified, and the garden of his agony, or mount of his ascension, and yet the desire to see and visit these places increases with every fresh sight and visit. You can sit under one of the old olive trees in Gethsemane for hours without growing weary, and then will leave reluctantantly. So when you stroll down the Kedron, or over Olivet to Bethany, the mind becomes so absorbed in contemplation you forget everything present and only live in the past. What glorious living! From boyhood I have been singing in my heart, "Could I but stand where Moses stood." Last week I visited that sacred spot, spent the Sabbath on the top of Pisgah, and preached on Nebo! To describe my feelings would be impossible. The dream of my life was realized, I was standing on the very rock where the Almighty and his servant Moses once stood. The grandeur of the scenery was appropriate, and I felt like exclaiming: "Now, Lord, lettest thou thy servant depart in peace, for I have seen thy salvation." One night we camped at the ford of the Jabboth, where Jacob so gloriously prevailed with God, another at Zoar, to which Lot fled on the destruction of Sodom. We encircled entirely the Dead Sea; so, for a whole week, were 1320 feet below the level of the ocean, the lowest spot on the globe. The salt and sulphur formations here are wonderful—I can't describe them. Mrs. Lot is still standing a pillar of salt. The Arabs call her Ben Sheik's Lot. But I must close.

A SPIRITUAL FRAUD. A woman calling herself a spiritual medium gave an exhibition at Providence a few evenings since, and among other feats lifted a large piano with several persons seated on it. The audience were almost converted to a belief in her super-natural gifts, when a well-known citizen stepped upon the stage, and, announcing that he had discovered her secret, proceeded to repeat her "manifestations" one by one. He proved that the wonderful effects were attributed to purely physical causes, the medium being blessed with highly developed muscles. The entertainment ended with more abruptness than elegance.

Training for Dominion.

If there be no resurrection, and no future state of being for men,—MEN, we say, not "ghosts,"—Christianity is a delusion and faith is vain. In all generations the best people in the world have been the greatest sufferers; the most loyal to God have had the hardest lot on earth. Exceptional cases few and far between do but confirm the accuracy of this general statement. Let any intelligent man read—we do not say ecclesiastical history, for that awful field is too wide, but—the eleventh chapter in the epistle to the Hebrews, and ask himself calmly, seriously, "What does all this mean?" Here is a constellation of the devout, the holy, the God-fearing, the children of faith, and their experience is given in a series of graphic touches terribly suggestive of privation, suffering, and agony. Seen in the light of resurrection, and a future world of honor, dignity, and unfading splendor, the moral grandeur of this picture gallery of heaven's heroes is wonderfully imposing; but seen in the light of hard fact only, with the assumption that there is to be no return of the Lord Jesus, and consequently no rising from the dead of those who fell asleep trusting in Him, what can you make of it? Only this, the same that a clear thinker made of it eighteen centuries ago: "If there be no resurrection of the dead, then is Christ not risen; and if Christ be not risen, then is our preaching vain, and your faith is also vain. Yea, and we are found false witnesses of God, because we have testified of God that he raised up Christ; whom he raised not up, if so be that the dead rise not. For if the dead rise not, then is not Christ raised; and if Christ be not raised, your faith is vain; ye are yet in your sins. Then they also which are fallen asleep in Christ are perished.* If in this life only we have hope in Christ, we are of all men most miserable;" most to be pitied, as we have risked all upon the hope of resurrection when He who is "our life" shall return.

In the chapter refered to, we have this appalling summary of the sufferings of those renowned worthies: "They were tortured; had trial of cruel mockings and scourgings, yea, moreover, of bonds and imprisonment; they were stoned, they were sawn asunder, were tempted, were slain with the sword; they wandered about in sheepskins; being destitute, afflicted, tormented; . . . . . they wandered in deserts, and in mountains, and in dens and caves of the earth."

And there is a companion picture to this of the Hebrew confessors, representing the first witnesses of Christ. Let us glance at that, too: "For I think that God hath set forth us the apostles last, as it were appointed to death; for we are made a spectacle to the world, and to angels, and to men. We are fools,—weak—despised. Even unto this present hour we both hunger and thirst, and are naked, and buffetted, and have no certain dwelling-place; and labor working with our own hands; being reviled, we bless; being persecuted we suffer it; being defamed, we intreat; we are made as the filth of the world, and are the offscouring of all things unto this day." "In labors more abundant, in stripes above measure, in prisons more frequent; in deaths oft. Of the Jews five times received I forty stripes save one. Thrice was I beaten with rods, once was I stoned, thrice I suffered shipwreck, a night and a day I have been in the deep; in journeyings often, in perils of waters, in perils of robbers, in perils by mine own countrymen, in perils by the heathen, in perils in the city, in perils in the wilderness, in perils in the sea, in perils among false brethren; in weariness and painfulness, in watchings often, in hunger and thirst, in fastings often, in cold and nakedness."

As there is a righteous ruler of the universe, it cannot be that a world in which men suffer for righteousness' sake has as yet realized the purpose for which it was created. Nor is it possible for men who think logically from the attributes of a personal God to rest in the conclusion of philosophical scepticism that the doctrine of a future state is simply a sentimental dream; useful, perhaps, in its way, to the common people; but not to be admitted for a moment by the magnates of philosophy. Nor, after prolonged thought on the various aspects of the subject, can we see that the idea of equity—and surely that is a divine idea—is met by the theological assurance that the souls of the righteous are now enjoying perfect happiness in heaven. This doctrine, even if it were scriptural, which assuredly it is not, would necessitate some most puzzling questions; such, for example, as:—What is meant by falling asleep in Christ? What great object is to be attained by the promised resurrection of the righteous? How are the meek to inherit the earth, and to be recompensed therein? In what way are the saints to judge the world? What is the meaning of appointing one over five, and another over ten cities? Is there any intelligence at all in the words, "We shall reign on the earth?" Is "the kingdom under the whole heaven to be given to the saints of the Most High," a mere figure of speech without any corresponding reality to justify it or make it intelligible? Why did not Paul get the crown of righteousness from the righteous Judge when he died, instead of saying it was laid up for him until the appearing and the kingdom of his Lord? Such questions could be multiplied to any extent, and correct *answers to them would be simply im*possible either on the theory of philosophical scepticism, or on that of orthodox theology. God has not done with his witnesses and confessors when they die, as the former assumes; nor are they rewarded then in a disembodied condition, as the latter has so long taught. The sceptic who will not believe what is written, and the Christian who believes more than is revealed, are alike at fault, although in totally opposite directions; but the man who is neither unbelieving nor credulous, will find clear revelation for the faith that when the Lord comes those that sleep in Him shall be raised incorruptible, whilst the living saints shall be changed, and both shall be installed in such spheres of permanent dignity and authority as they were fitted for by the discipline of earth. Then it will be found emphatically true, that the "sufferings of this present time are not worthy to be compared with the glory which shall be revealed in us."—Rainbow.

*"Annihilate"—"perished;" utterly destroyed so as to be incapable of rising again; annihilated; one of the thousand passages which teach directly, or by obvious implication, that without resurrection there is no future life.

Declension in the Early Church.

As we pass from Paul to Clement, and from Clement to the Fathers that succeeded him, we find the Gospel becoming less of grace and more of merit. The light wanes as we travel down the patristic road, and remove ourselves from the apostolic dawn. It continues for some time at least to be the same Gospel, but its glory is shorn, its mighty force abated; and we are reminded of the change that seems to pass upon the sun, when, after contemplating Him in a tropical hemisphere, we see him in a northern sky, where his beams, having to force their way through mists and vapors, are robbed of half their splendor. Seen through the fogs of the patristic age, the Gospel scarcely looks the same which had burst upon the world without a cloud but a few centuries before. This disposition—that of making God less free in his gift, and man less dependent in the reception of it; the desire to introduce the element of merit on the side of man, and the element of condition on the side of God—operated at last to opening the door for the pagan principle to creep back into the church. A change of a deadly and subtle kind passed upon the worship. Instead of being the spontaneous thanksgiving and joy of the soul, that no more invoked or repaid the blessings which awaked that joy than the odors which the flowers exhale are the cause of their growth, or the joy that kindles in the heart of man when the sun rises is the cause of his rising—worship, we say, from being the expression of the soul's emotions, was changed into a rite, a rite akin to those of the Jewish temples and still more akin to those of the Greek mythology, a rite in which lay couched a certain amount of human merit and inherent efficacy that partly created, partly applied the blessing with which it stood connected. This was the moment when the pagan virus inoculated the Christian institution. This change brought back a multitude of others in its train. Worship being transformed into sacrifice—sacrifice in which was the element of expiation and purification—the "teaching ministry" was of course converted into a "sacrificing priesthood." When this had to be done, there was no retreating; a boundary had been reached which could not be recrossed till centuries had rolled away, and transformations of a more portentous kind than any which had yet taken place had passed upon the church.—J. A. Wylie, D. D.

World to Come.

We give our readers the following beautiful extract from a writer in the "Rainbow." After speaking briefly of the development theory of modern scientists he thus continues:—

We still believe in Genesis, and see with pleasure and joy of heart the dignified origin and position of our earthly head and father. Crowned with material and moral glories, he receives a dominion over all the world. There was royalty in his constitution, and he ascended the throne for which he was fitted by his nature. He was dethroned and disinherited, and a curse fell upon the visible for his sake. The thorns and the thistles have indeed grown rank in all the fields, natural and moral, incredible labor being demanded as the only method of preserving any order, or reaping any harvest of good. The rich and the poor sigh in common for the unattainable, the oppressed and the oppressor are equally miserable, and to human vision there is no visible goal where antagonisms may cease and conflicting elements in nature and society come into reconciliation. Such a termination is only known by those who have the secret of the Lord, for the eye of reason needs the telescope of faith. Our institutes after a kingdom of justice are worth considering in their place; but they are not strong enough to give unconquerable wings to hope. She requires the sure word of promise supported by oath to give strength to her pinions, and then she can rise exultingly. He, the Supreme One, has made known the secret of his will, that in the dispensation of the fullness of the times, all things in heaven and on earth shall be headed up in one; one Lord, one King, one kingdom. Creation is in birth pangs; all creatures sigh for the liberty of the glory which cometh at the manifestation of the sons of God. In the redemption of our body, we see the restoration of the royalty and the repeal of the malediction. Lo! the recovered paradise shines out with surpassing splendor and grace; most divinely fair, and more resplendent in beauty than any ancient garden for the childhood of humanity. And at last the true kings wear the purple and the golden crowns; the men who overcame the world and overcame themselves being trained for rule and glory by suffering and patience. God has not put under the angels the "world to come," but that stately and refulgent age deploys with open doors of life when the absent nobleman cometh in his kingdom, when the holy and mighty ones descend to the "valley of decision." Not alone by sure decree of divine will, but by the fitness of things, by essential righteousness, the saints take the kingdom. The miracles of our Lord and his Apostles were outflashings from the crowning age, "powers of the world to come," prophecies of the time, when man no longer will be the slave of earthly elements and brute forces, but shall recover his dignity and power, his inheritance and his kingdom. There are several things pressing upon us which undeniably show that we are getting close to the dark darkness; and when that closes in upon us, how near to the gates of salvation and the threshold of the higher life! In the trans-Atlantic domain, demoniacal forces are let loose, and have become rampant. In the old world, the great military powers are turning against the heavy sovereigns, and will have no more wine from her plagues. It is right enough to strike the iron into the heart of the ancient superstition; it must not, however, be denied that divine truths are as much ignored as medieval fooleries. The recoil of the human mind is from superstition to atheism.

The men of science and philosophy, so-called, are marching on to the desolate country where "No God!" is inscribed on the banners. And surely no moukish superstition could be more insane than that dreadful conclusion of the emancipated reason. It is, however, manifest that after the ten kings, inspired by an autocratic will, a greater force behind them, have made the whore desolate and burnt her with fire, we shall see atheism full-blown; the last and worst form of organized hostility to truth, righteousness, and God. According to the measure of life enjoyed, or according to the measure of faith in possession, some may pray to escape from the theatre of evil manifestation, and some to have valor and endurance in resisting all the terrors and subtleties of the time. But, blessed be God! because we know how the terrible drama finishes, and how sublimely the power comes into the field, which has no terror save to evil workers, but is redolent of love and life. In the well-grounded hope of a glorious conclusion, may we not prove, by exceeding dignity and purity, that we are breathing the fine air of a higher country, and catching the stately manners of the court and kingdom to which we belong.—G. Greenwell.

How the Millennium is to Come.

People think they see signs of promise in the movement of reform. They think to give the church a better shape, and the state a better government, and the world a freer Bible, and that thus the millennium will come. I have no confidence in any such hopes. I see more of promise in the disguised features of the time than in all those picks and patriotic urchins. The world is perhaps more wicked now than it has been since Noah's flood—considering the light which it rejects. And yet in this very darkness I read the promise of coming light. In this very misgiving, desperation and gloom, I see the argument for the speedy springing forth of glorious and unfading hopes, not as human reason calculates, but as God purposes. I behold in it the rapid winding up of the present dispensation to give place to that better state of things of which the Prophets all have spoken. Statesmen and churchmen see in it the unmistakable evidences of unprecedented changes, though they widely differ as to what those changes are to be.

I have read somewhere, in a very sagacious writer, that when happy changes are contemplated most people erroneously turn to the quarters of light for the signs of its approach. This has ever been man's mistake when looking for the fulfillment of God's great purposes, and is the mistake of many now. People are looking for the setting up of Christ's kingdom, and the introduction of millennial glory by reforming and regenerating present modes of effort and thought. But so it will not be. God's method of progress is to make darkness the way to light, death the prelude to life, despair the introduction to salvation, and corruption and confusion the road to order and glory. It is not in what seems hopeful, but in what seems gloomy and untoward, that we are to look for the signs of the speedy forthcoming of God's wonder-working goodness. It is the stirring upon the face of the dark waters that give prognostics of the breaking forth of light and life and beauty. The bursting glories of spring come directly out of the bleak winter. It is from the corrupting seed that we obtain the harvest. The darkest hour is said to be that which immediately precedes the day. The period most hopeful is that when the apparent motives for despondency are most overwhelming. The stress of the controversy between hope and fear always falls upon the eve of triumph. Those dim hours of dismay to the scattered followers of Christ at his crucifixion were but the preludes to the bringing in of light and immortality for man. The bloody persecutions under the Roman emperors which threatened the extinction of Christianity were the immediate precursors of its victory over even the throne of the Cæsars. And so the Scriptures teach that it will be in the ushering in of the great consummation. "The sun must darken, and the moon withhold her light, and then shall the Sun of righteousness arise with healing in his wings.—J. A. Seiss.

The All-Conquering Hand.

It is related that the Duke of Wellington once ordered an officer to undertake some duty which involved great personal peril. The officer did not shrink from the danger, but said to the Duke, "Let me, before I go, have one grasp of your all-conquering hand, and I can do it."

Confidence in a commander is a source of strength and a presage of victory. But how often is that confidence misplaced and betrayed. The greatest conquerors are doomed at last to defeat. No human hand can control the elements, resist adverse circumstances, or wage victorious warfare with death, the king of terrors and the terror of kings. The Duke of Wellington is dead. The hand that the officer desired to grasp has grown pale, pulseless, powerless, and has gone to mingle with the dust from which it came.

But, thanks be to God, the Christian warrior has an unconquerable leader, an all-conquering king. Born in lowliness, partaker of our nature, tempted in all points like as we are, persecuted, hated, despised, crucified, slain,—the Captain of our Salvation has been made perfect through suffering, and lives at God's right hand to save and succor those who seek his face.

His is an all-conquering hand. He has conquered sin and Satan, disease, palsy, leprosy, and all manner of infirmities; He has rebuked the winds, calmed the waves, walked upon the waters, raised the dead, entered the tomb, rent the rocks, burst the graves, abolished death and triumphed over every foe. His own right hand, and his holy arm hath gotten Him the victory.

He sends us to our work. Through storms and dangers, terrors and casualities, through the realms of desolation, and to the very gates of death and hell; but He bids us fear not, and offers us, to assure and strengthen our hearts, the grasp of his "all-conquering hand." He says, "Lo, I am with you alway, even to the end of the world."

With such a helper who can fear? With such an all-conquering hand, stretched forth to grasp, and clasp, and strengthen and sustain us, of what can we be afraid? Danger is safety, sorrow is joy, labor is rest, and conflict is peace, while we can feel the clasp of his all-conquering hand. His commands are not grievous. His yoke is easy. His warfare ends in victory, and if He calls us to lead a forlorn hope, to rush into the face of death itself, let us plead only for the grasp of his hand, and then go forth to do his high commands.

We shall never do his work unaided,—we shall never ask his help in vain. The soul that trusts in Him has a shield and buckler, a rock of refuge, and a tower of strength. And to the weakest and the faintest of his servants He says, "Be of good cheer." "Fear thou not; for I am with thee; yea, I will strengthen thee; be not dismayed; for I am thy God: I will strengthen thee; yea, I will help thee; yea, I will uphold thee with the right hand of my righteousness." Isa. xli. 10.—Sel.

The Reign of Christ.

That Christ is to reign in some sense on the earth, is perhaps admitted by all who believe that He is the Savior of man. Some suppose that He has been reigning spiritually, or rather, mystically ever since He left the earth. In the same sense it is supposed by many, that He will reign in the future.

But why should not Christ's reign be literal and personal. Reason does not oppose it. It is as reasonable that He should reign personally, as that He should reign at all. It is as reasonable that He should so reign, as that Adam or any of his posterity should reign personally. The Bible does not oppose it. Every thing we find in the Bible relating to Christ's reign, goes to show that He is to reign in a literal sense. Christ as the Savior, is a personal being. The Lord told David, that "of the fruit of his loins, according to the flesh, he would raise up Christ to sit on his throne." Acts ii. 30. "Unto us a child is born, unto us a son is given; and the government shall be upon his shoulders, ... upon the throne of David, and upon his kingdom to order it, and to establish it with judgment." Isa ix. 6, 7. "Behold the days come, saith the Lord, that I will raise unto David a righteous Branch, and a King shall reign and prosper, and shall execute judgment and justice in the earth." Jer. xxv. 5. "He shall be great and shall be called the Son of the Highest, and the Lord God shall give unto him the throne of his father David, . . . and of his kingdom there shall be no end. Luke i. 32, 33. "Of this man's seed hath God, according to his promise, raised unto Israel a Savior, Jesus." Acts xiii. 23. "Christ our Lord which was made of the seed of David according to the flesh." Rom. i. 3, 4. "Jesus Christ of the seed of David raised from the dead." 2 Tim. ii. 8. "He not took on him the nature of angels, but he took on him the seed of Abraham." Heb. ii. 16.

Christ then, as the seed or son of David, is to reign. As the son of David He was born to be King. He lived, died, and rose from the dead personally, as David's son. As David's son He is at the right hand of the Father; gone away to receive for Himself a kingdom, and to return to set up his kingdom on the earth, to reign from sea to sea and from the river to the ends of the earth. There is nothing mystical in all this. Why should we not receive it as we have it stated? Christ is the last Adam. The first Adam was personal, and his dominion literal. So will it be of the last Adam. As sure as Christ was born David's son, so sure will He reign David's son; and of his kingdom there will be no end.—Sel.

The Journey's End.

We have read of the caravans of pilgrims, who after months of weary travel, approach the Holy City. They have been drenched by storms, burned by blazing suns, pinched with hunger, and choked with the dust of the desert.—Their shoes are worn out, their garments soiled, and their tottering limbs can hardly sustain their steps. Through days of suffering, and nights of sleeplessness, and constantly assailed by merciless foes, they have toiled along, until now they approach the end of their pilgrimage.

The sun, breaking through the clouds of a lurid day, is just sinking behind the hills of Lebanon. The pilgrims ascend an eminence, and lo, Jerusalem is before them! Its turrets, towers, pinnacles, and domes all blaze in golden splendor, reflecting the rays of the setting sun. A scene of almost supernatural enthusiasm ensues.

"Jerusalem, Jerusalem!" is shouted from hot and blistering lips. "Jerusalem, Jerusalem!" is re-echoed through the long lines of the rear. The lame, the fainting, the dying, are animated with new life, as they rush forward to catch a glimpse of that sacred city where the Savior bled and died.

Tears gush from all eyes. Some overwhelmed with joyous emotion, prostrate themselves upon the ground, and breathe a silent prayer of gratitude and thanksgiving. Some throw their arms into the air, and shout wildly in the outburstings of their rapture, "Hallelujah!" All past fatigues, perils, sufferings, are forgotten. The pilgrimage is ended, their goal is gained.

But O, when the pilgrim of earth, weary of the long, painful, perilous journey, arrives within sight of the celestial city,—a sight so brilliant that no mortal eye can look upon it,—as he gazes upon the splendor of the metropolis of God's empire, and listens to its choirs, and knows that in this city the Savior has a mansion prepared for him, with robe and harp and crown, and that there he shall repose in peace forever, can language tell his joy? The imagination sinks exhausted in the vain attempt to compass such blessedness.

Prayer.

Prayer does not consist in empty compliments to God, or fulsome eulogies to the Almighty. Many who ought to know better, seem to think so. They spend half the time devoted to public prayer in complimenting the Divine Being—telling Him how grand, sublime and glorious He is in his perfections. Instead of confession, intercession, supplication and giving of thanks, there arises as a stench in the nostrils of the Almighty, a round of fulsome eulogies from sinners. Instead of praying for the people and to God, they pray at the people, and from God.

Prayer does not consist in exhortation. Some people's prayers consist of these two parts: First, heavy and turbid compliments to God. Second, vapid, verbose exhortations to the people. The people are invited to prayer, and instead of hearing and uniting in sending up the voice of supplication, their ears are berated with hortatory exclamations and appeals. We have heard preachers spend one-half the five minutes some of them devote to prayer in this kind of exercise. It is not prayer. Don't know what to call it. Thousands of hungry hearts turn away from such nature, empty and dissatisfied. "Ye ask and receive not, because ye ask amiss."

EDITORIAL DEPARTMENT.

A Plea for the Body.

We are told that the body is not of much account. It is called the "mortal coil," the "tenement of clay" and the "soul's house." It, is condemned and abused, it is blamed for all the mischief done, and is to be deserted at death, while the soul is going forth on wings of light to realms of bliss, forever free from its cumbersome clay. Now all this may do for the poets who write much nonsense and for theologians who wish to amuse the people with their theories of mysticism. But science and the Bible, nature and common sense, show us that all such notions about the body are mere fancies. All men have bodies, and the whole career of man in life depends upon his body. Without a sound nervous system there can be no mind. Without muscle there can be no endurance. The hand that writes, the tongue that talks, the lungs that breathe and the brain that thinks are all physical and belong to the body. During the ages of superstition certain philosophers vied with each other in torturing their bodies, claiming that the imprisoned souls rejoiced over their calamities, but as Christianity dawned upon these benighted men, they learned to respect the body as a necessary part of the real man.

When God made man He gave him a body. When rewards were promised or punishments threatened the body was included in the joy or the pain. Even the death of Christ was in body, and the resurrection contemplates the change of this "mortal body" to be made like unto the glorious body of our risen Lord. It is sown a natural body, and is to be raised a spiritual body. Indeed the Bible offers neither rewards nor punishments to men without bodies. All this talk so flippantly made about an immortal soul which has no eyes, no body, no parts, and which occupies neither space nor place, may do for those who deal in mere fancies, but when we talk about the crown of life, the kingdom of God, the inheritance, and the holy city, we must conclude that the Bible idea is the only rational one which treats man as a real being, and that he will have a real existence in the hereafter. Let us then with Isaiah hope in the re-living of the dead, and rejoice with the same enthusiasm which placed him, in vision, amid the scenes and joys of immortality—"Thy dead men shall live, together with my DEAD BODY shall they arise. Awake and sing, ye that dwell in the dust; for thy dew is as the dew of herbs, and the earth shall cast out the dead." Isa. xxvi. 19.

Our affections, our friendships, and indeed all our ideas, bounded by human experience, are connected with the human form, which was made in the image of God. Any theory, therefore, which ignores the body and offers man life and joy without it, is unfounded, and contrary to the true science of our being.

The Great White Throne.

"And I saw a great white throne, and him that sat on it, from whose face the earth and the heaven fled away; and no place was found for them."—Rev. xx. 11

What a scene of sublimity is here. The great white throne emblemizes Power, Justice and Dominion. God will take to Himself his great power, will establish justice and set up his everlasting kingdom.

The word white is also used to denote purity. We have the great multitude in robes of white, the white stone, in which is written the new name, the white cloud, on which is seated the Son of Man, with the shining sickle, and the last of the seven trumpeters in the spotless linen sounds the grand consummation: The kingdoms of this world are become the kingdoms of our Lord and of his Christ, " " " and the time of the dead" is then ushered in.

When the white throne is established, the old heavens and the old earth are to flee away, sin's rule shall end, wickedness shall cease and man's empire shall be no more. They shrink back from the awful presence of Him who sits upon the throne. The sea labors through all her depths, and the dead are cast upon the shore, the graves are unsealed; the bars are broken and the prisoners come forth. Death gives up his crown, his reign is over. The resurrection takes away his subjects and his dominion comes to a final end.

What a multitude stand before the throne. The small and great are there. The king and his subject, the master and his slave, the rich and poor, Jew and Gentile, the old and young.

This scene of judgment, of the passing away of sin and death, and the removal of the old heavens and the old earth is not compressed within an hour or a day, but reaches over the grand period of the white throne dispensation: It more directly points to that age which lies between the close of the one thousand years and the finished work of the new heavens and the new earth. During this sublime epoch the books are opened and the multitudes of the dead from land and sea are judged. The books are opened! Momentous issues hang upon the sentence of Him who sits upon the throne. But, thank Heaven, another book is opened—the book of life. Mercy, Pardon and Redemption gleam in golden letters on its pages. Angel hands have written therein the names of the noble of earth: and now will come the blessed results hoped for in the days of their sorrow. The old things shall pass away, but the throne shall remain. The dead are judged and the rewards are given. The lake of fire bearing on its burning waves death and hell, shall pass with the scenes of time. The night shall be no more; pains end with the night, weeping and death shall cease when the voice from heaven cries IT IS DONE. The work is finished, the tabernacle of God shall be with men, and his glory shall fill the earth as the waves fill the sea. Redemption shall be complete, and the great multitude shall sing Redemption's song beyond the weeping and the dying when "there shall be no more curse."

Doubting Castle Invaded.

We notice that the RESTITUTION, a paper patronized by a portion of those who believe in probation after the Lord comes, has lately changed hands, and is now removed from Chicago to Plymouth, Ind. A publishing company has been organized in Indiana to whom the paper has been sold. Elder H. V. Reed is its present editor. The RESTITUTION is one of our exchanges, and we find many excellent things in it concerning the present age, but when it treats of the age to come we are filled with righteous doubts.—A. C. Times.

That the editor of the "Times" is filled with doubts we do not question, but that his doubts are righteous is quite another thing. If his doubts are righteous, then it follows that the "age to come" of which he speaks is wrong, but if it should turn out that they are just the editor's doubts, and not founded on the Word of God, then we may yet have faith in what Brother Burr would call "heresy." Perhaps it may not be amiss in this connection to let another speak who had no doubts whatever upon the subject: "Yet have I set my KING upon my HOLY HILL OF ZION. I will declare the decree; the LORD hath said unto me, THOU ART MY SON, this day have I begotten thee. Ask of me and I will give thee the HEATHEN for thine INHERITANCE and the UTTERMOST PARTS OF THE EARTH for thy POSSESSION. Thou shalt BREAK them with a rod of IRON; thou shalt dash them in pieces like a potter's vessel. Be WISE now therefore, O YE KINGS: be INSTRUCTED ye JUDGES of the earth. SERVE the Lord with fear and REJOICE with trembling. Kiss the Son lest he be angry and ye perish from the way, when his wrath is kindled but a little. BLESSED ARE ALL THEY THAT PUT THEIR TRUST IN HIM." Psa. ii. 6-12.

That the nations of the earth will conform to this decree of Jehovah and yield obedience to his Son who will reign in Mount Zion and in Jerusalem, after their power has been broken by the rod of iron, is evident from the song which the victors sing, after they stand on the sea of glass. Now as Brother Burr expects to stand upon that mirrored sea, we will let the Bible tell us what shall then be sung. Hear it oh ye doubting children of earth. "And they sing the song of Moses, the servant of God, and the song of the Lamb, saying Great and marvellous are thy works, Lord God Almighty, just and true are thy ways, thou King of nations. Who shall not fear thee, O Lord and glorify thy name? for thou only art holy: FOR ALL NATIONS SHALL COME AND WORSHIP BEFORE THEE, for thy judgments are made manifest." Rev. xiii. 3, 4. Now as Brother B. expects to sing that most sublime anthem we would suggest in all kindness that he certainly ought to believe now what he shall sing then. "Be not faithless but believing."

The Better Thing.

"These all having obtained a good report through faith received not the promise, God having provided some better thing for us that they without us should not be made perfect."—Heb. xi. 39, 40.

The Scriptures present many things to us by way of contrast. Things temporal are brought out in contrast with things eternal, the mortal with the immortal, and the suffering with the reigning. We have Moses and Christ—the old covenant and the new covenant. The inheritance under the law and the inheritance under the Gospel. The dispensation of Moses was the age of temporal blessings; the promises under the Gospel pertain to blessings which are eternal. Hence, says the Apostle, "The things which are seen are temporal, but the things which not seen are eternal."

Keeping in view the foregoing facts we see a volume of meaning in the better things mentioned in connection with the Gospel and its promise. Christ is presented to us as a better sacrifice, to confirm a "better covenant" which was established upon "better promises." And this prepared the way for the bringing in of the "better hope" which reaches forward to "a better and enduring substance," and points us to the "better country" which is to be obtained by a "better resurrection." These are the better things to which the Apostle alludes in the conclusion of this celebrated chapter to the Hebrew brethren. The realization of all these blessed promises will not take place until the saints are all brought out and made joint heirs with Christ. Then will all the redeemed be "glorified together," or as the Apostle says: "They without us will not be made perfect." The whole body of saints, including patriarchs, prophets, apostles and martyrs will all come forth in the morning of the millennial day and be crowned victors over death and the grave. Glorious prospect for those who are bearing the emblems of faith and hope in the valley of death, that they may reach the unfading laurels of that better country and share with the King his crown and throne.

New Publication.

THE TRUTH is the name of a new monthly just started in St. Louis. It is published by Chas. B. Cox, and edited by James H. Brookes. Dr. Brookes is a Presbyterian clergyman of eminence and a strong believer, if we mistake not, in the pre-millenial coming of our Lord. In his introductory article the editor says:

We shall also strive to comfort doubting and desponding Christians by leading them into the assurance of their acceptance, not through the fancied discovery of some goodness in themselves, but through belief of God's testimony; urging them to a higher practical holiness by walking in the light of unclouded fellowship with the Father and his Son, and by "looking for that blessed hope, and the glorious appearing of the great God and our Savior Jesus Christ." Titus ii. 13. As it is our aim to encourage diligent and devout study of the Word of life, brief and plain expositions of Scripture will be given, with special reference to the elucidation of passages commonly regarded as obscure.

From the above it would appear that this new advocate will take advanced ground on the questions of Biblical criticism and the hope of Messiah's coming. Parties wishing specimen numbers can address the publisher, No. 212 North Fifth Street, St. Louis.

☞ The outlook for the RESTITUTION seems to be very encouraging. We have added over forty new subscribers to our list in the last ten days. Let every subscriber get at least one new name for 1875. There are a number of brethren who are not readers of the paper, and we hope to put their names on our list soon.

Personal Items.

Brother J. M. Stephenson is now laboring in Lanark, Ill., and will attend the Conference at Antioch next week. He informs us that he expects to spend a part of the winter in Canada.

Brother A. F. Dugger has given up the Seventh-Day theory, and is now proclaiming the Gospel of Christ as God's way of life to the Gentiles. We hope to hear from him occasionally.

Brother Amos Sunford of Columbus, Kansas, has just closed a very interesting debate at his place with a spiritualist. He writes that a deep interest was awakened in the community, and a better feeling toward the truth prevails among the people.

Brother F. H. Berrick will spend the winter at Lansing, Mich., having been elected to the State Senate from his District, on the Independent Ticket. While there he will have an excellent opportunity to preach the Gospel to Cesar's household.

☞ Brethren in making remittances for the RESTITUTION will please bear in mind that the postage for 1875, must be prepaid. The amount is only twenty cents for each subscriber. Please remember this item brethren as it will be too much of a burden on us to pay it all.

☞ We have on hand a number of articles on different subjects which we have not yet had time to read. Our contributors will be patient with us, as we have much necessary work on hand which must be attended to first.

The Present Outlook.

COMING EVENTS CAST THEIR SHADOWS BEFORE.

"Men's hearts failing them for fear, and for looking after those things which are coming on the earth."—Luke xxi. 26.

It needs no demonstration to convince the attentive observer of human affairs that feverish disquietude, perplexing anxiety, and fearful foreboding, are taking a deep hold of the public mind. Those that best understand the tendencies of the age, and the workings of all the antagonizing forces that are undermining the very foundations of every existing social compact, are predicting a volcanic outbreak in the comparatively near future. Without minutely specifying every indication that leads to this conclusion, we content ourselves with calling attention to some of the more marked signs of the times.

Republicanism and monarchical institutions are not only occupying a threatening attitude toward each other, but already grapple in exterminating, internecine conflict. Thrones, that seemed settled on foundations as stable as the granite basements of the everlasting hills, are toppling over as the grand swell of revolution rocks beneath. Royalty and aristocracy are becoming loathsome, intolerable nuisances to the over burdened, down trodden masses, who clamorously cry out for a new order of things. The statesman stands aghast as he contemplates the murky foldings of the gathering warcloud, surcharged with all the elements of destructive fury, that is just ready to burst upon the world. With telescopic out-looking he endeavors to descry visions of peace and rest beyond the earthquake shock of a universal war. Labor and capital occupy hostile positions, and each is marshaling its forces for a contest that will prove the ruin of both, a strife in which the "combatants will tear each other in pieces," as tersely expressed by Hyacinthe. The great ecclesiastical despotism that, in ages past, has trampled upon royalty and commonalty alike, that has established its usurpations and proved its absurd and foolish dogmas by the ultimately convincing arguments of dungeon, rack, and fire, is now abandoned by all the great forgers of her chains and executors of her inquisitorial wrath. The Franco-German war called away the last guard furnished by European kingcraft, and deprived of the sustaining bayonets of Napoleon, a hand too strong to resist seized the crown and sceptre, and mounted the throne of the Eternal City. But she has millions of superstitious devotees obsequiously ready to do her bidding. Could she obtain control of one of the leading governments of Europe, that would aid and abet her claims to temporal power, she could easily swell the numbers of an armed force to overwhelming proportions. Were France, for instance, to pledge the restoration of the temporal power, how readily her faithful adherents of every nationality would be to enlist for its accomplishment; and not for the accomplishment of this alone, but for the overthrow of Protestant Germany, which France hates for political reasons, and ecclesiastical Rome for reasons both political and spiritual. To thwart such combinations taxes astute diplomacy to the utmost. A war when such issues are at stake would involve all Europe. That a war, intensified with religious animosities superadded to long-treasured political hates, is imminent, is conceded by those who occupy a standpoint from whence they can discern the unfoldings of coming events.

The Eastern question, too, is becoming one of alarming significance to the governments of Europe. To maintain the "balance of power" has long been a difficult affair, and every complication of political relations between existing powers serves only to make it still more embarrassing. When France and Prussia were involved in the late war, Russia gave official notice that she would be no longer bound by the stipulations of the "Treaty of Paris," which excluded her fleets from the Black Sea; and no one of the great powers was in a position to enter a protest. Now comes the announcement that Austria declares her intention to treat with the Danubian Provinces independent of any connection with the Sublime Porte—Provinces that were specially made dependent by the articles of the Treaty. Surely the days of the Moslem in Europe are about numbered, and Russia is making rapid strides toward grasping the long coveted prize—the Dardanelles and Constantinople. What will result from all the commotions about to convulse the world, is the question asked but not answered by human sagacity. The sure word of prophecy discloses beyond the present abnormal, restless, dissatisfied condition of human society, a restitution of all things. For that we labor, wait, and pray.

S. A. C.

Spiritualism.

Dr. Geo. M. Beard, of New York, has recently given a lecture upon the subject of Spiritualism, in which he takes very strong grounds against the whole system. Dr. B. is a man of science, has given much attention to the subject, and is fully in earnest. Among other things he says:—

All the phenomena embraced under clairvoyance, mind-reading, and Spiritualism, so-called, may be accounted for by one or several of the following six facts:

First.—Trickery. Most of the trickery is of a cheap, vulgar, and transparent character; in no way to be compared with that of Houdin or other great magicians.

Second.—Guess-work or coincidences. Guess-work is both a science and an art, and much of the success of clairvoyants depends upon the mastery of this art, and the skillful use which they make of coincidences which happen to us all in every-day life.

Third.—Unconscious mental action.

Fourth.—Unconscious muscular action. These two facts, either singly or in combination, explain the marvels of planchette, table-tipping, mind-reading, as practiced by Brown, spiritualistic tricksters, and many amateurs. Those who have not looked into this subject will be surprised to find how many of these marvels can be explained by unconscious muscular action and unconscious mental action.

Fifth.—Physiological idiosyncracies. Under this head comes the peculiar flexibility of many persons, as the Davenport brothers, the Eddys, and their imitators, who can make their hands smaller than their wrists, and thus slip out of handcuffs and ropes.

Sixth.—Phenomena of trance, erroneously called animal magnetism. A passive state of the mind very easily excited in some persons and closely allied with somnambulism and certain types of hysteria. In this state there may be great exaltation of special faculties; but no new faculties appear any more than they appear in insanity, or sleep, or hysteria.

Assuming the justice of the above explanations, it is clear enough that no one but a physiologist or practical physician, or one who has made himself an expert in physiology or diseases of the nervous system, is capable of scientifically studying these phenomena.

A CHALLENGE.

In closing, the lecturer gave the following challenge: If there is anywhere on the globe any member of the human race who professes to have any clairvoyant, mind-reading, or second-sight power, or to be a medium through whom spirits of the departed manifest themselves to us by signs that are appreciated by the senses, or to be endowed with any new or unknown force, and he will come to New York and allow me the same opportunity for investigating his claims that I am accustomed to have in investigating other and allied questions, I will prove surely and speedily that he does not possess any such power in any degree.

Calmly and deliberately and with a full sense of its importance, I offer it to the world. The day is coming when scholarship and science must array themselves on one side or the other of a mighty superstition, and I earnestly call upon the members of my profession, and especially those who are experienced in the study of the nervous system, to give somewhat of their time and force, as the need shall arise, to the arrest of this tide of folly.

Thy Kingdom Come.

This is the cry of a pilgrim church. It has arisen alike from the city and the wilderness—from the vineyard and the desert. It has gone up from martyr fires and beds of suffering. It has been wailed out over the dying and the dead, but still the prayer remains unanswered. The golden wheels seem to tarry and the coming King to wait.

The old earth moves on her way. The curse still lingers on her landscapes and sin walks her streets in gold and purple. Science has flashed her light into the darkness, she has refined and polished the baser metals, and her devotees imagine they are turned to gold. She has fertilized the soil and they dream that she can yet remove the curse. She has girdled the earth with iron and sent her strange whispers under the sea, but crime laughs at her achievements, and avails itself of her success. Moral reformers have agitated the great whirlpool, dreaming that purity may be found in its depths. They have changed laws and mustered armies, they have canvassed parliaments and legislative halls. They have stood in the forum and the pulpit, calling upon men to set up the standard of right and unfurl the banner of truth. But human evil is too strong for man's unaided arm, and the tide of sin sweeps on unchecked. Crime ignores the pleadings of humanity and justice waits in vain for recognition even in her own halls. There are cries of peace and safety, while peace is taking her flight and safety is found only in obscurity.

There is only one remedy for sin, and that is the cross—only one bright solution of earth's problems, and that is a kingdom of righteousness and peace. Six thousand years of toil and sin and suffering have rolled away and still the church waits. God's little ones are crying "How long, O Lord, holy and true." The petition "Thy kingdom come" still arises from earnest, aching hearts. The answer has been long delayed but it will come in God's own time. Not one faint cry has failed to reach the Father's ear. Not one earnest petition shall lie unanswered. The prayers of the saints rest upon the golden altar before the throne, and soon the ministering angel shall pour upon them the fragrant incense and they shall be offered before the Most High. The answer shall not be long deferred for the very fire from the altar shall be cast into the earth and there shall be "voices and thunderings and lightnings and an earthquake." A new power shall be introduced into earth's moral chaos, for the kingdoms of the world shall become the kingdoms of our Lord and of his Christ. Oppression and wrong shall be swept from high places, for earth shall have a glorious King. The wilderness shall be glad and the desert shall blossom as the rose, for the curse is forever cancelled by God's own hand. Our loved ones shall come again from the land of the enemy—ransomed by Him who holds the keys of the grave.

The feet that have trodden earth's rocky paths and reared only beneath her rod, shall walk on the banks of the beautiful river. The eyes that have been closed during death's long sleep shall gleam with immortal life. The hands that have been folded above the still heart shall carry the palms of victory, and the brow that hath borne the white seal of the conqueror, shall wear the crown of life, for there shall be no more death. No sorrow is known in the glorified earth. No sighs are borne on the fragrant breezes of Eden restored. There are no sad notes in the triumphant song of the redeemed.

Thy kingdom come. Then shall the glad earth welcome her King, and the Life-giver shall pour for us the wine of immortality. Then shall He bestow the crowns and receive the sceptre of universal dominion, for God shall be all in all, and his "will shall be done on earth as it is done in heaven."

MRS. H. V. REED.

☞ A little while and our warfare shall be accomplished. Our King shall come. His all-conquering hand shall turn the keys of death, unbar the gates of the grave, pluck his saints from the prison of the destroyer, bind the old serpent and hurl him into the abyss, put down all rule and authority and power, establish his eternal empire, renew the world, restore the desolate creation, and sway forever the sceptre of peace and righteousness. "And the Lord God shall give unto him the throne of his father David, and he shall reign over the house of Jacob forever, and of his kingdom there shall be no end." Luke i. 32.—The Christian.

THE WORLD.—As you love your souls, beware of the world; it has slain its thousands and ten thousands. What ruined Lot's wife? The world. What ruined Judas? The world. What ruined Simon Magus? The world. And "what shall it profit a man if he shall gain the whole world and lose his own soul?"

Russia Reaches For Constantinople.

The diplomatic correspondence between Austria and the Sublime Porte is ended, the former declining any further communications in the matter, and declaring her intention to treat directly with the Danubian Province of Roumania.

At the close of the Crimean war, in 1856, Russia, Austria, Prussia, France, England, and Sardinia, entered with Turkey, into the "Treaty of Paris," by which they bound themselves to maintain the integrity of the Turkish dominion in Europe, to recognize the full dependence of her Danubian Provinces upon the Porte, and to maintain no naval armaments upon the Black Sea. The object of the treaty, as of the war which forced Russia into it, was to preserve the "balance of power" in Europe, supposed to be seriously threatened by the hand which Russia was stretching toward Constantinople, the Dardanelles, and the provinces on the Danube. Thus the chains of the treaty galled Russia, was patent to all, but when Alexander succeeded to the throne, in 1856, he wisely perceived that the hereditary policy of the Crown, and the need of his realm for a southern outlet, must be laid aside for the present—that the day was not yet come for their accomplishment—that he must bide his time.

The treaty was therefore signed, but Russia at once commenced her preparations for the time when the opportunity should offer for its breach. The re-organization and increase of her army, the perfection of her vast railway system, and the establishment of great military and naval depots on the rivers running into the Euxine, were vigorously pressed, and are now nearing completion. The opportunity that she foresaw found her ready for it. When France and Prussia were absorbed in the greatest war since Waterloo, she gave notice that her fleets should no longer be excluded from the Euxine. Previous to this diplomatic announcement, great surprise was manifested that she took no hand in the contest. This, her lifelong policy, was the reason. By holding entirely aloof she could accomplish her purpose. France was powerless to protest against it. Prussia had her hands full, and dared not invite a breach with the Russian Court. England dared not grapple with her alone. The work was accomplished—the entering wedge fairly fixed.

The subsequent steps have been still shrewder, and place Gortschakoff in the front rank as the diplomatic fox of Europe. The war over, and Germany united, he made his web anew. France was secured—many say by secret treaty, but more likely through non-committal promises of a future alliance. Germany is held in her old position through fear that any protest would force an alliance with France. Austria is secured through her own needs, and made the cat's paw with which to reach the chestnut—through her comes the announcement (which twenty years since would have convulsed all Europe) that the Roumanian Provinces will be treated as independent.

The Treaty of Paris is shattered, and the Turk appeals to Earth and Heaven in vain. France and Austria see their profit in the game. The mouth of Prussia is closed. England, all alone, dares not protest. Italy, the successor of Sardinia as signatory of the treaty, is too weak, and too much concerned with her own affairs to care much about it. And Turkey is "sick."

The game has been shrewdly planned, and admirably accomplished. The inevitable destiny of Russia could not be checked—so great a power must, in the nature of human affairs, have a maritime outlet. It was only a question of time, but it was hardly fancied a decade since, that the present century would witness so great a stride toward that Constantinople which is the "Key of the World."—Cincinnati Times.

A Coming Savior.

Over the Christian's engagements, habits and pursuits, whether social, professional, literary, scientific, or otherwise, the thought of a coming Savior exercises a strong control. If the love of gain beats him, the eternal riches which Christ at his coming will bestow, are to him an effectual counterpoise. If the natural bent of his mind be the love of pleasure, the anticipated joys of the second advent are calculated to quench the unhallowed flame. If the love of ease, or a lethargic indolence beset him,—if some favorite pursuit too much engrosses, or some master passion with galling bondage lords it over him; in either of these cases, and in any similar ones, what a motive is here presented to an energetic effort for deliverance. Or is he naturally ambitious? In contemplating the glories of the future, how do all the objects of human esteem sink into insignificance! Or does the love of man's applause, or the dread of man's censure—those fearfully influential principles, do these too strongly appeal to the corrupt principle within? Behold! in the anticipation of a coming Savior, a principle still more influential! For when a believing man has learned to realize the smile of an approving God, how little will he esteem the applause of his fellowmen! And when he has brought home to his soul a dread of that terrible denunciation, "Depart ye cursed," how little will he care that his name is now cast out as evil! The power of the world is disarmed by the vision of things invisible, and all its pomp and circumstance, its pageants and applause, its triumphs and its fame, all these have no glory to the mind imbued with heavenly faith, by reason of the glory which excelleth. That glory will be revealed by Christ, who is emphatically "the king of glory." This, "in his times, he will show." The heart of the Christian is full of the times; and in the many temptations to worldliness which beset him, he finds no stronger resisting power than a lively perception of the day when glory shall be revealed.—Brock.

The White Stone.

"To him that overcometh will I give to eat of the hidden manna, and will give a white stone, and in the stone a new name written which no man knoweth saving he that receiveth it."—Rev. ii. 27.

In primitive times, when travelling was rendered difficult by want of places of public entertainment, hospitality was exercised by private individuals to a very great extent. Persons who had partaken of this hospitality, and those who practiced it frequently contracted habits of regard and friendship for each other; and it became a well-established custom, both among the Greeks and Romans, to provide their guests with some particular mark, which was handed down from father to son, and insured hospitality and kind treatment whenever it was presented. This mark was usually a small stone or pebble, cut in two, and upon the halves of which the host and the guest mutually inscribed their names, and then interchanged them with each other.

The production of this stone was quite sufficient to ensure friendship for themselves or their descendents, whenever they travelled again in the same direction. While it is evident that these stones required to be privately kept and the name written on them carefully concealed, lest others should obtain the privileges instead of him for whom they were intended, how natural is the allusion to this custom, in the words: "I will give him to eat of the hidden manna;" and having done so, having recognized him as my guest, my friend, "I will give him a white stone, and in the stone a new name written, which no man knoweth saving he that receiveth it;" a pledge of my friendship, secret and inviolable, known only to himself.

Christ's Coming.

What will be the state of the world when the Lord Jesus returns? "As it was in the days of Noah, so shall it be also in the days of the Son of Man. They did eat, they drank, they married wives, they were given in marriage, until the day that Noah entered the ark, and the flood came and destroyed them all. Likewise, also, as it was in the days of Lot; they did eat, they drank, they bought, they sold, they planted, they builded; but the same day that Lot went out of Sodom it rained fire and brimstone from heaven and destroyed them all. Even thus shall it be in the day when the Son of Man is revealed." Luke xvii. 27, 30. Now since God has given such a testimony in his Word, we ought seriously to consider the remarkable fact, that the Lord Jesus is to come to this world, when things will be going on as in the days of Noah, and as in the days of Lot. The coming of the Lord Jesus is sufficient to cause fear in every heart that has not yet received forgiveness of sins, and that seriously considers the circumstances and consequences so he such as they are; for though it is very easy now to forget God, and the name of the Lord Jesus, yet in the day when He shall appear, it will be impossible to do so. In that day it will be said by unconverted men, to the rocks and mountains, "Fall on us, and hide us from the face of him that sitteth on the throne, and from the wrath of the Lamb; for the great day of his wrath has come; and who shall be able to stand?" Rev. vi. 16, 17.—Prophetic Times.

Evil Speaking.

This is a vice almost universal, even among those who profess godliness. It meets you everywhere. You cannot be in the company of even those considered good people long, without hearing something to the prejudice of some absent brother or sister. Some report or insinuation, or suspicion is breathed into your ear calculated to shake your confidence in some follower of Jesus. A reform in this matter is loudly demanded. The command is, Speak not evil one of another, brethren. If you have hitherto disregarded this command, ask for pardon and commence a reformation from this hour.

The man who is to enter the kingdom of God is described as he that taketh not up a report against his neighbor. No matter under whose patronage he finds the report going about, he does not take it up, he lets it die, as all false and slanderous reports will when let alone.

With such a person you feel safe,—He will not betray you. There is no danger that he will, after sharing your hospitalities, and professing for you the strongest friendship, go away and report untrue and unkind things to your injury. "If any man offend not in word, the same is a perfect man and able also to bridle the whole body."

Alarming Military Preparations in Germany.

A new law for organizing the Landsturm has just been prepared in Germany. In other words, the whole able-bodied population, from the youth of seventeen to the man of sixty, are now to be trained to military service. The "Times" says upon this—"When Napoleon III. rashly plunged France into war in 1870, he had an army of three hundred thousand men; but the German forces were three times as numerous. The result was that the French army was driven in and crushed. But the German statesmen perceive that this advantage will not be obtained so easily a second time. One thing is beyond a doubt. The new French army is immensely larger than the old one. In fact, if the plans of the French government be carried out, and the finances of the country will bear the strain, no long time will elapse before France will have a national force equal to that of Germany in 1870. If Germany is to retain its present superiority, this new law may be a necessary measure, but it is an ominous sign that this is the first time in the present century that preparations have been made for organizing the Landsturm in time of peace." The "Daily Telegraph" also regards it as a portentous event.

The organizing of these vast military hosts is in exact accordance with the prediction in Rev. xvi. 12-16, that at the present time "evil spirits should gather the nations to the war of Armageddon." The result will soon be seen in the most tremendous battles, and "the time of trouble such as never was since there was a nation even to that same time." Dan. xii. 1.—Signs of Our Times.

The Art of Not Hearing.

The art of not hearing is fully as important to domestic happiness as a cultivated ear, for which so much time and money is expended. There are so many things which are so painful to hear, many of which, if heard, will disturb the temper and detract from contentment and happiness, that every one should be educated to take in or shut out sounds at will. If a man falls into a violent passion and calls me all manner of names, the first word shuts my ears, and I hear no more. If in my quiet voyage of life I am caught in one of these domestic whirlwinds of scolding I shut up my ears, as a sailor would furl his sail, and making all tight, ride before the gale. If a hot and restless man begins to inflame my feelings, I consider what mischief these sparks might do in the magazine below, where my temper is kept, and instantly close the door. Does a gadding, mischief-making fellow begin to inform me what people are saying about me, down drops the portcullis of my ear, and he cannot get in any farther. Some people feel so very anxious to hear everything that will vex or annoy them, they set about searching and finding it out. If all the petty things said of one, by heedless or ill-natured idlers, were to be brought home to him, he would become a mere walking pin-cushion stuck full of sharp remarks. I should as soon thank a man for emptying on my head a bushel of nettles, or setting loose a swarm of musquitoes in my chamber, or raising a pungent dust in my house generally, as to bring upon me all the tattle of spiteful people. If you would be happy, when among good people open your ears; when among bad, shut them. It is not worth while to hear what your servants say when they have slammed the door; what a beggar says whose petition you have rejected; what your neighbors say about your children; what your rivals say about your business or dress. I have noticed that a well-bred woman never hears an impertinent remark. A kind of discreet deafness saves one from not a little apparent connivance in dishonorable conversation. It is well for those who seek for present or for future blessing, to shut their eyes from seeing evil, and shut their ears from hearing of blood.—Sel.

☞ It is told of a man poorly dressed, that he went to a church seeking a opportunity to worship. The usher did not notice him, but seated several well-dressed persons who presented themselves, when finally the man addressed the usher, saying: "Can you tell me whose church this is?" "Yes, this is Christ's church." "Is he in?" was the next question, after which a seat was not so hard to find.

☞ When the heart is pure, there is hardly anything which can mislead the understanding in matters of immediate personal concernment.

Report of Meetings.

I left home Nov. 5, went to Kosciusko county, commenced meeting the next evening near Henry Messimore's, had a good meeting, met Brother and Sister Wince at that place, remained over two Sundays. The people came out en masse, the truth has got hold of the minds of quite a number in that part of the country, and on that account the ministers of the United Brethren became very uneasy, for quite a number of their folks came out to my meeting. So they sent one of their young ministers to see me and try and get up a debate. I had written out a proposition as follows: Resolved, that we, the Church of God, are the only people that preach the Gospel of Jesus Christ as preached by the Apostles. They at first wanted to debate the immortality of the soul. I told them that would suit me, then one of them asked me if I had not a proposition already out. I told him I had, as above stated. They accepted and we agreed on the time and place, we were to have their meeting house. I met them according to agreement, but they would not debate my proposition, the one we agreed on they would not debate unless I would change my name, and call the church that I belonged to Advent church or Soul-sleeper church. I told him he could call me anything he liked for the sake of a debate, but I would not change my name. I then proposed to affirm anything I preached, but no. I then proposed to him to affirm that they, the United Brethren, preached the Gospel of Jesus Christ as the Apostles preached it, but he would not, but told the people that our church was not named in the history of the different denominations, therefore we were bogus. I then made a short speech to the people, telling them our church was named in the oldest history, and that history was the Bible, and all those named in his history were all of the apostacy, and there was no need of any history till they commenced departing from the faith, then the history commenced, then the sexton arose and told us the house could not be had any longer, and commenced putting out the lights, so the matter came suddenly to an end.

While in that part of the field, I received a letter from Brother Griffin to come over to his part of the country. I went over and held a few meetings, but the weather was bad at the time, but I had a good time with Brother and Sister Griffin in visiting and talking of the things of the kingdom. I also received a letter from Brother James D. Calder, but on account of the proposed debate, I did not go to his part of the country. So I returned home again after being gone twenty-three days. Found all well except my wife, she is afflicted again with rheumatism, which perhaps will keep me at home the most of the winter.

Obituary.

DEAR RESTITUTION:—

How oft have you refreshed us and cheered our fainting hearts in days gone by, when there were but the two of us; but now alas, one is no more. Brother Levi Hart fell asleep in Jesus on the morning of Nov. 1, sadly lamented by the church and deeply regretted by all who knew him, leaving a sorrow a young and loving wife, an aged father and mother, an only sister and four brothers, all acknowledging that he was a husband, a son, a brother, without a fault, true, kind, affectionate. Besides these, he has left an only child, a dear little girl of three years, now an orphan, without father or mother, sister or brother—being the only child of Brother Hart's first wife. May the Lord be with her, and may she grow up to know the Lord as did her father, that she may be with him in the kingdom.

Brother Hart first heard the "Gospel of the kingdom" in the winter of 1868, and before the close of the year was rejoicing in the hope of eternal life through Christ Jesus; which hope became his chief delight and conversation all through life, and his comfort and stay in the hour of death. On Sept. 5, 1871, he was baptized into Christ by Brother Jas. R. Lithgow at Halifax. In the summer of 1872, there were added unto us by baptism seven, and we formed a church which continues till this day, although numbering at present but six; yet we are not discouraged feeling satisfied that where two or three are gathered together in the Lord's name, that He will be with them.

THE RESTITUTION

THE FIRST RESURRECTION.

The night is spent—the morning ray
Comes ushering in the glorious day,
The promised time of rest;
Hark! 'tis the trumpet sounding, clear,
Its joyful notes burst on the ear
Proclaiming things blest.

Ah! see, the graves are owning now,
The saints come forth, and every brow
Resists with a radiant joy;
To Bo Immortal they arise,
Inheritors of Paradise,
Where death cannot destroy.

Hope adorns a num[illegible] men of old—
Prophets, who have the story told
Of this transcendent day;
The patriarchs—spirits too,
Who lived and died without in view,
Collect in bright array.

Now "faithful"—for like their Lord,
Whose promise shines within the word,
His likeness they should wear;
A glittering host, like stars on high,
In glory and in majesty,
Upon the earth appear!

Value of Prophecy.

The good and gracious ends which God proposes to serve by the revelation of things to come, are twofold, according to the character of those to whom the revelation is given—the world or the church. When the revelation is made to the princes, cities, or nations, of the world, as by Balaam to the king of Moab, by Jonah to Nineveah, and by the dreams which Daniel interpreted to Nebuchadnezzar, king of Babylon, the great end in view is to teach their wicked and rebellious hearts "that the Most High ruleth in the kingdom of men, and giveth it to whomsoever he will;" and along with this lesson of God's personality and power, to teach this other lesson of his holy providence, that, unless they humble their pride and repent of their wickedness, they shall feel the rod of his anger, and the fierceness of his fiery indignation.

But when the revelation is brought unto the church, as of the flood to Noah, of the promised seed to Abraham, of the seventy weeks to Daniel in the house of his captivity, of the revelation to John in the place of his exile; the blessed end which God has in view is, to reward the faith of his servants, and to refresh the drooping spirit of his church, and to assure Israel, his inheritance, that however the heathen may rage, and the people imagine a vain thing against the Lord and his anointed, his faithfulness shall never depart, nor his watchfulness fail, from those who have chosen Him for their trust.

The Lord Almighty doth wish to abolish from his church, and, if it were possible, to abolish also from the world, the atheistical notion that men do shape out and body forth the fates of their being, by their own sage counsel and prudent ministry, and to establish in its stead, that He ruleth the world in righteousness, and the people in equity, according to the wise and gracious constitution which He has revealed in the Gospel, for the end of everlasting life to all who will be enlightened of his Word, taught of his Spirit, and obedient to his fatherly will. To accomplish which great revolution in the practical faith of men, and link the alienated world once more to the golden chain of being which hangs from his almighty hand, it was necessary to write before the eyes of the fleeting generations of men, as it were upon the hollow vault or firmament through which the stream of time sweepeth them along, such a handwriting concerning the future, as Belshazzar saw written upon the wall when the burden of his kingdom was accomplished; that when each generation looks upon the handwriting of prophecy which is for or against it, and is daily fulfilling in its sight, it might both know and feel that the destinies of men and of kingdoms are in the hand of the Lord; and in their utmost violence are governed and restrained by his will.

Such a canopy is prophecy over the head of the nations and kingdoms of the world, to teach them the personality, and power, and holiness of God, and to give them the privilige of his blessed government; or, if they refuse, to condemn them by the witness of their own obduracy.

With respect to the church, however, there can be no doubt that over her head the canopy of prophecy has ever been extended, and that prophets of the Lord have been constantly raised up to turn her wandering and unsteady eye to the sure light thereof. For the first revelations all wear the form of prophecy; and when afterwards the law was given, it was supported by prophecy of good and evil as its sanction, and was in truth but the inclosing bud of the Gospel; which, when it came, the prophecy of life and immortality came along with it, to all who should believe. For promise is nothing but prophecy, there being between these two no difference in the ends for which they are given, in the evidence upon which they rest, or in the fruits which the faith of them produces in the soul.

To look forward, therefore, hath been constantly the true attitude of the church of Christ, to expect the fulfillment of the prophetic word, and to desire it. He that runneth, may read this on every page of the history of the church, recorded in the holy Scriptures. Insomuch that Paul and Peter had to guard the churches against over eagerness of expectation, and when they refer to their own teaching, we gather that it was their custom—as, indeed, we see in all the epistles — to found the primitive churches upon the expectation of things which were to arrive in this present world. And of what main service to the church prophecy was, after the day of Pentecost, Peter's discourse in the Acts do testify, of what, in the days of our Lord's flesh the Gospels testify. And can anything be so strong a proof of the estimation of prophecy, as that the Word of God in the mouth of Zacharias, the father of the Baptist, begins the New Testament in the very language of that prophecy with which the Old Testament concluded in the mouth of Malachi, as if the echo of the harp had not died away during the four hundred years of intervening time; a thousand years being but as a day in the mind of the Lord.

One other instance indeed there is, more striking still, of the valuation and estimation of prophecy to the church, that when the Gospels, concerning the incarnation of Christ, and the Acts of the Apostles concerning the plantation of the church, and the Epistles concerning their doctrine and discipline, and practice, were all completed, and the last of the Apostles remained, the sands of his glass almost run out, and the hoary man exiled far away from the habitation of the church, to a lonely island of the sea, the Spirit of the Lord did seize upon his remnant of life, and possessed him with a prophecy concerning the history of the church from that time forward to the consummation of all things; which, being finished, the Spirit, in words of awful and terrible solemnity, closed the canon of revelation, with entreaties that all men would look forward and encourage each other to expect the time of the second coming of the Lord. "I, Jesus, have sent my angel to testify unto you these things in the churches. I am the root and the offspring of David, and the bright and morning star. And the Spirit and the bride say come. And let him that heareth say, come. And let him that is athirst come. And whosoever will, let him take the water of life freely. For I testify unto every man that heareth the words of the prophecy of this book, If any man shall add unto these things, God shall add unto him the plagues that are written in this book. And if any man shall take away from the words of the book of this prophecy, God shall take away his part out of the book of life, and out of the holy city, and from the things which are written in this book. He which testifieth these things saith, Surely I come quickly; Amen. Even so, come, Lord Jesus."—Edward Irving.

Was Man Created Mortal?

"Words are signs of ideas," and whatever means Jehovah may have employed to impart his ideas to man in ancient times, while the canon of Scriptures was being filled up, it is certain that the written word is the only guide for us at this day. Christ said, that the words that He spake, should judge us in the last day, and all who should believe on Him through the word of the Apostles, should be saved. All of our inquiries concerning doctrine, etc., should be, "What saith the Scriptures?" We are shut up to this kind of instruction, and this method of teaching. If the time ever was, when it was necessary for Deity to inspire certain persons to be the mediums of instruction to the people, by the impartation of the Holy Ghost (spirit), or in other words plenary inspiration, that time is past. As for instance the miraculous power with which the Apostles were endowed for certain purposes only, among which, was the confirmation of the word. But to return to the question at the head of this article.

I by no means wish to enter the arena of controversy, for the sake of controversy, or enter a criticism on any essay which some of my good brethern have written who have preceded me on this question. I recognize an honest difference of opinion, and I greatly rejoice in the fact, that our brethren—the writers or correspondents of THE RESTITUTION—seem to possess cool heads and are free from that acrimony, which too much characterizes the professed followers of Christ, where a difference of views exists.

It by no means follows, that the subsequent action of our federal head (Adam) in the least changed the design of the Creator, as He pronounced every thing He had made GOOD, man included. He certainly was invested with the power and susceptibility of becoming immortal, if he had been obedient. Angels were created beings like man, with this difference: they were individually responsible, but they were amenable to law; each one must be tested; some of them must have fallen, while others have developed characters, by which they have attained immortality. Were they then created immortal? Were those who have fallen created mortal? Undoubtedly a negative answer will be the response. Reasoning from the above premises, we must logically come to the conclusion, that man, by virtue of his creation, was neither mortal nor immortal, but was put on trial for immortality.

I am well aware that the phrase "neither mortal nor immortal" grates rather harshly on some sensitive ears, or sounds rather uncouth, but if words are the signs of ideas, we can come to no other conclusion.

Another incident which strengthens the position I have taken, is the fact that after Adam, our federal head, had eaten the interdicted fruit, the Tree of Life was guarded by the Flaming Sword, turning every way to prevent access to it. Adam would even then have attained immortality if he had been permitted access to it; showing conclusively that there was no tendency in his nature towards mortality. Will our friends tell us why this Tree of Life was so strongly guarded, on the principle which they assume, viz., that man was created mortal? To me it speaks volumes that the tendency was in the opposite direction, viz., towards immortality. Another question I wish to ask right here: What force was there in the threatening of Jehovah with death for eating this interdicted fruit, if he (and his posperity included) would have died whether he had partaken of it or not? Let those answer this question who can, for I cannot.

Again, what rules of interpretation can be brought to bear against the ideas evidently intended by Deity in His language to our first parents: "in the day thou eatest thereof thou shalt surely die (or dying thou shalt die, Mar.). Permit me to institute the query, Do the words (which are the signs of ideas) convey the idea to him (Adam) of anything but a test? To say that he would have died at all events, whether obedient or disobedient, looks to me to be stretching things far beyond their utmost tension. A forced construction of the language or words employed. "Sin entered the world, and death by sin," says the Apostle. This ought to settle the question in the mind of every candid and intelligent inquirer after truth, how death or mortality entered the world,—sin (transgression of the law) the cause,—death being the consequence, following legitimately as effect follows cause. I admit that man by his fall became mortal, and this caused a change in his very nature,—in his constitution; hence a necessity of a regeneration and a second or new birth—a resurrection from the dead, in order to inherit the kingdom.

Plain Talk.—No. 1.

"But be ye doers of the word and not hearers only, deceiving your own selves."—James i. 22.

That we as a body of believers are right in theory has; I believe, been clearly demonstrated. We have at least proved it to our own satisfaction and completely foiled our opponents in their attempts to set aside our faith, and as far as we have gone may consider ourselves masters of the field theoretically. But how is it in a practical point? Does the body of believers generally show their faith by their works? Has theory and practice been combined to show that we are indeed and in truth the children of God? The righteous are compared to a city set on a hill, to a light placed in a position to benefit those around it, to salt that purifies and preserves, they are to be living epistles of the truth, they are to so live that the beautiful traits in the character they profess will be so reflected in the face of the world that it will constrain them to acknowledge such to be the children of God. That a great amount of theoretical teaching was necessary to establish our faith all must concede, the nature of the case demanded it, human tradition must be removed away and the truth planted in its stead. This course engendered a spirit of controversy that in some cases assumed finally a disposition to wage offensive war against false systems of all kinds, and in some instances this course has been similar to that of a mighty conqueror who, with his overpowering hosts, has swept through a country, overturning the existing government, but failing to establish order and law in its stead. Now I do not wish to be understood as being opposed to "contending earnestly" for the faith, but I fear there has been a sad neglecting of the practical matters belonging to our system. The importance of the subject will be more apparent when we observe how much of the inspired record has been devoted to precepts for moral training. Comparatively little of the Bible teaches theory, but that little is sufficient. How brief and simple the account of man's origin and nature! how plain the statements of his condition in death! how absolutely necessary that he should have a resurrection to life! and how fitting that he should be rewarded! and how appropriate that the earth should be his place of reward! how easy to believe that God created the earth for a noble purpose! that its existence is to be perpetuated forever! that a kingdom shall be established upon it that shall embody only true and righteous principles of government! that under such circumstances the righteous should have eternal life to enjoy such glory forever; and that wicked characters should not be entitled to such blessings but should perish and cease to exist. All these statements are easy to understand and reasonable to believe. Now how great is the number of moral precepts! how often is godliness urged as being indispensable to Christian character. How many entire letters have been written inculcating purity of life! how many positive sins have been pointed out and denounced, crimes that will shut men and women out of the kingdom of God are fearlessly held up and severely rebuked. Oh for a few bold-hearted Christians in our day with moral courage enough to denounce sin even though fortified by church membership, and will dare to call things by their right names. But alas! who? who in all the broad land to-day dare preach against covetousness in the church, which Paul in his day called idolatry, but in our day is rendered "a prosperous brother in business?" Who is found that will rebuke and properly name the man who before God and man pledges himself to give a certain amount of money to sustain the cause of truth and refuses to give anything? When man with his fellowman does this his status is fixed; among his fellowmen he is called a liar, religiously he is called "a negligent brother."

God commands his people to put away lying and speak the truth, and this applies just as well to a promise to assist the cause of truth with your money, as it does to a promise to do anything else. To-day the cause of truth languishes because of unfulfilled pledges on the part of those who professed to love it. To-day voices are silent that should be heard sounding out the word of life; but the means have been withheld and they are compelled to give their time to earn a sustenance for themselves and families. My brethren, these things ought not to be.

Yours for truth,

Kingdom of Heaven.

If the church is the kingdom of heaven, or kingdom of God, what kingdom is that which is to succeed the four universal kingdoms of Dan. ii. which is to be given to the saints of the Most High? and of Dan. vii. 14. "And there was given him (Christ) dominion, and glory, and a kingdom, that all people, nations, and languages should serve him; his dominion is an everlasting dominion, which shall not pass away, and his kingdom that which shall not be destroyed." According to Rev. xi. 15, this kingdom is not yet come, for it is the "kingdoms of this world that are to become the kingdoms of our Lord and of his Christ," and not till the sounding of the seventh trumpet. "Now is come salvation, and strength, and the kingdom of our God, and the power of his Christ; for the accuser of our brethren is cast down."

One of the signs of the approaching kingdom is the sign of the Son of Man, "coming in a cloud with power and great glory." "So likewise when ye see these things come to pass, know that the kingdom of God is nigh." When Christ was crucified, the "kingdom" had not come, for the malefactor asked to be remembered when Christ came into his kingdom. "Thy kingdom come." "And I appoint unto you a kingdom." "That ye may eat and drink at my table, in my kingdom."

Let us substitute the word "church" for kingdom. If the terms "kingdom" and "church" are synonymous, will they not bear to be used interchangeably? "And saviors shall come up on Mount Zion, to judge the mount of Esau, and the church shall be the Lord's."—Obadiah. Read the context—"Thy church come, thy will be done," etc. "Blessed are the meek for theirs is the church of heaven." "Seek ye first the church of heaven and his righteousness." "Many shall come from the east, and west, and shall sit down with Abraham, Isaac and Jacob in the church of heaven." "The church of heaven is like unto a treasure hid in a field, which when a man hath found, he hideth," etc. "Come ye blessed of my Father, inherit the church prepared for you from the foundation of the world." "Whoso readeth let him understand."

Thanks be to God for a "kingdom" which hath foundations, whose maker and builder is God—a kingdom for the church—an "inheritance incorruptible, undefiled and that faileth not away."—Sel.

☞ The applications for stamps for the prepayment of newspaper postage for the first month of the new year already aggregate $500,000. The Post Office officials, however, consider that this sum exceeds the probable monthly demand. The estimate of the annual revenue from this source is $4,000,000. The Department does not expect that any considerable amount of the newspaper business will go to the express companies.

Mystery of Rev. x. and Rom. xi.

In Rev. x. 7, we find this language: "But in the days of the seventh angel, when he shall begin to sound, the mystery of God shall be finished, as he hath declared to his servants the prophets." The prefix of the article "the" indicates an allusion to a specific "mystery" that is then to be "finished" in the days after the "seventh angel begins to sound." This last expression clearly teaches, that this trumpet will, like the preceding ones, occupy a period of time, which will be filled up with events connected with the judgments of the great or final day. Many assume that this trumpet is identical with "the trump of God" of 1 Cor. xv. 52; 1 Thess. iv. 16, which brings the resurrection of the dead in Christ, but this I think is incorrect, as may be seen by a careful reference to the various places where this trump of God is referred to. It sounded first at Sinai and was a literal voice, which Moses and Israel all heard, and which caused them to quake and to fear, and the mountain to tremble also. This trumpet or voice is to sound again, for it is written: "Yet once more, I shake not the earth only, but also heaven." Heb. xii. 26. These events will of course be in the days of the voice of the seventh angel, and a part of what is then to occur. If this distinction is carefully kept in mind, much confusion will be saved in classifying the events connected with this subject. Before leaving it I will say with the light I now enjoy, am inclined to believe the second woe ended in the events of the French and European revolution, between the years A. D. 1789, and 1815, and that the sixth trumpet ceased in the year 1842 with the events that then occurred between Egypt, Turkey, and the European Allies, when the Sultan's supremacy departed into the hands of those Allies. Hence I infer the wars and other evils that have since occurred, are under the incipient stages of the third woe, and in the days of the voice of the seventh angel, and are parts of God's great and mysterious purposes, that are to usher in the sounding of the resurrection trump, now impending, as declared by his servants the prophets, of both the Old and New Testament Scriptures. Question. If these events are but the beginning of that time of trouble, which is stirring up the angry nations to such a fearful preparation for war, what will be its fruition?

Believing this, I feel an assurance, the time has fully come for the manifestation of the "mystery" of the text. In looking at this subject in the light of the various Scriptures connected with God's great purposes, as revealed by the Spirit, through holy men of old, I am constrained to believe it to be a culmination of his glorious purposes of salvation to the world as declared in Psa. xcvi. and others of like import. This mystery began to be unveiled to the church in the Apostle's day as testified in Eph. iii. 5, 6, as follows: "Which in other ages was not made known unto the sons of men as it is now revealed unto his holy apostles and prophets by the Spirit. That the Gentiles should be fellow heirs, and of the same body, and partakers of his promise in Christ by the Gospel." In our application of this promise and others of like import, we have limited them to the present dispensation, and have made this the fulness of the times of God's saving grace to both the Jewish and Gentile world. In thus doing we certainly have greatly erred; for instead of this being the age of the promised fulness, it is but introductory thereto, as was the law to the Gospel age. The work of this age is the taking out from "the Gentiles a people for his name" (i. e., a bride, the Lamb's wife). After this is accomplished, He "returns and builds again the tabernacle of David that is fallen down—that the residue of men might seek after the Lord, and all the Gentiles upon whom my name is called, saith the Lord who doeth all these things. Known unto God are all his works from the beginning of the world." Acts xv. 14-16. This testimony partially unfolds the mystery of the text, and prepares the way for the examination of Rom. xi. and other portions of direct evidences. In this chapter we have the following statements, with others of like import. "Now if the fall of them be the riches of the world and the diminishing (decay or loss—margin,) of them the riches of the Gentiles; how much more their fullness." "For if the casting away of them be the reconciling of the world, what shall the receiving of them be, but life from the dead." "For if the first fruit be holy, the lump is also holy; and if the root, so are the branches. For I would not brethren, that ye should be ignorant of this mystery, lest ye should be wise in your own conceits, that blindness (or hardness) in part is happened to Israel, until the fullness of the Gentiles be come in. And so all Israel shall be saved, as it is written: There shall come out of Sion the deliverer and shall turn away ungodliness from Jacob. For this is my covenant unto them, when I shall take away their sins." "For the gifts and callings of God are without repentance. For God hath concluded them all in unbelief that he might have mercy upon all." The following points are made and sustained by these extracts, viz: 1. The fall and diminishing of Israel opens to the Gentiles, the rich assurance of the promised "fullness." 2. That this fullness is yet future, and in a resurrected state. 3. The casting away of Israel secures the reconciliation of the world to God when Israel is redeemed from death, as taught also in Ezek. xxxvii. 4. The term "lump" as here used, includes all, both Jew and Gentile, that will then "call upon his name." 5. Up to that time God "hath shut them all up together in unbelief that he might have mercy upon all." 6. This "unbelief" pertains to the mysterious purposes of God "known to him from the beginning of the world," that He would, in the dispensation of the fullness of times, have mercy upon all, as he hath declared by his servants the prophets. 7. The same ignorance and high-mindedness, of the Roman brethren, that blinded their minds, is still upon the church, with an increase of prejudice against even an examination of these glorious things. O how wondrously strange! Truly "darkness covers the earth and gross darkness the people;" therefore, God will speedily "arise and shine," for thy "light is come and the glory of the Lord is risen upon thee." "And the Gentiles shall come to thy light and kings to the brightness of thy rising." In view of all this promised blessedness, who can refrain in exclaiming with the Apostle, "O the depth of the riches, both of the wisdom and knowledge of God! how unsearchable are his judgments and his ways past finding out." Still He has revealed them to us by his spirit." Hence it is becoming in us to believe, and to praise Him for his goodness and his wonderful works to the children of men.

An objection or two answered and I close. It is contended by some, that it was not God's design to save, or even to extend the offer of salvation to the entire family of man, because there are two races, viz: The seed of the woman, and the seed of the serpent, created thus from the beginning, by the same God, who will be glorified in the salvation of the one, and in the eternal destruction of the other. Those who thus assume have forgotten the testimony of the Apostle in Acts xvii. 27, as follows: "Seeing he giveth to all life and breath and all things, and hath made of one blood, all nations of men for to dwell on all the face of the earth, and hath determined the times before appointed, and the bounds of their habitation, that they should seek the Lord, if haply they might feel after him though he be not far from every one of us." Surely, if God hath given life and breath, and made of one blood all nations of men; all must have descended from our common federal head, our first parents, and consequently, the serpent's seed, are made so not by creation, but by unbelief and wicked works like that of Cain and his descendants, the Jews, whom Christ called "a generation of vipers" and all others of like character. I do not claim that the promises above quoted, or others of like import, are to be extended to those individual persons, who after having had a knowledge of God, but did not like to retain that knowledge, and willfully rejected and purposely forgot Him, will have another probationary opportunity, but do claim that all who never had that knowledge or the opportunity of obtaining it in this or in past dispensations, will have it in the resurrection age, which will be "the times before appointed, that they should seek the Lord," which agrees with the testimony of the same Apostle in 1 Tim. ii. 4-6, as follows: "Who will have all men to be saved and come unto the knowledge of the truth. For there is one God and one Mediator between God and men, the man Christ Jesus who gave himself a ransom for all to be testified in due time." When that "due time" does come, and the testimony goes forth in God's own appointed way, "then the fullness of the times of his promised blessings will be fulfilled to the entire lump of both Jew and Gentile, all of whom have "been shut up together in unbelief."

Signs of the Times.

The signs of the times are thrilling. Judgments, in the form of tremendous fires, floods, hurricanes, earthquakes, eruptions, famines, pestilences, disease, and plagues, are admonishing all to prepare for that day of which it is said, "It shall come as a destruction from the Almighty," that it is "great and very terrible," so great that "none is like it." Who will take warning and get ready? This is a question for each to answer for himself. A little time remains in which to work. Who will improve it? The trial of our faith is at hand; it is even here. Victories must be gained by us who have been dilatory that will cost a severe struggle. Shall we delay the entire consecration which we know we must make, if we ever see the inside of the city of God? God help us all to make it now.—Review and Herald.

After the Storm.

Very terrible are the prophetic descriptions of God's judgments on the apostate Jews and the atheistic Gentiles—the world's evil evening of which it will boast, at the close of this dispensation, as the time of its intellectual and scientific triumph over the "superstition" which believed in God and taught that loyalty to Him was the first duty of man. As in the olden time the Lord waited until the iniquity of the Amorites was full before He gave authority to destroy the rebels, so now He waits until the antichristian elements of the age shall have reached their climax and found their natural development in the person and blasphemous pretensions of the man of sin before the destroying angels of the Apocalypse are commanded to pour out God's vials of wrath upon the earth. But we shall misunderstand the severity of these judgments if we do not see in it an expression of God's opposition to sin as the antagonist of his beneficent purposes, and the deadly enemy of the human race. He will be fearful in his dealings with his arrogant enemies for a short period of sharp and decisive judgments, that He may clear the moral atmosphere of the world for a long era of gentle rule, during which unprecedented blessings—physical, moral, and mental—domestic, social, and national—shall come down upon loyal humanity, with all the grace and fullness of a Father's love. The lightning will flash, and the thunder will roar with a fury of which the most appalling tropical tempest is only a feeble type; but after the storm—O how delightful! What a glorious change! Heaven and earth embrace most lovingly; men breathe freely at last; at last they truly live; and the old, old prayer, "Thy will be done on earth, as it is in heaven," is at last answered!

It must be so. Sin and suffering, with their bitter offspring, sorrow, may not continue eternally in the dominions of Him who is holy and good—good because He is holy. It is simply the incredulity of atheism which asks if there is such a Being; for, apart from the numberless evidences of his eternal power and godhead which meet us on every hand, Christ has "seen him," (John vi. 46,) and He is the faithful and true witness, upon whose testimony the universe may confidently rely. Nor, indeed, is it possible to imagine the existence of the present state of things without assuming, at the same time, that God has some gracious and wonderfully comprehensive purpose from which He has never swerved, and to the accomplishment of which He is rendering all movements in heaven and earth subservient. This position, at any rate, pays a tribute of believing adoration to his wisdom, and is perfectly in harmony with the revelation of his character in the person and work of his dear Son. Creation has been subjected to vanity, Paul tells us, not by its own will, but by reason of Him who made it subject, in hope. The present condition of things, therefore, does not suggest despair. On the contrary the "vanity" is a temporary characteristic, and hope of its removal is to be cherished; for the creation itself shall be delivered from the bondage of corruption into the liberty of the glory of the children of God. If, then, when the sons of God are manifested in resurrection redemption, a long train of physical evils is to disappear, what conclusion can we reach but that the moral evils that defile the world, and distract humanity, and dishonor the Great Ruler by their active rebellion, are doomed to destruction at the time and in the mode which his perfect wisdom sees best.

The time is coming when the servants of Christ shall not have to say "Satan hindered us." I Thess. ii. 18. Too often, alas! have they reason to say that now; and the most painful part of the fact is that he sometimes employs, to serve his thwarting purposes, beloved brethren in Jesus Christ, heirs with us of the glory to be revealed. How little they think whose work they are doing when they wound a member of their Heavenly Father's family! If Satan would only employ his own "angels," the hindrance might be equally successful, but it would not be half so distressing. He is too subtle and too malignant for that. Well; let us cheer our hearts by looking at some of the pictures of earth's scenery after the storm, and bless the Lord our God for what He has in store for the world. The passages of Scripture can speak eloquently for themselves, and need no introduction from us.

"For from the rising of the sun even unto the going down of the same, my name shall be great among the Gentiles; and in every place incense shall be offered unto my name, and a pure offering; for my name shall be great among the heathen, saith the Lord of hosts." Mal. i. 11. This is a sublime generalization of what is to be. Details must be sought elsewhere by those who wish to have them. Here is the broad fact that from the rising to the setting of the sun—that is, over the entire surface of this vast world—God shall be reverently adored, and pure offerings shall be made to Him; statements which involve intelligence and willing-hood on the part of the worshippers. They will have light concerning the living and true God, and they will gratefully express their obligations to Him.

"I saw in the night vision, and, behold, one like the Son of Man came with the clouds of heaven, and came to the Ancient of Days, and they brought him near before him. And there was given him dominion and glory, and a kingdom, that all people, nations, and languages should serve him; his dominion is an everlasting dominion, which shall not pass away, and his kingdom that which shall not be destroyed.' Dan. vii. 13, 14. It is, perhaps, needless to remind the reader that this corresponds with our Lord's words in Matthew. "And then"—immediately after the tribulation—"shall appear the sign of the Son of Man in heaven; and then shall all the tribes of the earth mourn, and they shall see the Son of Man coming in the clouds of heaven with power and great glory." Matt. xxiv. 30. "When the Son of Man shall come in his glory, and all the holy angels with him, then shall he sit upon the throne of his glory; and before him shall be gathered all nations; and he shall separate them one from another as a shepherd divideth his sheep from the goats." Matt. xxv. 31, 32. "Hereafter shall ye see the Son of Man sitting on the right hand of power, and coming in the clouds of heaven." Matt. xxvi. 64. But it may be needful to say that Matthew's Gospel is essentially a Jewish book. He states his object at the very outset:—"The book of the generation of Jesus Christ, the son of David, the son of Abraham." He wrote for the Jews. To prove that Jesus was the Christ is his design throughout. His is the royal Gospel, and his description of the judgment scene—xxv. 31–46—is totally misapprehended by those who import into it the idea of resurrection. It is not a resurrection scene. It is the son of David ordering and establishing his kingdom, and dealing with men in the flesh in accordance with their conduct toward the pious remnant of the Jews, his "brethren."

"He shall have dominion also from sea to sea, and from the river unto the ends of the earth. They that dwell in the wilderness shall bow before him; and his enemies shall lick the dust. The kings of Tarshish and of the isles shall bring presents; the kings of Sheba and Seba shall offer gifts. Yea, all kings shall fall down before him, all nations shall serve him.' Psa. lxxii. 8–11. "His name shall endure forever; his name shall be continued as long as the sun; and men shall be blessed in him; all nations shall call him blessed." Verse 17. This words show the universality of the Great King's dominions—all kings, all nations serving Him, and the happiness of the world, after the storm, under the sway of the Prince of Peace—all families of the earth blessed in Him and calling Him blessed.

"Make a joyful noise unto God, all ye lands; sing forth the honor of his name; make his praise glorious. Say unto God, How terrible art thou in thy works! through the greatness of thy power shall thine enemies submit themselves unto thee. All the earth shall worship thee, and shall sing unto thee; they shall sing to thy name." Psa. lxvi. 1–4. That is something like a holy concert!—a glorious service of worship and of song! The battle of the warrior, with confused noise, must cease, and the garments rolled in blood disappear, before this jubilant adoration is heard under the whole heaven.

"O sing unto the Lord a new song; for he hath done marvelous things; his right hand and his holy arm hath gotten him the victory. The Lord hath made known his salvation; his righteousness hath he openly showed in the sight of the heathen. He hath remembered his mercy and his truth toward the house of Israel; all the ends of the earth have seen the salvation of our God." Psa. xcviii. 1–4. When shall this magnificent scene be realized? The writer tells you in the same triumphant ode:—"The Lord cometh to judge the earth; with righteousness shall he judge the world, and the people with equity."

But these are only a few specimens of many glowing prophetic descriptions of the harmonies and blessedness of the latter day, after our great King has crushed his foes by irresistible might, and settled the affairs of his magnificent empire by infallible wisdom.—Rainbow.

"I Must Decrease."

It is hard to come down, to take a lower place, to abandon a prized position, to feel that power and influence and reputation are slipping from our grasp. But this is the order of God. It is said that one mark of a fool is, he never knows when to stop. The old minister who, against the wishes of his brethren, resigned a position he had long and honorably filled, defended his action by saying that he wished to resign while he had sense enough to do so, and not wait till his brethren became weary of him and so removed him from a place which he was incompetent to fill.

Men must learn to yield. They are transient, they must decrease. No man can hold his position long. It is not well that he should. God pour the tide of life into new channels. Young blood flows in new veins. The new wine is in new bottles. Whether we recognize the fact or not, we are all getting out of date. Ten, twenty, or fifty years of service does its work on us, and brings the urchins from the streets up to be our equals, our superiors, our successors.

John the Baptist had stirred the Jewish nation, and bowed them in penitence and humility. Great and small men were moved by his word. "In the Spirit and power of the Highest" he had gone forth; and so mightily had he wrought for God, that among those born of women there had not arisen a greater than he. And yet he knew that he was nothing; he was but a transient sound, an echo, a voice, "the voice of one crying in the wilderness, Prepare ye the way of the Lord, and make his paths straight." No pride, ambition, vain-glory, or self-assertion found place in him. He formed no party; he founded no church; he builded no sect. He simply did his own work. Towering as high as the highest of the sons of men, he was yet willing to leave behind him no family, no followers, no name, no trace, but rather to turn everything into the rising current that flowed Christ-ward by his side.

"I am not He." "There cometh one after me that is preferred before me, for he was before me." "There standeth one among you the latchet of whose shoes I am not worthy to stoop down and unloose." Such were the words in which John exalted Christ and abased himself. In the presence of his own disciples he looked upon Jesus as he walked and said, "Behold the Lamb of God; and the two disciples heard him speak, and they followed Jesus." Thus his followers melted away, and turned their eyes toward the greater Light that was then dawning on the world; and when men came to tell him of the rising fame of one who bade fair to eclipse his glory, he answered and said, "A man can receive nothing except it be given him from heaven. Ye yourselves bear me witness, that I said, I am not the Christ, but that I am sent before him. He that sent the bride, is the bridegroom; but the friend of the bridegroom, which standeth and heareth him, rejoiceth greatly, because of the bridegroom's voice; this my joy therefore is fulfilled. He must increase, but I must decrease. He that cometh from above is above all; he that is of the earth is earthly, and speaketh of the earth; he that cometh from heaven is above all. And what he hath seen and heard, that he testifieth; and no man receiveth his testimony. He that hath received his testimony, hath set to his seal that God is true. For he whom God hath sent, speaketh the words of God; for God giveth not the Spirit by measure unto him. The Father loveth the Son and hath given all things into his hand. He that believeth on the Son hath everlasting life; and he that believeth not the Son, shall not see life; but the wrath of God abideth on him." John iii. 27–36.

Thus calmly and unselfishly did this mighty man tear every laurel from his own brow and lay them at the Savior's feet. "I must decrease." This was his destiny, and he accepted it without a murmur. His disciples followed a new Master. His faithfulness provoked the wrath of Herod. The burning and shining light fell under the prison's dark eclipse. Thence from the house of bondage he sent to Jesus to solve his last doubt, "Art thou he that should come? or look we for another?" And when the answer came to him: "Go your way, and tell John what things ye have seen and heard; how that the blind see, the lame walk, the lepers are cleansed, the deaf hear, the dead are raised, to the poor the Gospel is preached; and blessed is he, whosoever shall not be offended in me," his last fear was dispelled and he had only to await the end. It came. The shameless wantonness of a dancing-girl, the rashness of a wicked king, and the spite of an adulterous woman, brought him to his death. A bloody sword, a ghastly head in a charger,—and then a few sad followers took up the gory, headless trunk of the mighty servant of the Lord, and sadly bore it to its final resting-place, and "went and told Jesus."

The good man's work was done. He had decreased till the name that rang through Palestine was only heard in saddened whispers; the voice that rolled the cry "Repent!" on the ears of the multitude by Jordan's shores, was hushed in death;—and the noble form on which all eyes had rested, lay a headless trunk, in a dark, dishonored grave.

But Jesus lived. He increased. He increases still, and "of the increase of his government and peace there shall be no end." He must increase. Nothing can prevent it. Jews, Romans, Scribes, Pharisees, men, devils, bonds, fetters, thorns, crosses, nails, spears, tombs, cords, stones, seals, soldiers, kings, princes, foes, scoffers, infidels, mockers, all may do their worst—"He must increase." Far above all heavens He sits to-day at God's right hand. But He shall come to earth again. Heaven has exalted Him; earth shall enthrone Him. His will shall be done here as it now is there. Many crowns shall deck his brow,—and the kingdoms of this world shall become our Lord's and his Christ's, and He shall reign forever and ever. "He must increase"—we must decrease. Let us learn the lesson of lowliness. Let us cast away our pride and sit in the dust. Let us lay ourselves at Jesus' feet. The hour of his might and majesty draws near, and the Lord alone shall be exalted in that day." But we who become as little children and receive the kingdom of heaven in faith, and at last are permitted to enter there, shall find that, great as was John the Baptist in the moral glory of his mortal life, yet he who is least in the kingdom of heaven, a crowned immortal conqueror, is greater than the greatest man that ever wrought the work of God in the frailty of human flesh. Then shall true greatness begin. We can wait to attain it For "it doth not yet appear what we shall be; but we know that, when he shall appear we shall be like him, for we shall see him as he is; and every man that hath this hope in him, purifieth himself, even as he is pure."—The Christian.

Coincidences—Moses and Jesus.

"The Lord thy God will raise up unto thee a Prophet from the midst of thee, of thy brethren, like unto me; unto him ye shall hearken."—Deut. xviii. 15.

While Moses was watching the flocks of Jethro, his father-in-law, the Lord appeared to him in a burning bush, and announced to him that he would be the deliverer of his people, by his hand. When Christ was born, the angels announced to the shepherds watching their flocks on the hills of Judea, "Unto you is born this day, in the city of David, a Savior, which is Christ the Lord."

Moses' life was sought in his infancy; Christ's life was sought in his infancy also. Moses, after he had fled from the face of his enemies for a season, returned again to his people; Christ returned again to his people, after the death of Herod, his cruel persecutor. Moses refused to be called the son of Pharaoh's daughter, and thereby virtually refused to be made an earthly king; Christ refused to be made an earthly king also. Moses chose twelve men to spy out the land of Canaan; Christ chose twelve Apostles. Moses chose seventy elders; Christ chose seventy disciples. Moses established his religion by miracles; Christ established his religion by miracles also. Moses overcame the magicians; Christ overcame the devil and all his emissaries. Moses parted the waters of the Red Sea, and went over on dry ground; Christ walked upon the surface of the waters, and at his command the wind and rolling waves were obedient.

Moses turned the bitter waters of Marah into sweet; Christ at the marriage of Cana of Galilee, turned the water into wine. Moses cured leprosy; Christ cured several lepers. Moses fed the the people in the wilderness; Christ fed the multitude in the wilderness also. Moses' face shone when he came down from the Mount; Christ's person shone above the brightness of the sun on the Mount of transfiguration. A cloudy pillar followed Moses; a bright cloud overshadowed Christ. Moses gave the law; Christ gave the Gospel. Moses fasted forty days before giving the law; Christ fasted forty days before giving the Gospel. Moses was noted for his meekness; Christ was emphatically meek and lowly in heart. Moses was a Prophet; Christ was the Prophet that should come. Moses promised another prophet; Christ promised another comforter.

Moses prayed and interceded for his people; Christ prayed for his enemies, and ever lives to intercede for his people. Moses instituted the passover; Christ, who is our passover, commands us to keep it in remembrance of Him. Moses anointed Aaron High Priest of the Tribes of Israel; Christ was anointed by the Holy Spirit, as our atoning High Priest. Moses lifted up the serpent in the wilderness; Christ says, even so must the Son of Man be lifted up, that whosoever believeth in Him should not perish, but have eternal life. Moses first set up the vail in the Tabernacle, which concealed the most holy place; Christ at his death rent in twain the vail of the Temple, from the top to the bottom, thereby showing that the Mosaic dispensation was abolished, and that He Himself was now to enter into the holiest of all, and sit down on the right hand of the Majesty on high.

Justice and Love.

These are two attributes of our God which nearly all theologians so divide as to make them irreconcilable enemies. This view of the subject is much to be regretted. Justice is as much a friend to the human race as love; and they are in perfect harmony in their work for the highest good of every soul of the human race. This subject is well set forth in the article "A Dying Belief," page seventy-nine of this number of the "Examiner," which appeared a short time since in the "Christian Union." I call attention to the article not because there is anything new in the sentiments to my mind; for, thirty-four years ago I commenced the same line of argument on the same subject; but have not stopped at the one doctrine of endless misery; it bears on the entire government of God over the human race. To maintain that this life is the only time in which any of the human family,—no matter how unavoidably ignorant they may have been of God and of Christ,—can have an opportunity to secure an endless life, by becoming reconciled to God in Christ, is an error as opposed to the justice of God as endless torture, itself; and is nearly as horrible; and quite as God-dishonoring. Let the article be read, keeping in mind that the whole train of thought bears just as strongly against the doctrine that any man shall perish without first knowing "The only true God and Jesus Christ" and having an opportunity to secure an endless life through that knowledge. The doctrine of death, in unavoidable ignorance, with no hope of a remedy in a future life, is a twin doctrine with endless misery,—both condemned by the love and justice of God, and are a gross outrage on all God's professions of love to the world and his declarations that his "ways are equal."

I give the above mentioned article because it expresses in forcible language not only my views of the doctrine of endless misery, as held by me for more than thirty years past, but because I see the same sentiments or arguments equally support my present position that every son and daughter of Adam will have a true knowledge of "the only true God and Jesus Christ" and an opportunity to become a partaker of the great salvation there is in "Christ, who gave himself a ransom for all" men, "to be testified in due time." To deny this, is, to me, a blasphemy against God and his beloved Son. But, happily for such blasphemers, Jesus says, "All sins shall be forgiven unto the sons of men, and blasphemies wherewith soever they shall blaspheme;" with one exception, viz: "Blasphemy against the Holy Ghost." Mark iii. 26, 29.—Bible Examiner.

The Power of a Holy Life.

The beauty of a holy life constitutes the most eloquent and effective persuasive to religion, which one human being can address to another. We have many ways of doing good to our fellow creatures; but none so good, so efficacious, as leading a virtuous, upright, and well-ordered life. There is an energy of moral suasion in a good man's life, passing the highest efforts of the orator's genius. The seen but silent beauty of holiness speaks more eloquently of God and duty, than the tongues of men and angels. Let parents remember this. The best inheritance a parent can bequeath to a child is a virtuous example, a legacy of hallowed remembrances and associations. The beauty of holiness beaming through the life of a loved relative or friend, is more effectual to strengthen such as do stand in virtue's ways, and raise up those that are bowed down, than precept, command, entreaty, or warning. Christianity itself, I believe, owes by far the greatest part of its moral power, not to the precepts or parables of Christ, but to his own character. The beauty of that holiness which is enshrined in the four brief biographies of the Man of Nazareth, has done more and will do more to regenerate the world and bring it to an everlasting righteousness, than all other agencies put together. It has done more to spread his religion in the world than all that has ever been preached or written on evidences of Christianity. —Dr. Chalmers.

An Interesting Discovery.

Rev. Dr. De Hass, the American Consul at Jerusalem, in a letter from Mount Carmel, published in the Pittsburgh Christian Advocate, gives an account of an interesting discovery which has just been made at the renowned city of Tyre whose king furnished the skilled workmen and much of the material for Solomon's grand temple. He says:—

"A very interesting discovery has just been made by Dr. Lepp, of Prussia. In digging for the remains of Emperor Frederick Barbarossa, they came upon the ruins of a magnificent Christian church—probably the cathedral erected by Paulinius, when bishop of Tyre, and for which Eusebius wrote the dedicatory sermon. The great Origen, and many of the fathers and early bishops were buried here. And what is very remarkable, not only these graves and bodies have been found with the recovery of this old church, but their vestments, jewels and robes of office, in almost perfect preservation. One of these remains is no doubt the body of Origen. How strange all this seems! When they discovered the tomb of the Emperor, at a depth of eight feet, it was found to be empty, which explains another mystery. On examining his wife's tomb a few years since, in the Cathedral of Spires, Germany, it was found to contain two skeletons, which never before could be explained. It now appears that some person, perhaps centuries ago, quietly removed the remains of Frederick Barbarossa from Tyre to Hopenstauffen, and placed them in the coffin of his wife."

Habit.

"I trust everything under God," said Lord Brougham, "to habit, upon which, in all ages, the lawgiver, as well as the schoolmaster, has mainly, placed his reliance; habit, which makes everything easy, and casts all difficulties upon the deviation from a wanted course. Make sobriety a habit, and intemperance will be hateful; make prudence a habit, and reckless profligacy will be as contrary to the nature of the child as to any of your lordships. Give a child the habit of sacredly regarding the truth, of carefully respecting the property of others, of scrupulously abstaining from all acts of improvidence which can involve him in distress, he will just as likely think of rushing into an element in which he cannot breathe, as of lying, cheating, or of stealing."

☞ There is one single fact which one may oppose to all the wit and argument of infidelity, viz: That no man, on his death bed, ever repented of being a Christian.

THE RESTITUTION

PLYMOUTH, IND., DEC. 23, 1874.

EDITORIAL DEPARTMENT.

☞ The brethren will be pleased to learn that our subscription list is growing rapidly, and that words of encouragement are coming to us from many sources. We are getting new subscribers in almost every mail, and the prospect is very encouraging. Let every brother make an extra effort and we shall soon have the paper on a self-sustaining basis.

☞ The brethren in Plymouth have just completed arrangements for holding regular meetings. They have leased for two years the old Methodist Church, which is centrally located, and large enough to seat two hundred persons. The church has been repaired, and is now a convenient place for worship. We commenced meetings in our Chapel last Sunday, and had a full house, both morning and evening. Steps are being taken to effect an organization in this community, there are about thirty believers who will unite together for the worship of God, and keep the ordinances.

The Open Door.

"I have set before thee, an open door, and no man can shut it."

These are the words of the King. They come to us from the last visions of God to man. The scenes in the Apocalypse are manifold and sublime, but here we meet with assurance and hope. "I have set before thee an open door." Men may try to shut it, but He who holds the keys of death and the grave will not allow his interference. The Pope claims to have the key which unlocks this door, and the power to shut it, but the voice of the Master comes to us ever powerful and gracious, No man can shut it! The same glorious personage that gave this assurance has declared, "I am the door: by me, if any man enter in, he shall be saved, and shall go in and out, and find pasture." Again, says the Master, "I am the way, the truth and the life." There is but one system of truth, one fountain of life, and but one way to the kingdom of the future. Christ is that way. Human creeds and human decrees may try to hedge up the way, but it will remain God's highway for the redeemed to pass over.

When our Lord was crucified He opened the fountain, and when He was risen, He sent the tidings out to the world of nations. The door was opened wide to Jew and Gentile, bond and free. The Apostles held the keys to the kingdom, and were Christ's ambassadors, bearing the words of hope to those who sat in the valley of death. Paul and Barnabas carried the message to the nations, and published the good news in the chief cities of the Roman empire. They visited Lystra, Iconium and Antioch; and when they came to Antioch they called the church together, and "rehearsed all that God had done with them, and how he had opened the door of faith to the Gentiles." This door remains open still, and will so remain until the Master shall "arise and shut to the door."

Each dispensation has had its open door, and when the dispensation closed, the door was closed. When the flood came, the door of the ark was closed. When Christ was crucified, the age of Moses came to a close. Its door was shut. Christ then opened the new door of the Gospel. When He comes again, this age will close and with it the present conditions of salvation; but He who holds the keys of David, will commence his reign, and the nations that have not heard his fame, nor seen his glory, shall behold the majesty of Him who shall reign in Zion. And a door of hope shall then be opened. The open door implies pardon. The book of life shall then be opened. The gates of the new Jerusalem shall be open, and shall not be shut at all by day, for there shall be no night there, and the nations shall bring their glory and honor into it. We should be filled with gratitude and praise for the wonderful grace displayed toward man by the divine Father. But let us not take of his mercy who offers pardon to the erring. The Word has come to us in the fulness of faith and hope, and we must obey its voice, or the door which is now open, shall be closed against us. For many shall come unto Him in that day, and say: "Open unto us," but He shall say unto them: "Depart, I never knew you." Let these words admonish us of our danger and prepare us to go in by the door, and find grace to help in time of need.

Is Death Desirable?

The idea is quite prevalent that death is the greatest of all teachers. It is argued that the soul, no sooner leaves the body, than it knows more than all the world. Now if this be so, then it follows that death is an event greatly to be desired. The child which dies, knows more in a few minutes, than the wisest statesman or philosopher, who has spent a lifetime in arduous study. Such a view makes knowledge not a matter of growth, but a miracle! And this is directly against every law of our being, with which we are acquainted. Christ Himself grew in wisdom. Angels, that excel in strength, are ignorant of many things, now going on in the affairs of earth. To say, therefore, that infants, and indeed all classes of finite beings, are immediately, after death, made the recipients of superhuman wisdom is to unsettle every principle of mental growth and every idea of sound philosophy. The Scriptures are most pointedly against all such notions.

Death is a negation of life, and a state of rest. It is declared to be an enemy to man, and as having come into the world in consequence of sin. Instead of the mind's becoming an immediate reservoir of wisdom, it is represented as losing its power and volition. Death is a sleep wherein the mind rests from its activities, and reposes in quiet unto the morning of the resurrection. See Psa. cxlvi. 4; cxv. 17; Eccl. ix. 6-10; Acts ii. 29, 34; 1 Cor. xv. 18.

Death is now made to fill the place of the resurrection; it sends the good and bad to their rewards before judgment, and does away with the importance of the coming of our Lord. Death was introduced by sin, is pronounced an enemy to man, and yet it is now the great friend of man, and the doorway into all the glory promised in the Oracles of God. The saints are not to shout victory at death, but at the resurrection. The crown is not given at death, but when our Lord returns. Death is associated with the curse, with sorrow and pain, and is to pass away with the things of the curse. But if it is the voice of Jesus, calling his people to his arms, then indeed it cannot be an enemy, neither should the people pray for its removal from the earth. We answer, most emphatically, that death is not desirable. It was introduced by the enemy of man, and has been his universal foe throughout all time, and we can pray, with our Lord, when on the eve of that awful hour—"Father, if it be possible let this cup pass."

Brother H. B. Peirce, of the firm of Wilson, Peirce & Co., Chicago, called on us Saturday, and remained over Sunday. Brother P. seemed much pleased with our new quarters, and has promised to call again. He has been connected with the RESTITUTION for a number of years, and will continue to write for its columns. We shall be glad to hear from him.

Brother D. L. P. Clem, of La Porte, was in the city on Saturday, and gave us a call.

Brother C. P. Graham, wishes to learn the whereabouts of Brother Levi Skeels. He left Waynesville, Ill., the first of September, with his family, to go South for the winter, and has not been heard from since.

By a private letter from Brother Geo. W. Green, Memphis, Indiana, we learn that he has been meeting with good success in the proclamation of the Gospel. Some thirty persons have recently embraced the truth and become obedient to the Word of Life. We hope to hear from Brother Green through the columns of the RESTITUTION.

Punctuation of the Bible.

In showing the necessity of a new translation of the Bible, the American Bible Union offers the following important consideration:

"The punctuation of the Bible is modern. Taylor, the celebrated editor of Calmet's Dictionary, says, "It is still much to be wished that in this respect the Scriptures were carefully revised."

"Dr. Horne asserts, as clearly proved, 'that there was no regular or accustomed system of punctuation in use, in the fourth century. The majority of the points or stops now in use, are unquestionably of modern date.

"'At the invention of printing, the editors placed the points arbitrarily, probably (Michaels thinks) without bestowing the necessary attention; and Stevens in particular, it is well known, waived his points in every edition.'

"In Luke xxii. 46, it is stated that our Savior, in the garden of Gethsemane, came to his disciples, and 'found them sleeping for sorrow, and said unto them, Why sleep ye? Rise and pray,' &c. 'And while he yet spake, lo, Judas, one of the twelve, came' &c.

"In Matthew xxvi. 45, the same event is related, in the same connection; but, in the English version, the question is changed into a command to do the very thing to which he objected. 'Sleep on now, and take your rest,' &c. 'Rise, let us be going, &c. 'And while he yet spake, lo, Judas, one of the twelve, came.'

"By changing what is evidently an interrogation into a command, the translators make our Lord give two opposite commands at the same time. 'Sleep on now,' 'Rise,' 'Take your rest,' 'Let us be going.' All these discrepancies would be avoided by making the first a question—Sleep ye on now, and take your rest?—or, Do ye now sleep, and take your rest?

"The same discrepancy occurs in Mark xiv. 41, 42.

"In John xii. 27, our Savior says: "'Now is my soul troubled, and what shall I say? Father, save me from this hour? But for this cause came I unto this hour.'

"This is consistent. He is talking to his disciples, and inquires regarding the anguish which is about to overwhelm him. 'What shall I say? Shall I say, Father, save me from this hour?' But I cannot say that, because for this cause came I unto this hour.'

"In the common version, by changing what is evidently no inquiry into a prayer, the Lord is made to ask for that which he says would be inconsistent with the whole object of his life.

"Many inaccuracies in punctuation have been pointed out by commentators, but it occupies so large a space to explain any one of the cases, and to show the reasons which render the correction necessary—that we forbear to bring forward any more. It is but justice, however, to say that the changes needed in this department are fewer than might reasonably have been expected, considering that no thorough revision has been made for so long a period of time, during which scholars and theologians have had opportunity to collate Scripture with scripture, and discover the corrections needed in one place by comparison with others."—Christian Baptist.

It is not generally known, not even by Bible students, that the Scriptures are not only incorrectly punctuated, but that there is a wide disagreement between different copies in their punctuation.

In a copy of the Bible printed by the American Bible Society, A. D. 1826, we find Matt. xix. 28, punctuated thus: "Ye which have followed me in the regeneration, when the Son of Man shall sit in the throne of his glory, ye also shall sit upon twelve thrones, judging the twelve tribes of Israel." A London copy of the Douay Bible, printed A. D. 1810, has the same punctuation.

The English version of the Polyglot Bible, printed A. D. 1844, makes a slight variation in punctuating this passage, thus: "Ye which have followed me, in the regeneration, when the Son of Man shall sit in the throne of his glory," &c.

A copy of the Bible printed by the British and Foreign Bible Society, A. D. 1848, makes an important change in the punctuation of this text, thus: "Ye which have followed me, in the regeneration when the Son of man shall sit in the throne of his glory, ye also shall sit upon twelve thrones, judging the twelve tribes of Israel."

Thus it will be seen that a wide difference exists in the punctuation of this passage, between approved copies of the Bible, and this is not all; for this disagreement makes the Savior teach opposite doctrines, one of which is extremely erroneous. By placing the comma thus, "Ye that have followed me in the regeneration," &c.,—then understanding "regeneration" to mean conversion from sin, as the term is generally understood—and we are forced to the conclusion that Christ was previously a sinner, but had become converted from sin, and his apostles had followed him in this change, and for this cause they were promised to sit upon thrones, &c., without specifying when or where they were to be exalted!

The opposite, but correct doctrine is expressed by placing the comma thus—"Ye that have followed me, in the regeneration when the Son of man shall sit in the throne of his glory, ye also shall sit upon twelve thrones," &c. That is, the apostles who followed Christ in his life, were assured that they should be rewarded in the life to come, or in the regeneration, or restitution, under the glorious reign of Christ, with the high honor of sitting on twelve thrones, as joint rulers with him.

Heb. x. 12, is another text in which a very important difference in punctuation is seen, in approved copies of the New Testament; in some, the passage is punctuated thus: "But this man, after he had offered one sacrifice for sins, forever sat down at the right hand of God;" while other copies place the comma thus: "But this man when he had offered one sacrifice for sins forever, sat down at the right hand of God." According to the first case, Christ has "sat down at the right hand of God forever"—consequently will never come again! But according to the other case he has offered one sacrifice forever, therefore he will never offer himself in sacrifice again.

With a knowledge of these, and many other similar cases, which might be named, we feel justified in punctuating Luke xxiii 43, thus: "And Jesus said unto him, verily I say unto thee today, shalt thou (or thou shalt,) be with me in paradise." This sense is in perfect harmony with the forbidding circumstances under which this declaration was made. Jesus and the thief were both on the cross, and to all human appearance, the one would never have a kingdom into which to bid the other a hearty welcome. Nevertheless, the expiring Son of God most confidently made this great promise to the dying thief: "I say unto thee to-day (even this very moment of my crucifixion, and of your agonies of the cross,) shalt thou (in the future) be with me in paradise;"—or the kingdom—for I shall be raised to life eternal, and will raise you and all the saints to the same life—when I shall come again to reign with them on the earth.

The beauty and grandeur of the case are destroyed by the punctuation, as we find it in all the copies of the New Testament which we have seen. The comma is placed thus: "I say unto thee, Today shalt thou be with me in paradise;" which sense is contrary to the facts in the case; for neither Christ, nor the thief are yet in paradise, and will not be until it shall be restored.

As these inaccuracies have arisen from an imperfect knowledge of the true sense of the sacred Scriptures, or an incorrect understanding of the great economy of human redemption, we do not, therefore, expect that the American Bible Union will be able to make the necessary corrections, nor any man or association of men, of the present age of sectarian blindness. They may, however, make some amendments; we therefore wish them success in their praiseworthy undertakings. But we look not for the pure word, until it shall go forth from Jerusalem, as predicted by the prophets of the Lord.—Micah iv. 2.

The Crown of Life.

The last, best gift of Heaven, the priceless boon offered to suffering dying man, is everlasting life. To bestow this, is the grand aim of redemption. Christ came into the world to suffer and die, that his people "might have life," and have it "MORE ABUNDANTLY." The Scriptures recognize two lives, the "life that now is," and "that which is to come." The one is limited to "days" in the sentence passed against our earthly parent—"all the days of thy life," being the bound of his toiling, sorrowing existence. This narrow inheritance, has diminished to a "span"—"a hand breadth,"—as it has passed to his suffering posterity.

"Our cradle rocks us near the tomb,
Infancy borders on old age,
And months and years
Are but the gates
Through which we pass
From childhood to the tomb."

"The life to come" is everlasting. The Heavenly Adam is constituted "after the power of an endless life," in all his relations to man. "Eternal life" is in God's dear Son alone; and only those "that have the Son," have this "life." To "inherit eternal life," we must be Christ's. The rich "inheritance of ages," is through time alone. "He that hath not the Son, HATH NOT LIFE" that is, the "eternal life" that is in the Son.

What a motive to faithfulness is proposed in the Gospel. "In the world ye shall have tribulation." But "these light afflictions, which are but for a moment, work for us a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory." "Fairest flowers soonest fade" in this corruptible world.

Dying beds, shrouds, coffins, funerals, mourners, graves, and monumental marbles, the "plurima mortis imago," the ever-recurring forms of mortality, warn us that this is the land of the dying. The flowers of the "faileless inheritance" are "never withering." No weeping groups "stand around the death-bed of the nearest friends, and point the parting anguish," or "watch the coming of a painless sleep." The faithful will soon inherit the land of the ever-living. "The general assembly and church of the first-born," will soon wear the "crowns of glory" in the "kingdom of God." "BEHOLD HE COMETH," and "his reward is with him," to give to "every man according as his work shall be." We are hastening to the judgment, where

"——all that on earth have lived or died,"

we must meet the Judge of quick and dead,

"Arrayed in robes of purity for all the blest."

Take heed "that no man take thy crown."

The Fierce European Struggle at Hand.

The following passages in some of the speeches at the great meeting against Ultramontanism in Glasgow, show how observant thinkers foresee a great conflict at the unfolding:

Colonel Macdonald, the chairman, said—We cannot forget that it was here we heard but a few months ago those remarkable utterances, which struck so sharply on the ear of Britain, from the present Premier. Speaking in this hall of what he called "the coming commencing in Europe between the spiritual and temporal powers," he said—"I think we ought to be prepared. The position of England is one which is indicated, if danger arise, of holding no middle course upon these matters. It may be open to England again to take her stand for the Reformation which three hundred years ago was the source of her greatness and her glory; and it may be her proud destiny to guard civilization alike from the withering blast of atheism and the simoon of sacerdotal usurpation. If that struggle comes, we must look to Scotland to aid us. It was once, and I hope is still, a land of liberty, of patriotism, of religion." Another statesman of modern days, as eminent as the present Premier—I mean Lord Palmerston—said, not many years ago, that the day would come when we should again hear of religious wars in Europe. It seems as if they were not far distant. The forces are arrayed on each side, and no quarter will be given or taken. The banners display on one side the principles of order, of justice; on the other of darkness, of error, of anarchy.

Rev. Dr. Begg said—"Great statesmen have lately hinted at the probability of approaching convulsions of intense magnitude in Europe. This has no doubt a reference to the probable struggle for the restoration of the Pope to his temporal supremacy. There is every reason to believe that the late Franco-German war, following on the declaration of Papal infallibility, arose from a desire to crush Protestantism in its mightiest Continental stronghold. The result, however, was in the gracious providence of God the very reverse. France was conquered. Germany was triumphant, and the Pope was ousted from his temporal dominion. The object of the Vatican is now to reverse all this, and so soon as there is a monarchy in France, or perhaps also in Spain, the restoration of the Pope to his personal sovereignty will probably be attempted by force of arms. This will be resisted no doubt by Italy and Germany, and will probably thus end in a European war. The Romanists over Europe have made a league of St. Sebastian, ready to take part in the bloody fray.

Dr. Manning seems to glory and exult in the prospect of all this. He is reported to have said, at a meeting held in Willis' Rooms, London, on January 25th, 1874: "The excited antagonism of the nations of Europe is founded on a fact" (the temporal power of the Pope) "full of consolations." "Instead of being alarmed, or scared, or discouraged, by the great sharpening of animosity, and the great massing together of antagonists, I look upon it as the most beautiful sign." "Now, when nations have revolted, and when they have dethroned, as far as men can dethrone, the Vicar of Jesus Christ, and when they have made the usurpation of the Holy City a part of international law, when all this has been done, there is only one solution of the difficulty—a solution, I fear, impending, and that is, the terrible scourge of Continental war—a war which will exceed the horrors of any of the wars of the First Empire. I do not see how this can be averted."

Rev. Dr. Wylie, of Edinburgh, said—I have long felt and often said that when there would come the day of the Church of Rome's extremity, would come the day of our peril. It was easy to enforce that, so long as she was permitted to retain her temporal sovereignty, and the Pope was able to rank himself among the other crowned heads, that she would study to keep on something like good terms with the nations; but that, should she be stripped of all, and driven forth crownless and kingdomless, then woe to the nations; she would take a signal revenge. She may now be said to be stripped of all her temporal power, and brought down to what she was twelve hundred years ago, and now she plainly tells us the hour is come! For what? For wrapping her mantle gracefully around her and dying? No! She means us that the hour is come for a stand-up fight, and that she will fight it out to the last. But you say that is madness. With what will she fight? she has neither army nor fleet. But the folly lies with those who believe in nothing that they do not see.

Despite all the reverses that have overtaken her, the Church of Rome is still, as regards the sinews of war—as regards material force, the strongest confederacy on the face of the earth. If she can manage to raise Don Carlos to the throne of Spain, and the Prince Imperial to the throne of France, she will have the fleets and armies of at least two kingdoms at her service. But even failing in this, has she not the vast majority of the populations of these two kingdoms at her back? Has she not the majority even in Italy? Has she not fourteen millions in Bavaria; five millions in Ireland; millions more in Canada and the United States; millions more scattered up and down in Europe? Has she not, at a modest calculation, some fifty millions which the doctrine of Papal Infallibility gives her the means of uniting into one phalanx, of setting in motion by a single head, and of precipitating like an avalanche upon Christianity and liberty. Rome may well say to the Protestant, "Hast thou seen the treasures of the hail which I have reserved against the day of battle and of war?"

"We shall soon see," says the Foi, Verite, the organ of the Jesuits, "all Christendom divided into two camps; on the one side the champions of Christ and his church; on the other the servants of Belial. We shall pass," continues that paper, "through severe conflicts, but the history of eighteen centuries assures us of final victory." I tell you, you have to do with a power capable of forming the boldest scheme—a scheme equal to the crisis that has come upon her, and which has the courage to execute it. You have to do with a power which slowly ripens her plans, hides her time, and then suddenly leaps out of the darkness to wrap cities in civil war, and kingdoms in revolution. It is a sudden and unawares fall of that sort that overhangs at this hour all Christendom, and our own country among others. All is now in peril; and though the fight may be a hard one, we cannot decline it save at the cost of accepting something harder still—of accepting revolution and ruin.—Signs of our Times.

The Spanish Artist and the Last Supper.

A Spanish artist was once employed to paint the "Last Supper." It was his object to throw all the sublimity of his art into the figure and countenance of the Lord Jesus; but he put on the table in the foreground some chased cups, the workmanship of which was exceedingly beautiful. When his friends came to see the picture on the easel, every one said, "What beautiful cups!" "Ah!" said he, "I have made a mistake; these cups divert the eyes of the spectator from the Lord, to whom I wished to direct the attention of the observer." And he forthwith took up his brush and blotted them from the canvass, that the strength and vigor of the chief object might be prominently seen and observed. Thus all Christians should feel their great study to be Christ's exaltation; and whatever is calculated to hinder man from beholding Him, in all the glory of his person and works, should be removed out of the way! "God forbid that I should glory, save in the cross of our Lord Jesus Christ." Let the sentiment and language of Paul be ours.

The Certainty of Christ's Coming.

If Christianity can teach us any thing, or if the declarations of the Scriptures are at all binding upon us, as we profess to believe that they are, we must accept it as a truth, and rely upon it as an infallible verity, that the same Jesus who was born at Bethlehem, crucified on Calvary, and received up into heaven from Mount Olivet, is literally and personally to return again to this world, to be seen with our eyes and heard with our ears, as He was seen and heard in the day that He was taken up. If this be not true, there is no truth in language, no importation in the Bible, no substance in our faith, no reality in the Christian's hope. The methods of interpretation which can explain away this doctrine, or detach from the teachings and joyous expectations of the prophets and apostles, must, at the same rate, silence all that we have hitherto heeded as the Oracles of God, and leave us in a world of darkness with our only lights suddenly and forever extinguished. We accordingly accept and declare it, as a doctrine that must stand or fall with Christianity itself, that Jesus is literally and personally, and with great power and glory, to return again to this world, once more to tread the localities already hallowed to his church by his miracles and prayers and tears and blood.—Prophetic Times.

☞ God "only hath immortality." 1 Tim. vi. 16. Christ hath brought life and immortality to light. 2 Tim. i. 10. Those only will obtain immortality "who by patient continuance in well-doing seek" for it. Rom. ii. 7. To such, immortality will be given at the coming of Christ. 1 Cor. xv. 50-53. Unwise indeed, are those who do not secure this inestimable blessing.

Feeling.

Judging from the constant reference made to feeling in the public discourses and private conversation of modern Christians, one might expect to find the word often mentioned in the Sacred Scriptures. It is of such frequent use now that is quite common in many parts of the country to go out of the way in order to drag it in most unparalelly into Prayer and Conference meetings, as when we hear one say, "I feel to thank God," and another, "I feel to mourn over my short comings," and another, "I feel to lament the low condition of the church." It is certainly worthy of remark, as I may be profitable, to notice the suggestive contrast between the prominence given to feeling by most believers of the present day, and the profound silence maintained about it in the Word of God.

According to Cruden's Concordance it occurs but twice in the entire Bible, and in neither of these instances in the sense which it is now so generally employed. The first describes the Christ-rejecting and hardened rioter "as being past feeling," (Eph. iv. 19,) and the second very sweetly advises us that "we have not an high priest which cannot be touched with the feeling of our infirmities," (literally unable to sympathize with our infirmities). (Heb. iv. 14.) but here the allusion is to Christ's feeling and not to ours. The word feel is found in six places. In the first Jacob expresses the fear to his mother that their deception will be discovered by the blind old father, for, says the supplanter, "my father peradventure will feel me." Gen. xxvii. 12. In the second, blind Samson says to the lad that held him by the hand, "Suffer me that I may feel the pillars whereupon the house standeth." Judges xvi. 26. In the third it is written, "He shall not feel (translated in the margin know) quietness." Job xx. 20. In the fourth it is written, "Before your pots can feel the thorns." Psa. lviii. 9. In the fifth, "Whom keepeth the commandment shall feel (translated in the margin know) no evil thing." Eccl. viii. 5. In the sixth, "That they should seek the Lord, if haply they might feel after him," (Acts xvii. 27,) the word translated feel being never so rendered elsewhere, but twice by the word handle and once by the word touch.

In our argument, then, driving at feeling, or a true Christian experience, and insisting on a cold, intellectual assent to the dogmas of theology, as sufficient to save? God forbid. Nothing could be more unscriptural, or more disastrous. But we do protest against the wretched folly of pumping at our dry hearts in order to bring up feeling, instead of having our thoughts wholly occupied about Christ in forgetfulness of our feeling. It is nowhere said he that feeleth good or feeleth bad shall be saved, but he that believeth, and believing takes us out of self into the Savior. The more clearly we enter by faith into what He has done for us, and what He is for us in the heavens, the more genuine will be the feeling within us, and the more beautiful will be the manifestation of the power of faith in our character and conduct. The measure of our likeness to Him is the exact measure of our intimacy with Him in undoubting, unquestioning communion; and if we thought less of our fitful feeling, and more of his finished work, we would oftener have the feeling we desire, without knowing, perhaps, whence it came.

We also protest against the tendency, sometimes exhibited, to rely upon experience for salvation. It is not feeling, nor experience that saves, nor yet faith, except as the hand of a starving beggar, outstretched by imparted power to receive the food freely given, may be said to save him; but it is Christ. The ground, therefore, of an intelligent, Christian hope is not that we were converted five ten, twenty, or forty years ago, but that Christ bore our sins on the cross eighteen hundred and forty years ago. A true faith then, will not be looking at experience, nor at itself, to see if it is the right kind, but at Christ, knowing that He is the right object, and that it is not the work wrought in him, but the work wrought for him, which places us before God without spot. Hence the Holy Spirit in the Scriptures does not call our attention to experience as the foundation of confidence, but always to Jesus, who says of the Spirit, "He shall not speak of himself" John xvi. 13. "He shall testify of me." John xv. 26. Let us more and more stay our mind wholly on our risen Lord, remembering that our life is hid with Him in God; and whatever the fluctuations of our feeling and experience, we can still sing with Faber:—

Remarkable Mind-Reading.

If all reports are true, J. R. Brown, the mind-reader, has a formidable rival in the field. Frank Jr. Corry, of Galesburg, Kalamazoo county, Michigan, gave a public exhibition of his skill in that art at Ypsilanti the other evening, and a gentleman who was present, gives us the following account of the strange things he saw there:

He says that Professors Estabrook and Bellows, of the Normal School, and Dr. Owen acted as the examining committee, and that every precaution was taken to guard against deception or conspiracy, while the tests were as difficult as it was possible to make them. Having blindfolded Mr. Corry, a well-known gentleman in the audience passed down two flights of stairs, passed halfway round the building, retraced his steps, and passing around in the opposite direction, went to his store, a square or more distant, placed his false teeth in the safe, replaced them in his mouth, and returning to the hall, reported that he had secreted an article unobserved by anybody, and asked the mind-reader to lead the way to it. Without hesitation Mr. Corry grasped the merchant's wrist and started on a rapid trot out of the hall, down the stairway, followed by the committee, first round the building in one direction, then in the other, and then to the store, and going directly to the drawer of the safe where the teeth had been a few moments before, and finding it empty, passed the hand slowly up the merchant's arm to his face, with the remark, "The article is in your mouth, sir."

A different and even more difficult test was this: A gentleman stated that, before leaving his home that evening, he had written four words upon a piece of paper, and then hid the paper, with a view of having Mr. Corry find and read the words were, and then find the paper. The blindfolded revealer of secrets, taking the questions in one hand, and with the other pointing to a large cardboard containing an alphabet, deliberately spelled out four words, then stepping across the room, took from an inside pocket of an overcoat that hung across a chair, a glove, from one of the fingers of which he drew out a small slip of paper. This he handed to the committee, and to their astonishment they found written upon it the four words just spelled out from the cardboard. The questioner said those were the words he had written, and he had concealed the paper in that place, and he was as much mystified as anybody at the result of his experiment.

Several tests, similar to those applied to Mr. Brown, were made, and as our informant avers, without a single failure in the course of the evening. Professor Bellows, fixing his attention upon a certain pupil of the Normal School, asked the mind-reader to spell out the name, which our informant thinks was P. A. Reade. Mr. Corry spelled the name, and some one observing that it was spelled incorrectly, Professor Bellows explained that he had mentally added a final "e" which did not belong there, in order to see whether the mind-reader would spell it the same way. Again, one of the committee went out into the street with Mr. Corry, and during their absence another member of the committee collected a number of ladies' gloves, and laid them in a row along the front of the stage. When Mr. Corry returned, he first led Professor Bellows to the gentleman who collected the gloves, then he led the latter to one of the ladies, and ended the round by leading the lady to the stage and placing his hand upon the only glove in the whole row which belonged to her.

Such is the substance of the almost incredible story, which we give as we got it, without addition, alteration or comment.

Mr. Corry is, we believe, a mechanic, about 25 years of age, having only a common school education, and a fair kind of general information. He has dark hair and eyes, and inclines to the nervous temperament, but is not especially remarkable in his general appearance. He has for several years been aware of a peculiar power in reading the thoughts of those with whom he came in contact, but he had not given the matter serious thought or even a name until the exploits of Mr. Brown stirred him up to try the same experiments, and it seems with even better success. He offers no explanation of this, but leaves it for the scientists to investigate. He is content for the present, at least, to remain a psychological phenomenon or mysterious riddle. He is now visiting relatives in Detroit, and it is to be hoped that an opportunity will soon be afforded for further testing his wonderful powers.—Detroit Free Press.

The Human Life of Jesus.

In taking up an old study of the human life of Washington the other day, in which something is said about the mother of that wonderful boy, to mold the genius of the ideal person men are gradually painting out of their imagination, I was led to think afresh about the same truth in the life of Christ, and to see how in this life as in the other, there is a perpetual tendency toward the creation of an ideal Jesus to the exclusion from our thought and life of the actual, a trick of the imagination through which men see him among the clouds and splendors of heaven, while his true place all the while lies among the lights and shadows of the life we have to live on this earth. Into which we also came from God, that he might teach us the true secret of living to a high and holy purpose, and that he might inspire us through his great example, not as a God, who was above it all, while he was still in some sense in it, but as the man who had to share and sympathize in our sorrows and trials and temptations. Now and then in the monasteries of the far east they find a parchment written all over with legend and stories of saints, beautifully engrossed, perhaps emblazoned with capitals and borders of purple and gold. But looking this parchment up to the light, they detect within this splendid show the marks of an older record, and wash what is on the surface carefully away to find under it a primitive and precious text of the gospels, or a lost fragment of one of the great classics of Greece or Rome. And some such process goes on all the time with this human life of Jesus. We write out of the rich colors of the heart such things as please us, and close that hear us, if we are preachers. We make them beautiful by the arts of religion and philosophy, and then we say that is Jesus. It is no more Jesus than Murillo's matchless maid, with the angels sitting about her, is Mary sitting in her homely little room by nine chamber, and brooding over the blessed mystery of motherhood. The real and true Jesus stands within all this embarrassing, simple, sincere, perfectly human, and therefore divine.—Robt. Collyer.

Question.

How is it about the seventy weeks spoken of in Dan. ix.? Have sixty-nine of the weeks expired, and then stopped for want of the people and city, which must all be fulfilled upon them? At any date the city or people failed to be in existence, necessarily put a stop to it till they are replaced. How otherwise are we to understand it? No theory is true that does not let the seventy weeks come in with the "end of sin," and "everlasting righteousness," and "cleansing the sanctuary." Did the crucifixion consume sixty-two, then seven more take away the city? Will Brother Larkin please explain again on this passage.

Prayer.

There is a tendency among our brethren to discard all kinds of form and ceremony. This is as it should be, if the ceremonies are mere outward ordinances, and have no scriptural authority.

But there seems to be danger of carrying this principle too far. In our rejection of all creeds and forms, it is not necessary that we should discard all kinds of order or system, in our worship and daily life. There can be no effectual organization, for the furtherance of truth, without some plan or system by which to be guided. I think our brethren as a class do not have enough temporal religion, some of them carrying this fear of forms so far as to dispense with family worship. Is this as it should be? Is it the kind of example to set before the world and your own children? How the family ties of love and confidence in each other are strengthened, as they are gathered together for family prayers, when the public curtain of night is drawn around a sleeping world. How barren are the days, when we are separated from our earthly friends, and have no words of kindly sympathy and communication, to lighten the sorrows and strengthen the joys of this life. But how much more desolate to the weary ones of earth, in the ghostly and dark day, to have no Heavenly Father to whom they may go in the full assurance of help and comfort—and in obedience to Him who has never said: "Seek ye my face in vain."

Sound Reasoning.

BROTHER REED:—

In reading three Essays on Religion by the noted scientific Philosopher, John Stuart Mill, of England, I find some reasoning on the character and government of God, which should be well considered, and so I send a few of his thoughts for insertion in the RESTITUTION.

Reasoning on God's dealings with our race, has been too much discarded by the Christian world, and blind mystery adopted to sustain old creeds. This course, thank God, does not satisfy thinking minds in our day, and, indeed, never has. Good reason and the Bible agree, when it is rightly explained and taken as a whole. Our age of success in doctrinal reforms is marked by seeing more boldness connected by writers than ever before in condemning certain gross errors. In the "Christian Union" of October 14, 1874, an article is inserted denouncing endless torment in strong language and with powerful arguments. The "Christian Union," of New York, is a popular Congregational paper, and we may take courage by its admitting such articles. We have never seen the like before in popular religious papers. I hear the writer of the article is Associate Editor of that paper.

I lately read a written sermon by an able Congregational preacher of San Francisco, taking strong ground against the horrible dogma of eternal woe; and from what I read and hear, it is to be hoped that it will soon be given up by that strong denomination.

The following are the remarks by Prof. Mill referred to above:

"In the Christianity of the gospel, at least in its ordinary interpretation, there are some things of so flagrant a character as to almost outweigh all the beauty, and benignity, and moral greatness which so eminently distinguish the sayings and character of Christ. The recognition, for example, of the doctrine which represents a God who could make a hell; and who could create countless generations of human beings with the certain knowledge that He was creating them for this fate. Is there any moral enormity which might not be justified by imitation of such a Deity? And is it possible to adore such a Deity without a frightful distortion of the standard of right and wrong?

But there is another moral contradiction inseparable from every form of Christianity, which no ingenuity can resolve, and no sophistry explain away. It is, that so precious a gift, bestowed on a few, should have been withheld from the many; that countless millions of human beings should have been allowed to live and die, to sin and suffer without the one thing needful, the divine remedy for sin and suffering, which it would have cost the Divine Giver as little to have vouchsafed to all as to have bestowed by special grace upon a favored minority?

Here is sound reasoning. But the Bible when rightly explained, presents no such difficulties as this able writer rightly condemns. False creeds are responsible for these gross errors.

The Space the Dead Occupy.

We find the following question and answer in the New York "Observer."

If all the human race, from the creation to the present day, were buried side by side, how many square miles would they cover?

Answer.—The population of the globe at the present time is estimated at nine hundred million. It is also estimated that a number equal to the entire population of the globe, existing at any one time, passes away three times in every century. As the present population of the globe has increased from a single pair, created about sixty centuries ago, one-half of the present population might be taken as a fair estimate of the average number who have passed away during each of the one hundred and eighty periods, or thirds of centuries, during which the earth may have been inhabited, which would give eight billion one hundred million for the whole number who have lived on the earth. Allowing an average of three square feet for the burial of each person, on the supposition that one-half the number die in infancy, and they would cover twenty-four billion three hundred million of square feet of earth; dividing this by twenty-seven million the number of square feet in a mile, and we have less than eight hundred and seventy-two square miles, which would afford sufficient room to bury side by side all who have been buried in the dust of earth—all of whom would not suffice to cover the little State of Rhode Island.

This estimate shows how widely those persons draw on their imaginations, who affirm that not a foot of earth exists on the globe that has not served as the burial place of man; or who deny the possibility of the resurrection of the body, on the pretense that the earth would not afford room for the resurrected inhabitants to stand!

Near Bethel School House, six miles southwest of Rockville, Schuyler Co., Illinois, CELESTIA A. YOUNG, daughter of H. E. and M. E. Cooper, near Fort Scott, Kansas, leaving a husband, and four children, the youngest of which was only seven days old. Sister Young embraced the Gospel and was immersed into Christ at the age of fourteen years, and lived faithful, and died in the faith at the age of twenty-three. A part in the first resurrection will be her reward.

At Union Grove, Mo., RUTH WORKMAN, wife of David Workman, aged seventy-one years, departed this life May 2, 1874. She was a Methodist for over thirty years. In 1869 she heard the good message of the kingdom, as preached by Elder A. F. Dugger, and was by him immersed in the faith of the Gospel of the kingdom, in which faith she died, expecting to sleep until the coming of the Lifegiver. Her funeral was preached by Brother A. F. Dugger, Oct. 29, 1874, to a large audience from Paul's words, "If after the manner of men I have fought with beasts at Ephesus, what advantageth it me if the dead rise not; let us eat and drink for to-morrow we die." It was most clearly, scripturally and logically shown that without a resurrection from the dead there was no future existence for the righteous.

THE END IS NEAR.

Clouds of darkness gathering o'er us,
Awful tidings with them bear;
Scenes of misery spread before us—
Death, and pestilence, and war;
All, in one loud, piercing chorus,
Tell us that the end is near.

Hearts of men within them failing
For the coming woes they fear;
All their efforts unavailing—
No propitious signs appear,
Sin increasing, crimes prevailing,
Tell us that the end is near.

Selfishness is still ensnaring;
Gold the idol every where,
Worshipped by a host, confessing
Gold for all that's good or fair;
Crowds the mammon-god surrounding,
Tell us that the end is near.

Formal godliness increasing,
Power denied, and forms held dear;
Christ and fashion coalescing,
Forming now the character;
Rites to popular and pleasing,
Tell us that the end is near.

Lawlessness so vastly spreading,
Void of reverence, awe, or fear;
Sacred things beneath it treading,
Stamped with God's own signature;
Never once his vengeance dreading,
Tell us that the end is near.

War, that heart-recurse of nations,
Running on its dread career;
While the mass its desolations
Listless or applauding hear;
War, with its abominations,
Tell us that the end is near.

Saints of God all still hating,
Faithful to the name they bear,
For their coming Savior waiting,
To be caught up in the air;
Hence their rest and blessing dating,
Tell us that the end is near.

Sinner, wouldst thou in the glory
Of that "cloudless morning" share?
Wouldst thou have this hope before thee?
Wear the crown saints then will wear?
Oh! believe redemption's story;
Look to Christ! the end is near.

—Prophetic Key.

The Resurrection a Revealed Fact.

Peter, when first announcing the resurrection of Christ, felt that he might confidently appeal to this event as evidence of his Messiahship, since in their own sacred books, David had declared of this Prophet, that "His soul should not be left in hades, nor his flesh see corruption."

The denial of a resurrection was, however, in all probability, not peculiar to the Sadducees. All through the Gospel history sceptics on this subject made their appearance. Paul says to the Corinthians, "How say some among you that there is no resurrection of the dead?" 1 Cor. xv. 12. And Timothy is warned of men who teach that "the resurrection is past already," and, in so doing, "overthrow the faith of some." 2 Tim. ii. 18. The church of Christ in every age has had those among its members who have endeavored to so spiritualize this great event as to make it rather a subjective change than an outward reality; and probably there never was a time when such notions prevailed more widely among professing Christians than they do at the present day.

And yet a belief in the fact of a resurrection of the dead lies at the very basis of the Gospel; for "if there be no resurrection of the dead, then is Christ not risen;" and if Christ be not risen, then is preaching and faith alike "vain." 1 Cor. xv. 13, 14. The event itself is declared on inspired authority, to be the fulfillment of the prophecy regarding Messiah, in which God says to Him, "Thou art my Son; this day have I begotten thee." Psa. ii. 7; Acts xiii. 33. It is the proclamation by God Himself that Christ is his only Son, clothed "with power, according to the spirit of holiness," (Rom. i. 4,) and the reception of it as a truth is regarded as Scripture, not as a late attainment, or as "wisdom for the perfect," but as one of the very first elements of the Christian life. Heb. vi. 2.

Of the nature of the resurrection little is revealed; of its results much. The passages which relate to its nature are chiefly the following:—

1. Luke xiv. 14.—"Thou shalt be recompensed at the resurrection of the just," for feeding "the poor, the maimed, the lame, and the blind."

Here future reward for kindness shown to the needy on earth is distinctly recognized. The promise, be it observed, is made, not to be disciples, but to one of the Pharisees that bade Him to a feast. xiv. 1. May it not, then, fairly be asked whether such a passage does not seem naturally to refer to a dispensation of rewards and punishments to be entered upon at the resurrection, differing, both in kind and in degree, from the blessedness which awaits the elect?

2. John v. 28, 29.—"The hour is coming, in the which all that are in the graves shall come forth; they that have done good, unto the resurrection of life; and they that have done evil, unto the resurrection of condemnation."

Here the retributive character of the world (or age) to come, is again clearly stated, although in this case it is rather with reference to the general course and character of the life than to any particular act.

3. Matt. xii. 31, 32.—"It shall not be forgiven him, neither in this world, neither in the world to come."

This text is properly regarded as in itself conclusive against universalism. Be it so; but is it not, then, equally conclusive in favor of the supposition that some sins, not forgiven in this world, will be forgiven in the world to come? Dean Alford says, "No sure inference can be drawn from these words with regard to forgiveness of sins in a future state." I admit this, for all inferences, deduced from Scripture, however necessary they may seem to us, introduce a human element, and should therefore never be placed side by side with a divine statement. Olshausen understands the passage (as many others have done) to imply forgiveness on repentance in the imperfect state of the dead before the judgment.

4. Matt. xix. 28-30, compared with Luke xxii. 28-30.—"Ye also shall sit upon twelve thrones, judging the twelve tribes of Israel."

This text is commonly expounded as referring to "a renewing work of grace." The Apostles, it is said, "restored, while on earth, upon the royalty referred to, in their own persons, and continue it in their writings." If this be not rationalistic interpretation, it is hard to say what is. The word paliggenesia (regeneration) is construed, at the public schools and the universities, "in the resurrection," and there is no doubt as to that being its true meaning. Why not, then, take it as it stands, and regard it as teaching that at the resurrection the Apostles will literally be rulers, under Christ, of their nation?

5. Phil. iii. 11.—"If by any means I might attain unto the resurrection of the dead."

Is it possible to imagine that St. Paul only refers here to that resurrection which is common to all? Is it reasonable to separate this from what is said elsewhere about "the first resurrection?" 1 Thess. iv. 16; Rev. xx. 5,)—that prior judgment of saints which is to take place before the rest of the dead are raised, and which is so closely associated with their taking part in the judgment of the world, (1 Cor. vi. 2, 3,) a judgment which is not to decide whether they (the saints) are Christ's or not, but to allot to them rewards or deprivations, "according to their works."

The restoration to which St. Paul aspired was evidently one which implied, to him, the reception of the unfading crown. 1 Cor. ix. 25; 2 Tim. iv. 8. It is very remarkable that in the Apocalypse (chapter xx.) after a symbolic vision of thrones of judgment (verse 4,) there follows a distinct explanatory assertion,—"This is the first resurrection," just as we are told, after the casting of death and hell into the lake of fire,—"This is the second death." Rev. xx. 14.

After the actual resurrection of the Redeemer, the doctrine seems to assume a new form. It is now preached, not in the old form, as taught by the prophets, but as inseparable from the work of the Lord Jesus. The vexation of the Jews at the Apostles is not that the mere fact of the resurrection is taught, but that they preached through Jesus the resurrection from the dead. Acts iv. 2. "With great power," we are told, "gave the Apostles witness of the resurrection of the Lord Jesus; and great grace was upon them all." Verse 33.

This topic, it is evident, occupied a very prominent place in the ministrations of St. Paul. To the heathen his message seems to have been very much summed up in this,—"He preached unto them Jesus, and the resurrection." Acts xvii. 18. It was when they heard "of the resurrection of the dead" that "some mocked" and others pondered.

In relation to the Jews, the Apostle's teaching often took a similar shape. On any other supposition, it seems difficult to see how he could say, when before the council "Of the hope and resurrection of the dead I am called in question," (Acts xxiii. 6,) for he was certainly not accused of preaching the resurrection as any other Pharisee would have done.

Shortly after, when before Felix, he repeats his belief, in common with the Jew, "that there shall be a resurrection of the dead, both of the just and unjust," and says, "For this one voice, touching the resurrection of the dead, I am called in question." Acts xxiv. 15, 21.

Before Agrippa he puts the matter somewhat differently, but still involving the same thought. "I stand and am judged for the hope of the promise made of God unto our fathers; unto which promise our twelve tribes, instantly serving God day and night, hope to come. For which hope's sake, king Agrippa, I am accused of the Jews. Why should it be thought a thing incredible with you that God should raise the dead?" Acts xxvi. 6-8.

The resurrection from the dead, and the happy consummation of the hopes and prayers of the twelve tribes day and night, are regarded as one event. The triumphs of Messiah,—the fulfillment of all the promises to Abraham and the glorious prospects held out in the Prophets, are one and all linked to the resurrection from the dead.

In latter days, difficulties of another class presented themselves. They are embodied in the sceptical inquiry of the Corinthians relative to the possibility of such an event.

"With what body do they come?" 1 Cor. xv. 35. What is this but the question, so often put now in forms like these,—"How is it possible so to unite the present world and the next, as to consider the latter in any sense the complement of the former? The body will have dissolved in the grave. With it will have disappeared all the countless influences it exercised over the spirit. How is it possible so to bridge the great gulf which separates time from eternity, that anything corresponding to this life can be carried on in another world? With what body do they come? Discipline, and therefore probation, must terminate on earth, for the natural body and the spiritual body can have little or nothing in common."

To all which Paul replies,—Thou fool, didst thou never sow wheat and reap wheat? Is the wheat thou didst reap so different from the wheat thou didst sow? Is it not rather, in spite of the primal decay, though not the same, yet the very same wheat? So will it be at the resurrection.

To the inquiry, "With what body do they come?" St. Paul gives an answer, a portion of which seems, to a great extent, hitherto to have escaped notice. He says, in fact, that at the resurrection bodies will differ—"to every seed his own body." As "all flesh is not the same flesh," so all bodies in the future world, will not be alike. Just as the sun, moon, and stars differ in glory, and one star differeth from another, so in that world will it be at the resurrection from the dead. We shall all die, or be "changed." But the dead in Christ will be raised incorruptible, and the mortal put on immortality; for of their bodies only can it be said, they are "sown in dishonor," but "raised in glory." What other changes will take place on that day, we can only infer from the word's of the Prophet, "He will swallow up death in victory;" he will destroy the face of the covering cast over all people, and the vail that is spread over all nations." Isa. xxv. 7, 8.—Henry Dunn.

Time of the Advent.

I have been upon the point of writing something for the RESTITUTION for a long time, but pressure of other things has crowded it out of mind, if not out of season.

The question I wish to discuss is a very important one, being the coming of Christ, or the question of his disciples to Him concerning the restoration of the kingdom to Israel. Acts i. 6. Almost all expositors (and especially that class who believe in the second personal coming of Christ) take the position that He gave his disciples to understand that they should know of the times and seasons, after the power was bestowed upon them.

Now I write to object to this interpretation of Christ's sayings to them upon that occasion, and to show that He taught them the very opposite, and that his apostles were as ignorant of the precise time of his coming, as believers of the present age. While they all believed that He would come and carry out the Father's gracious purpose, concerning national salvation, resurrection, judgment, and all other things connected therewith, yet the precise time was purposely hidden from them and us.

My mind was called to this subject while visiting certain friends of "definite time" faith. They read the Scripture referred to above to prove that they (and we) should know of the time, and thus be wise and able to instruct others.

I saw plainly that the question had reference to definite time,—wilt thou at this time restore, etc. So also did the answer of Christ to them, and taught the reverse of that for which it was quoted to prove.

1. The question.—"Wilt thou at this time," etc.

2. The answer.—"It is not for you to know the times and seasons which the Father hath put in his own power."

Query: Did Christ tell them in the first place that it was not for them to know of the times and seasons, and in the second place tell them that they should know all about the things that were not for them to know? This would be teaching yea and nay which was not his custom.

In his answer, He tells them that it was not for them to know of the times and seasons of the restoration of the kingdom to their nation, which would change their vocation from that of witnesses to that of rulers of the twelve tribes, which would have been a glorious change, and the desire therefor a laudable one; but He tells them their chief employment would be to witness for Him unto the uttermost parts of the earth, and suffer for his name, and bide the time of the restoration, so much longed for and hoped for.

The precise time of the coming of Christ being hidden from the Apostles, we cannot arrive at definite time from any or all their writings.

Some one may ask; "Don't you believe that the wise will understand the time?" Yes, but not exactly. If you mean the wise among the Gentiles, no; but if you mean the wise among Daniel's people, then I say emphatically yes.

Moses parents understood that he was a proper child (to deliver Israel from Egyptian bondage) and that those years were well nigh ended, so it was necessary that he should be reared and trained for this purpose; the reader knows the sequel, and the Apostle tells us it was by faith.

The wise among Daniel's people understood that the appearance of one to rule Israel drew nigh, hence they come and ask: "Where is he that is born king of the Jews?" So we believe that the wise among Daniel's people will understand the time of the coming of that Prophet like unto Moses, to deliver them from universal bondage, and to place the twelve Apostles over them. Then their governors will have proceeded from among themselves, their officers will exact peace, and their exactors righteousness.

When this shall come to pass, the request of the Apostles will be granted, in the times and seasons of the Father, made manifest in the opening of the future ages in all their glory.

Brain and Thought.

Richmond mentions the case of a woman whose brain was exposed in consequence of the removal of a considerable portion of its bony covering by disease. He says he repeatedly made pressure on the brain, and each time suspended all feeling and all intellect, which was instantly restored when the pressure was withdrawn. The same writer also relates another case, that of a man who had been trepanned, and who perceived his intellectual faculties failing, and his existence drawing to a close, every time the effused blood collected upon the brain so as to produce pressure. Professor Chapman, of Philadelphia, mentions, in his Lectures, that he saw an individual with his skull perforated and the brain exposed, who was accustomed to submit himself to the same experiment of pressure as the above, and who was exhibited by the late Professor Wistar to his class. His intellect and moral faculties disappeared on the application of pressure to the brain; they were held under the thumb, as it were, and restored at pleasure to their full activity by discontinuing the pressure. But the most extraordinary case of this kind within my knowledge, and one peculiarly interesting to the physiologist and metaphysician, is related by Sir Astley Cooper in his Surgical Lectures. A man, by the name of Jones, received an injury of his head while on board a vessel in the Mediterranean, which rendered him insensible. The vessel, some after this made Gibraltar, where Jones was placed in the hospital, and remained several months in the same insensible state. He was then carried on board the Dolphin frigate to Deptford, and from thence to St. Thomas' Hospital, London. He lay constantly on his back, and breathed with difficulty. His pulse was regular, and each time it beat he moved his fingers. When hungry or thirsty he moved his lips and tongue. Mr. Clyne, the surgeon, found a portion of the skull depressed, trepanned him, and removed the depressed portion. Immediately after this operation the motion of the fingers ceased, and at four o'clock in the afternoon (the operation having been performed at one) he sat up in bed; sensation and volition returned, and in four days he got out of bed and conversed. The last thing he remembered was the circumstance of taking a prize in the Mediterranean. From the moment of the accident, thirteen months and a few days, oblivion had come over him, and all recollection ceased. He had, for more than one year, drunk of the cup of Lethe, and lived wholly unconscious of existence; yet, on removing a small portion of the bone which pressed upon the brain, he was restored to the full possession of the powers of his mind and body.—Dr. Brigham.

Take Care of Your Thoughts.

Sin begins in the heart. If you keep your thoughts pure, your life will be blameless. The indulgence of sinful thoughts and desires produces sinful actions. When lust hath conceived, it bringeth forth sin. The pleasurable contemplation of a sinful deed is usually followed by its commission. Never allow yourself to pause and consider the pleasures or profits you might derive from this sin. Close your mind against the suggestion at once, as you would lock and bolt your doors against a robber. If Eve had not stood parleying with the devil, and admiring the beautiful fruit, the earth might have yet been a Paradise. No one becomes a thief, a fornicator, or a murderer at once. The mind must be corrupted. The wicked suggestion must be indulged and revolved in the thoughts, until it loses its hideous deformity, and the anticipated gain or pleasure comes to outweigh the evils of the transgression.

Your imagination is apt to paint forbidden pleasure in gay and dazzling colors. It is the serpent's charm. Gaze not upon the picture. Suffer not the intruder to get a lodgement. Meet the enemy at the threshold, and drive it from your heart. As a rule, the more familiar you become with sin, the less hateful it appears; so that the more completely you preserve your mind from unholy and wicked thoughts, the better. Avoid the society where obscenity or blasphemy is heard. Cultivate the society of the virtuous.

Read nothing which is unchaste or immoral. Make a covenant with your eyes. Familiarize not your mind with the loathsome details of crime. Never harbor malicious or envious thoughts. Direct your thoughts toward pure and holy subjects. Contemplate the character of the spotless and perfect Son of God. Keep your spirit untainted, your thoughts uncontaminated, so shall your life be virtuous. As a man thinketh, so is he. Take care of the thoughts—the actions will take care of themselves.—Sel.

Preach Christ.

Our readers need only examine how we preach Christ to form an idea how far we are evangelical. Shall we glory in the beauty of our composition—in the flowers of rhetoric—in the force or oratory—in the harmony of periods—and leave the cross out as unfashionable? Thus did not Paul. Shall we glory in the teachings—in the example of Christ—and not in the cross of Christ also? So did not Paul. See! he is going into Greece, the eye of the world—and what did he do? "I determined not to know any thing among you, but Jesus Christ and him crucified." He is going to Rome, the imperial city—among sages, generals, poets, legislators, and statesmen. Will he not change the theme? Will he not there talk of the "Supreme Being—eternal providence—destiny," etc.? No. "I am not ashamed of the Gospel of Christ, for it is the power of God unto salvation, to every one that believeth, to the Jew first and also to the Gentile." And when he heard that the Galatians were about to conceal the cross, O what were his feelings. They were about to blot the sun out of the firmament, and what would they have left but darkness, desolation, and death! The cross of Christ is the grand luminary of the Gospel system, from which all its parts derive light, life, and influence. All else is darkness; and God forbid that we should glory, on earth or in heaven, in life or in death, save in Christ our crucified Lord!—Robert Newton.

Nature's Homage to the "Lord of Glory."

If the forces of nature formed a satellite to direct "wise men" to Jesus' birth place, and the physical firmament wore a pall of mourning for three hours at his death. If rocks were riven asunder in dreadful agitated sympathy, and the veil of the temple was rent! If the mighty power of the Spirit caused an earthquake to immediately precede his resurrection! Is it too much to expect that nature shall be mute when the mighty Hero returns to earth again to deliver this whole groaning creation! Zech. xiv. shows that when his feet stand upon Mt. Olivet again, a mighty earthquake will result. As the angels of God shouted for joy when this mundane system of ours was completed by the Creator, and sung an anthem of praise to celebrate the birth of its heir, so the voice of the mighty hero will reverberate through every grave, rock and cave where his imprisoned brethren have been chained by their enemy death.

Oh what an unutterable thrill of ecstacy and endless joy will seize each heart, when he finds himself in the blissful company of his long absent Son, and all the worthy sages of all ages, aliens and tongues.

Reader! Believe his Gospel; obey and continue patiently waiting and working for this grand consummation.—James Luxford.

Lost His Reason.

ANN ARBOR, Mich., Dec. 2.—Daniel Moseart, the well-known watch inventor, was to-day taken to the Insane Asylum at Kalamazoo. He has been for years at work on a watch which, without being larger than usual, was to show quarter seconds, seconds, minutes, hours, days of the week, days of the month, and months of the year. Every fifth time the watch was opened it was to wind itself. He had completed it, and had received a large offer from parties in New York for the right to manufacture it. A short time ago he took the model apart to fix. He was unable to put it together again, some part having probably been lost, and the intense mental application upon the difficulty has deranged his mind. Five years ago he was Superintendent of the Moseart Watch Company, of this city, which was bought out by the Rock Island Watch Company, of Rock Island, Ill.

☞ False happiness renders men stern and proud, and that happiness is never communicated. True happiness renders them kind and sensible, and that happiness is always shared.

The Changed Heart.

A changed heart will have change of company, if it is to be had. There is something in nature that disposeth all men to delight in that company which is most suitable to their disposition. When converting grace hath changed men, their minds are much changed too in regard to the society they seek. Oh how useless and unsavory, then, is it to them to sit or walk in the company of such that never have a word of God, or that may help them in the matters that their hearts are set upon! Their merry talk and fine discourse is to him but as the crackling of thorns under the pot. It doth but trouble him and move him to compassionate such empty souls that have no God, no Christ, no heaven to talk of, but mere unprofitable trifles; but the company of those is sweet to him that will discourse about the matters of his salvation; that will tell him how he may get more grace, and open to him more the mysteries of the Gospel, and speak to him of the riches of God's love in Christ, or tell him of the dangers that are yet before him, or the duties that he must perform. These matters are now savory to him, for these he knows do indeed concern him, and are worth the talking of. When a man is in a strange country, a thousand miles off, it doth him good to meet with his countrymen, and to talk with him about his friends, and family, and his estate, and inheritance, and home, which he must return to. One hour of this discourse is sweeter to him than a hundred with the strangers of the country about matters that are little to him. So it is here. A Christian that knoweth he is a stranger in this world, and that his God, his salvation, his home, his inheritance, are all in the world to come, had rather far discourse with a heavenly-minded man about his Father, and everlasting works and blessedness, than with worldly men about this world.—Richard Baxter.

World-Worship.

The object to which a man bows down and worships, leaves its own impress stamped upon his soul; and as the years roll on, he must inevitably, by the very law of his being, become more and more like the God he adores. If a man gives himself up entirely to the pursuit of wealth, pleasure, or any one of the fashions of this world they each in turn become his God, and at the shrine of each he bows down and pays his homage. Day by day he finds some one or all of these objects becoming increasingly necessary to his happiness—and even to his existence; and spurred on, as by an unseen power, he plunges forward in hot pursuit of his object, until death, that solemn sentry, bids him stand! They who saw him in life knew that "God was not in all his thoughts." He was not to be found among those who "went about doing good." The noble and godlike enterprises of the day—though they loudly demanded—did not obtain his aid and co-operation. He was of the world, and to it he gave all he had and all he was. Thus do all those who love not our Lord Jesus Christ.—Christian Banner.

Repentance.

Repentance begins in the humiliation of the heart, and ends in the reformation of the life.

He that repents of sin as sin, doth implicitly repent of all sin.

You cannot repent too soon. There is no time like to-day! Yesterday is gone, to-morrow is God's, not your own. And think how sad it will be to have your evidences to seek, when your cause is to be tried; to have your oil to buy when you should have it to burn!

If we put off our repentance to another day, we have a day more to repent of, and a day less to repent in.

Let the hopes of mercy encourage to the exercise of repentance.

Turn to God, and He will turn to you, and then you are happy though all the world turn against you.

If we think amiss of Christ we shall never believe; if we think well of sin, we shall never repent.

If we study to honor God, we cannot do it better than by confessing our sins, and laying ourselves low at the feet of Christ.

Reliance is the essence of faith, Christ is the object of faith, the Word is the food, and obedience the proof; so that true faith is depending upon Christ for salvation in a way of obedience, as He is offered in the Word.

Justifying faith is always attended with universal obedience.—Mason.

THE RESTITUTION,
PLYMOUTH, INDIANA.

P. S. All letters for the Editor may be sent to the same place.

THE RESTITUTION advocates the fact that "restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all His holy Prophets since the world began." It also advocates as a means to this end, the establishment of the Kingdom of God on the earth, with the Christ as King of kings, and the immortal saints as joint-heirs with Him in the government of the nations; the restoration of Israel; the literal resurrection of the dead; the immortalization of the righteous, and the final destruction of the wicked; eternal life only through Christ; and many other kindred truths. It also advocates a hearty belief of the Gospel, repentance, and immersion as prerequisites to the forgiveness of sins; and a holy life as essential for final salvation.

COMMUNICATIONS.

THE EDITOR must not be understood as endorsing all the sentiments expressed by correspondents whose articles are inserted under this head. Each writer is alone responsible for the article bearing his own signature. No personal articles will be inserted. No writer will be allowed to refer directly or indirectly to the article of another by way of criticism. If the teaching of any writer is not endorsed, no article setting forth the views of the party differing may be forwarded. Free discussion of Bible questions—on all other—will be allowed, but the Editor reserves the privilege of criticising those considerations which antagonize a belief and obedience of the Gospel as a means of salvation, or which undermine its principles.

Coming of the Bridegroom.

"And at midnight there was a cry made, Behold the bridegroom cometh; go ye out to meet him.—MATT. XXV. 6.

Most of us who are professedly expecting the coming of the Lord as an event very soon to occur, are more engrossed in the theoretical teachings of revealed truth in regard to the second advent, and the doctrines of the Bible in relation to human destiny, than in its requirements concerning the formation of Christian character. While we are very careful to understand doctrine, prophecy, and ordinance, we neglect the cultivation of the affections. We acquire a wealth of knowledge, but in love are beggared paupers. We converge all the shining rays of revelation on the mysteries of future existence, on the re-genesis of our earthly abode, on the universality and eternity of its future administration of government under the dominion of Messiah, and on the future glory of the church of God, but ignore almost every thing that bears upon our moral fitness for the heavenly inheritance. What a fearful awakening awaits a slumbering multitude, with their untrimmed lamps, worldly affections, and unholy dispositions, at that mystic hour that closes forever this "dispensation of the Gospel." In the graphic words of another: "That midnight cry, Behold the Bridegroom cometh," will be the death-cry to many a feeling of security and sense of readiness even in the best of Christians. When that cry is once made evident in the soul, and the solemn reality of the Savior's close proximity is upon us, there shall come with it a sudden laying open of the heart to itself, such as it never experienced before. And with that disclosure shall weaknesses and deficiencies become manifest to each one's conviction of which there was never the remotest suspicion. A flood of light, suddenly pouring into all the darkest corners of the inmost spirit, will then show every man to himself as he really is. He shall awake in a new world, where every thing is tried by new measurements and new and more searching tests. And the result will be more startling even to the very holiest than they ever previously imagined. Then shall the whole life come under quick review; the weaknesses of childhood long since forgotten, the hilarities of youth inwrought with sin, the ambition and worldliness of riper age, and every act from childhood onward, all shall rise before the conscience with every defect evident and unmistakable, and with great troops of moral ills and crimes, of which we have never dreamed, thrown out as if by magic from their hidden ambuscade to menace and overwhelm our peace. Whatever may be our attainments, we are all a great deal worse than we think we are. No living man has ever yet sounded all the depths and subtleties of his own depraved heart. No living man can take up in one grasp a just estimate of his entire history. The variety of events which succeed each other here below, and divide our life, fix our attention only on the present, and do not permit us to recollect it in the whole, or fully to see what we really are. We never regard ourselves but in that point of view in which our present situation holds us out; the last situation is always the one which determines our judgment of ourselves; a sentiment of salvation, with which God sometimes indulges us, calms us on an insensibility of many years; a day passed in exercises of piety makes us forget a life of crimes; the declaration of our faults at the tribunal of penitence effaces them from our remembrance, and they become to us as though they had not been; in a word, of all the different states of our conscience we never see but the present. It will not be so when we come to that moment of intense awakening when we are aroused to the reality that the Bridegroom's coming, with all his glorious train, is just upon us. Then shall the whole heart, for the entire life, stand out to view, with all its long-hidden depths revealed, all its unsuspected secrets suddenly laid bare, and every act, desire, word, thought, and deed, from its first feeling to its latest sigh, with the true estimate to be put on each, and the grand sum total of the entire account, made visible in a moment; and we shall see at a single glance what we never before could rightly search out,—that is, our true selves. Not a crime but shall then be present to us; not a departure from holiness but shall display itself; not an omission, of which the catalogue is almost interminable, nor a vile motive entertained, nor a mean compliance, nor an opportunity neglected, nor a truth avoided or a good deed undone, nor a moment wasted or a day unimproved, but shall then confront us. And the few prayers with which we now satisfy ourselves, and the few brief weekly services through which we pass with hardly interest enough to keep from falling asleep, and the few dollars given to God, and the few good acts for which we credit ourselves so largely, and that feeble round of experiences which makes up the record of most men's piety,—how shall they dwindle down from the significance which we now attach to them, and seem to change into miserable mockeries that call only for an everlasting detestation of ourselves that ever we could think of seriously relying upon them! The mere thought of how we shall then appear, startles us as we dwell upon it, and almost makes us afraid to entertain it for a moment. As we thus feebly anticipate the nature and results of that last self-searching for readiness to meet the Lord, who that does not see and feel that the fund of goodness, faith, charity, and consecration must needs be vastly ampler than that which most Christians possess, from which to garnish their lamps into fitness to join the glorious marriage-procession of the Lamb!"

We may slumber now and take our ease;—we may fold our arms in Laodicean lukewarmness;—we may set all our affections on the perishable objects of this present world, and heap up its treasures for the last days;—we may neglect all our duties to God and the cause of the Redeemer;—we may be careless about watchfulness and prayer;—have a name to live and be dead, and pass along with comparative credit in this world, but how different all when at the judgment-seat of Christ! Time flies, and moments are jewels. Whatever we do or neglect, let us prepare for the soon-coming Lord. And let us rejoice that it is still an accepted time and yet a day of salvation.

Words to Preachers.

Make no apologies. If you have the Lord's message, declare it; if not, hold your peace. Have short prefaces and introductions. Say your best things first, and stop before you get prosy. Do not spoil the appetite for dinner by too much thin soup. Leave self out of the pulpit, and take Jesus in. Defend the Gospel, and let the Lord defend you and your character. If you are lied about, thank the devil for putting you on your guard, and take care that the story shall never come true. Let your beard grow. Throw away your cravat. If you do not want to "break down," make your shirt collar an inch larger, and give your blood a chance to flow back to the heart. Do not get excited too soon. Do not run away from your hearers. Engine drive-wheels whirl fast on an icy track, but when they draw anything they go slower. It takes a cold hammer to bend a hot iron. Heat up the people, but keep the hammer wet and cool. Do not bawl and scream. Too much water stops mill wheels, and too much noise drowns sense. Empty vessels ring the loudest. Powder is'nt shot. Thunder is harmless. Lightning kills. If you have lightning, you can afford to thunder. Do not scald the people. Do not abuse the faithful souls who come to meeting rainy days, because others are too lazy to attend. Preach the best to the smallest assemblies. Jesus preached to one woman at the well, and she got all Samaria out to hear Him next time. Ventilate your meeting room. Sleeping in church is due to bad air oftener than to bad manners. Do not repeat sentences, saying, "As I said before." If you said it before, say something else after. Do not end sentences, passages of Scripture, or quotations with "and so forth;" say what you mean, and stop. Leave out all words that you cannot define. Stop preaching and talk to folks. Come down from your stilted ways and sacred tones, and become "as a little child." Change the subject if it goes hard. Do not tire yourself and every one else out. Do not preach till the middle of your sermon buries the beginning, and is buried by the end. Beware of long prayers, except in your closet. Where weariness begins, devotion ends. Look people in the face, and live so you are not afraid of them. Take long breaths. Fill your lungs, and keep them full. Stop to breathe before the air is exhausted. Then you will not finish off each sentence*ah* with a terrible gasp*ah*, as if you were dying for want of air*ah*, as some good people do*ah*, and so strain their lungs*ah*, and never find it out*ah*, because their friends dare not tell them*ah*, and so leave them to make sport for the Philistines*ah*. Inflate your lungs. It is easier to run a saw-mill with a full pond than an empty one. Be moderate at first. Hoist the gate a little way. When you are half through, raise it more. When you are nearly done, put on the full head of water. Aim at a mark; hit it! Stop and look where the shot struck; then fire another broadside. Pack your sermons. Make your words like bullets. A board hurts a man most when it strikes him edgewise. A pound of feathers is as heavy as a pound of lead, but it will not kill a man as quickly. An ounce bullet will kill quicker than a sack of wool. Do not condense too many words into a few thoughts. Make your discourse proportionate. If your talk is narrow and shallow, do make it short. If it is deep, and strong, the stream may run longer. Do not think every brook is deep, because you cannot see the bottom of it, nor call a man a deep diver because he always brings up mud. Have a clear head, and your words will be clear. Know what you are talking about; then you can make others understand you. Stand for God if you stand alone. Keep out of the clutches of party hacks and religious politicians. Preach a straight gospel, and live up to it. Keep your distance from sin. Do not play with edge tools, nor fool with temptations. Look to the stars instead of weather-cocks for guidance. Be in earnest, but not wild. Keep open ears, and a close mouth. Do not be a clown. Let the devil make his own fun, carry his own mail, settle his own quarrels, and foot his own bills. Make few promises. Learn to say no very sweetly. Keep out of debt. Do not let any one own you more than you are able to love. Speak to the people like your Master, as they are able to hear. Do not feed bones to babies. Do not abuse people for believing what you once believed yourself. Respect honest convictions. Judge no man. Be patient towards all. Make friends with the children. Be cheerful with the young. Keep clear of gluttony, dyspepsia, and pious grumbling. Remember, each sermon may be the last you shall preach, or your hearers shall listen to. Keep the judgment in view. Please God, and you will please Christians. Let others praise you. Live for Christ. Preach the Word.—H. L. Hastings.

GREATNESS OF LONDON.—The population of London, according to the last census, is 3,883,000. This vast multitude is more than the combined population of New York, Philadelphia, Brooklyn, St. Louis, Chicago, Baltimore, Cincinnati, Boston, New Orleans, San Francisco, Buffalo, and Alleghany City, Pa. To light its streets at night 620,000 gas lights are required, consuming every twenty-four hours 22,270,000 cubic feet of gas.

Christ Gave Himself a Ransom for All.

BROTHER REED:

I see a writer in the RESTITUTION of Nov. 5, has put forth the theory of "two seeds," which he says he has "never heard spoken, or seen written." That may be true. If so, his knowledge is limited; for several writers have employed their time and talents in presenting the same theory, in some parts of the country, for two or three years past, and have been replied to. The theory of your correspondent is precisely that promulgated by R. V. Lyon and some others, and is plainly this: "It never was the intention of Jehovah to save" only a few of our race; and that there are by birth, "two seeds," viz., the seed of the woman and the seed of the serpent; that for this last named class the Creator made no provision and never designed any salvation for them,—they were brought into being fore-doomed to be utterly destroyed, and that hopelessly, without the possibility of escape. Will you allow me to hear my protest against such a theory?

The theory is old-fashioned Calvanism revived, revamped, and attempted to be passed off as a new discovery. The reprobates, under the old theory, were from all eternity doomed to be damned, do what they would. Such was the theology taught sixty years ago, and shall an old man, who lived in those days, now be told such blasphemy is a veritable fact? Of the same character, only worse if possible, is the doctrine of a seed, or part of the human race, for whom Christ never died, and for whom God has no love; and yet Christ commanded the Gospel to be preached to them, because He commands it to be preached to "every creature."

I say nothing of the character or motives of the publishers of the theory, that I leave with Him who knoweth all hearts; but the theory is fatalism in its worst form, and calculated to destroy all confidence in God's Word; and lead some to fancy they are the favored ones who are to be saved, at all hazards, whatever risks they may run.

By this theory Cain is supposed to be the first of the "surplus," or "serpent's seed." But the record says that Cain was the son of Adam (Gen. iv. 1,) and Eve says, at Cain's birth, "I have gotten a man from the LORD;" and the record further says, "And she again bare his (Cain's) brother Abel." Verse 2. So the two are brothers. Are the seed of the serpent and the seed of the woman brothers? Cain was wroth because his offering to the Lord was not respected, as Abel's was. "And the Lord said unto Cain, Why art thou wroth? and why is thy countenance fallen? If thou doest well, shalt thou not be accepted?" What! the seed of the serpent, can they do well and be accepted? Truly a marvelous utterance to a seed fore-doomed, before they were born, to be a cursed seed, and placed at birth out of the pale of salvation on any terms! Is not the Lord justly chargeable with dealing deceitfully with Cain, if he was the fore-doomed being the "serpent's seed" theory represent him to be? Does not the theory charge God Himself as the producer of this class of men thus doomed to wickedness and ruin? for the text, on which the theory is built, reads, "I will greatly multiply thy sorrow and thy conception." God, then, is the author of the birth of this imaginary "serpent's seed," and makes them what they are, a hopeless and cursed seed, regardless of any acts of their own, simply because mother Eve had sinned! Surely, such a view represents Jehovah as swearing to an untruth, when He says, "Say unto them, As I live, saith the Lord God, I have no pleasure in the death of the wicked; but that the wicked turn from his way and live." Ezek. xxxiii. 11. It also represents the Savior as using deception, and as acting under false pretences when He said to certain Jews, "Ye serpents, ye generation of vipers, how can ye escape the damnation of hell." Matt. xxiii. 33. Did he know they were the "serpent's seed"—the "surplus seed"—that God brought into existence, fore-doomed to hell, and their salvation impossible by the author of their existence? If so, why tantalize them with their birth and doom? Plainly, He reproached them with their own wicked and avoidable conduct, by which they had justly merited the character and doom He sets before them.

The "two seeds," say the authors of the theory, are "not related to each other." Yet it is seen that they were both born of the same parents,—Adam the father, Eve the mother; and God Himself says they were "brothers." After Cain slew Abel, "The Lord said unto Cain, Where is Abel thy brother?" And again, the Lord said unto him, "The voice of thy brother's blood crieth unto me from the ground." The Apostle John says, Cain "slew his brother." "Not related to each other," says the theory! God says, Cain and Abel were brothers, and John says the same.

The theory of "two seeds" by birth, practically and theoretically denies that the Savior "gave himself a ransom for all," and was "the propitiation for the sins of the whole world." 1 Tim. ii. 6; 1 John. ii. 2. If such testimony is not true, then to "preach the Gospel to every creature" is hypocrisy, or practicing duplicity; pretending to have made provision for all men, that they might obtain life unending; while, in fact, no such provision exists. To deny this truth, is, virtually, to charge the angels who announced the birth of Christ, with a scandalous falsehood,—which the Apostle John would call being a "liar," and an "anti-christ." As no true Christian would commit such a sin, the truth must stand that "Jesus Christ gave himself a ransom for all," and "tasted death for every man." Not only did the Apostle Paul make these statements to Timothy and to the Hebrews, but presents the subject to the Corinthians in the following language: "For the love of Christ constraineth us; because we thus judge, that if one DIED FOR ALL, then were all dead; and that he DIED FOR ALL, that they which live should not henceforth live unto themselves, but unto him who died FOR THEM and rose again." 2 Cor. v. 14, 15.

The love of Christ, founded on Christ's love to him and to all men, "constrained" the Apostle to make prominent the great truth that Christ died for all; and on this fact to build another fact, viz: that henceforth men should live not for selfish ends, but unto the gracious person who had subjected Himself unto death for them, that He might deliver them from death and the dominion of sin. No stronger argument can be used to induce men to forsake and hate sin, than that Christ's love for them was so great, that, though "he knew no sin" (verse 21) "he died for all" those who "were dead in sins" (Eph. ii. 5,) and "while we were yet sinners." Rom. v. 8. To proclaim this truth successfully to men, there must be no possibility of deception in the message; for, if there is an exception, and a few or many of the family of Adam are not included in Christ's work in his death "for all," then to ask such to believe in Him is to ask them to believe a lie, because they were not included in the love of Christ which caused Him to die for men; and if He did not die for all men, then, really, faith is impossible in any man; for he may truly say, "I do not know that Christ died for me, as there are some for whom He did not die, and I may be one of them." To tell that man, "If you will believe you may know that you are one for whom Christ died," is but to mock him with deceitful words. Faith cannot exist without evidence first presented; and you ask him to believe without evidence, and tell him the testimony will come afterwards.

Such is the folly of any theory that denies or carries with it a doubt as to the fact that Christ gave Himself a ransom for all men of every language, tongue, nation and people. The man who does not understand this matter is not qualified to proclaim God's message of "Good tidings of great joy, which shall be to ALL PEOPLE." Luke ii. 10. The idea, therefore, that there is a portion of those we call "men," who are only "the seed of the serpent, by birth; and that Christ never died for them; and that there is no salvation for them, and God never designed they should have any thing beyond what pertains to things temporal," is to represent God's dealings with men as anything but frankness; yea, it represents Him as acting with a deception which, if found in men we would call them "hypocrites, dissemblers, liars." Shall we be guilty of placing the God of truth among such characters, even by implication, saying that Christ did not die for all men, and that no salvation was intended for a part of those we call "men?" I trust not.

GEORGE STORRS.

Suffering and Reigning.

The suffering is present. The reigning future. The suffering is in fact, the reigning in faith. But faith makes the triumph as real as the trial,—the joy as sure as the sorrow. Faith clasps the promise—"if we suffer with him we shall also reign with him," and faith sees then in every thorn and every spear, in every chain and every fetter, every faggot and every flame, the promise of eternal glory—of sublime and endless exaltation to Christ's own right hand.—The bloody block is but the threshold of the golden palace, the gory axe but prepares us for the fadeless crown, the prison is but the portal of eternal bliss, the grave but the waiting chamber whence the beauteous and immortal bride shall emerge in joyous triumph to welcome her descending bridegroom and to repose in the holy ecstacy of his fond embrace. Reader, do you suffer with Christ?

The way to the kingdom is neither flowery nor easy. Our flowers are blooming beyond the swelling flood. . . Soon shall the crown be bestowed upon the faithful saints of the most high God.—Soon shall the martyrs and apostles and saints come forth from their prison houses to reign with Christ. Reader, will you reign there?

"I or the joy that's set before thee,
Bear a momentary pain,
Die, to live a life of glory,
Suffer, With the Lord to reign."

The River of Life.

"There is a river the streams whereof shall make glad the city of God."—PSA. xlvi. 4.

Far back in the world's bright morning we read of a river that "went out of Eden to water the garden." No discription of it is given in that brief sentence but its fountain head is found in a sinless earth—it springs from the bosom of Eden, and on its banks are the trees and flowers of Paradise, while its clear bosom flashes back the beauty of those skies which no storm cloud had ever darkened. The tree of knowledge is there, and the tree of life also flourishes near its waves. The first Adam is placed amid these scenes of beauty to form a character of purity and virtue, but when temptation comes he falls before its force. Death follows in the track of sin and reigns with royal power over the sons of men. Sorrow and suffering walk hand in hand through a sin-cursed earth. The hills are smitten, the plains are blighted and the ocean tempest tossed, while the very skies foam with angry clouds above our heads. But a promise gleams across the cloud. The same voice that cursed the earth, for man's sake has declared that her vales shall bloom in beauty and her mountains be crowned with glory.

The first Adam was of the earth, earthy; and through his transgression we lost the Paradise of God—we lost the beauty of a stainless earth—we lost all access to the tree of life, lest we should eat and live forever. But "the second Adam is the Lord from heaven," and if we avail ourselves of his offers we gain through his righteousness another Eden. The tree of life which stood in Paradise lost shall bloom again in Paradise regained, and its leaves shall be for the healing of the nations. Through this second Eden shall flow another river and its waves shall never be cursed by sin nor stained with blood. The waters of the first beautified and fertilized the garden, but the waves of the second shall flow through the city of God. The fountains of the first were planted in Eden, but that which is to come shall gush from the foot of the throne. The first river still flows through a wilderness of sin and death, with no power to heal or to save—the second shall roll through a glorified earth, bearing life and immortality upon its bosom. The rivers of earth are laden with symbols of war, and the fleets of angry nations meet upon them in deadly strife, but that which cometh from God's throne is a river of peace, for on it "shall go no galley with oars, neither shall gallant ship pass thereby." Its clear waves can never be fouled for it is purified by the same blood that hath made white the raiment of the bride. Its waters can never fail for "the Lamb that is in the midst of the throne shall lead us to the living fountains." It shall be a river of brightness* and beauty such as earth has never known, for it is the "water of life" all radiant with God's glory. It shall flash beside the pure gold and the pearly gates of the city. The white-robed throng on the sea of glass shall be mirrored in its bosom. The crowned victors that have "overcome" in earth's conflict shall walk upon its banks. The feet of the redeemed shall touch its golden sands, and the glory of God, which is the light of the city, shall gleam in its crystal depths.

MRS. H. V. REED.

*The words "clear as crystal" might be more properly rendered bright as crystal. The word translated clear is "lampros" and is rendered bright in speaking of "the bright and morning star."

The Word of God must be nearer to us than our friends, dearer to us than our lives, sweeter to us than our liberty, and pleasanter to us than all earthly comforts.—Mason.

THE RESTITUTION

PLYMOUTH, IND., DEC. 9, 1874.

EDITORIAL DEPARTMENT.

To Our Readers.

In view of our having taken the Editorial management of the RESTITUTION a few words setting forth our views and plans may be deemed proper in this connection. Having been associated with the paper most of the time, under its various names for the last twelve years, we have some idea of the responsibilities and difficulties attending our present position. We know full well that we cannot meet the expectations of all our readers, and indeed such a result would be impossible for any one, seeing that there are, on certain points, differences of opinion which render universal approval impossible. What will be suited to one is not liked by another, and yet both of these parties demand a hearing on the ground that they have important truths to set forth. We will therefore here state summarily what appears to us to be the only fair and tenable ground.

We shall give all our readers a fair opportunity to express themselves through our columns, upon all Bible questions, but no writer shall be permitted to speak unkindly of others with whom he may not agree in matters of doctrine. The columns of the paper must not be burdened with long, prosy articles upon subjects of no practical bearing on the Christian life and hope. Writers should avoid, as far as possible, all crochets which tend to alienate and sever the children of God. Undue prominence to theories which seem to be fairly inferred from the Scriptures, but not directly taught, should be presented with great caution, and in a dispassionate spirit, and without dogmatism. Stick closely to the Bible, enforce no tests which grow out of speculative doctrines. Ask no one to believe that for which you cannot find a "thus saith the Lord." Try and speak to the edification of those standing in need of instruction and encouragement rather than to appear as a pioneer in some unheard of notions which further investigation will show to be untrue. In short, speak and write as far as in you lieth, according to the oracles of God. And write with a full, free heart to do good to the household of faith and to those who are yet in the ways of death.

We shall labor to produce harmony and peace, to build men up in Christ, and to diffuse a kindly spirit among all who are looking for the Blessed Hope. We stand in need of more zeal and devotion, more of that living faith which will bring us nearer to the Divine Master, and prepare us for his reign of glory and peace. Let there be more forbearance and love, and less indifference on the great questions of purity of heart and of life. Thus far our people have proved themselves "valiant in fight," and have put to flight the armies of the aliens, and have won the distinctive appellation of the Church Militant! During these years of conflict we may have partially forgotten the other side of Christian faith and duty, and become too combative in our zeal for the truth.

We do not wish to be understood that we are willing to yield one iota of truth for which we have contended during all these years of earnest effort. But it occurs to us that we should exhibit more of that sweet spirit which characterized our Master while setting forth that sublime message of peace on earth and good will to men. In view of the great events which are crowding in upon us, of the spirit of scepticism which is overshadowing the world, of the formalism and pride which have taken possession of the professed church, and our nearness to the everlasting kingdom, it becomes our earnest duty to have our lamps trimmed and burning that we may be ready for the coming Bridegroom. Let the coming year mark a new era in our history, bringing us to a higher standard of religious life, more unity of action and to greater sacrifices for the truth of heaven.

In conclusion we would ask for the fraternal co-operation of all who love the appearing of our Lord, and pray that we may be the humble means of winning men to Christ by a pure Gospel, and a life of trust in Him who is the giver of every good and perfect gift.

The Christian Publishing Association.

As our readers will be anxious to know something about the Association which has been recently organized in this State, we shall proceed to give such information as will be of interest.

The Christian Publishing Association was organized under the State laws of Indiana, Nov. 16. Brethren R. S. Dwiggins, Wm. Railsback, Cyrus Taber, Thomas McDonald, and S. A. Chaplin were elected a Board of Directors for the first year. The headquarters of the Association are located at Plymouth, Ind., which is one of the most central points which could have been selected. The mail facilities are unexceptionable, there being two railroads leading to the great distributing centres of Chicago and Indianapolis, while the Eastern mail is more easily dispatched than at either of the points above named.

The capital stock of the Association for the present is five thousand dollars, which can be increased as the business may require. The shares of stock are ten dollars, which is sufficiently small to enable almost any one to become a member. About one-half of the stock is already taken, but we shall need to have the whole amount within a given time in order to faithfully prosecute the business and pay such debts as have already accrued by purchasing the entire office of the RESTITUTION, including the books, tracts, plates and subscription list. It is not expected that all the stock will be needed at once, but it can be paid by installments. Twenty-five per cent down and the balance as it may be called for by the Board.

The Association is organized strictly upon legal and business principles, and is a body corporate, and is fully prepared to execute its work according to the laws of the State. The Board of Directors are business men and enjoy the entire confidence of the brotherhood wherever known, and have good report from those "who are without." Matters of a business character had so shaped themselves as to render it important that Brother Wilson should be relieved from the care of the paper. He has borne the burden for sometime, and it is but right that others should put their shoulder to the wheel to aid the truth in these days of great events. The brethren of Indiana have taken upon them the responsibility of publishing the RESTITUTION, and it is expected that the entire brotherhood will co-operate with this movement and help onward the work. That the Association needs help in its infancy every brother well understands. It is therefore expected that assistance will come from all who have the truth at heart. Brethren here are willing to make sacrifices for the truth, provided others will work in unison with them. We hope our friends throughout the State and in other States will take this matter under serious consideration and do what they can to push forward the enterprise. In union there is strength, and in no better way can this be illustrated to the world and to our hearts than by a strong co-operative movement for the work of saving men from error and sin.

We will say in conclusion that if there are any points upon which any brother may want further explanation relative to the Association, we will cheerfully give it. In the meantime we hope all who can will subscribe for one or more shares of the capital stock, which will entitle them to a membership in the Association, and to have a voice in its proceedings. We sincerely trust that our united efforts will redound to the glory of God and to the advancement of the truth among men.

☞ From the intelligence elsewhere given, it will be seen that our dear Brother Hornaday has parted from us. An enemy hath done this. We deeply sympathize with the dear family and friends whose hearts are bleeding beneath this heavy stroke. But there is hope in this dark hour; the lights of faith shine over his lonely grave, and soon the Life-King shall come and break the cold bars which imprison our sleeping Brother. Another brave soldier has fallen, but he fell at his post, and his name shines on the golden page of the book of life, and his crown gleams in the hand of the King. We fully endorse the beautiful tribute given by Brother Halstead, and trust all our readers will act in harmony with his suggestions.

All Things New.

The world has grown old. The curse is here. Men grow old and die. The promises of the new life and of a new world are becoming old and the heart faints at the long delay. Yet the word seems more precious as the years go by. Man's life is short and the times of God are reaching far beyond human grasp. The vision tarries but the promise has gone forth, "Behold I make all things new." The old Paradise with its life-tree is seen restored in the visions of Patmos. The old heart which is given to sin must be made new; the old man must become a new man in Christ; the old heavens and the old earth will be changed to the new, and the Jerusalem now in weeds of mourning and clothed in garments of widowhood, shall become the bride the Lamb's wife, and her days of mourning shall end. She shall become the new city wherein shall dwell the elect church in the spotless linen, which is the righteousness of saints. The new heart, the new man in Christ, do not mean another heart and another man, but the same man is changed into the new. So with the old heavens and the old earth—and so it will be with Jerusalem the city of the great King. God's plan contemplates no waste in creation. The miracles did not involve new creations, but existing things were made to serve the power which acted upon them. So God will take the things which are, and from them shall come forth the blessed results foreshadowed in the divine promise and prophecy. "He that sat upon the throne said Behold I make all things new." Not new things, but the things which are shall be renewed and made to shine forth in the glory of that day when the old shall cease and the new shall come. Blessed consummation! May divine love quicken the years and bring us to that morn when all things shall be made new!

☞ The doctrine of future endless misery is being rejected as unscriptural by some of the most talented ministers of the orthodox faith, both in this country and in England. Dr. True of the M. E. church of New York, and Newman Hall (Congregationalist) of England, are among those who have ceased to preach the terrible doctrine of ceaseless woe. From present indications it will soon be quite orthodox to preach from popular pulpits, "The soul that sinneth it shall die."

The idea of offering a god for sale through a newspaper is rather novel, but in view of the fact that this god was made at Sheffield and was cast in bronze, there can be nothing wicked about it. The points which seem to have recommended this heathen god are its six arms and its height—fifteen feet. It would hardly do for a missionary to present to these heathen a god "without body or parts."

☞ In this number will be found two articles bearing upon the question of what some are pleased to call the fair chance theory. The views set forth in the two articles are in some respects directly opposite. We give place to these articles as we have a great supply of them treating upon the same subject, handed over to us by the former proprietors. While we believe in the utmost freedom upon questions of opinion, yet it must not be expected that we shall be able to publish all the articles now in our possession. We do not wish to abridge the liberty of our correspondents, but the size of the paper is such that we cannot allow too much discussion upon controversial subjects. We expect to publish much that we do not believe, reserving the right, however, to criticize such articles as we think may require it.

Personal Items.

Brother J. M. Fike has moved from Nebraska to West Irving, Iowa.

P. B. Morgan, formerly an Advent minister, but now a member of the Episcopal Church, is talked of for Bishop of Iowa. "They have their reward."

Brethren Barnhill and Albertson have been holding a series of meetings in Polk Township, in the (Marshall) county, and baptized twelve persons. We understand that a great interest has been awakened in that community.

We received a call from Brother D. T. Halstead on Friday last. He was on his return home from Ross' Mills, where he gave nine discourses and baptized two disciples. He recently visited Goodland and preached the Word. Two intelligent believers were baptized. The truth has some warm friends in that locality. Brother H. is an efficient proclaimer of the ancient Gospel, and we hope the brethren will hold up his hands in his work for Christ.

Brother D. O. Ames, of Kansas, after more thoroughly investigating the subject has renounced the seventh day Sabbath delusion. Christ never commissioned his disciples to preach the law, but He did command them to preach the Gospel, which Paul declares to be "the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth." The law was given by Moses, but grace and truth came by Jesus Christ. The Apostles never enforced Sabbath-keeping upon the Gentile disciples.

Duties of the Hour.

Very peculiar and solemn responsibilities are now resting upon every true disciple of our Lord Jesus Christ. As individuals we have a character to form that we may be recognized as the children of God. Religion is eminently a personal matter between ourselves and our Lord. To pass the scrutiny of him who searches the hearts and tries the reins requires the exercise of the most unfaltering activity and engagedness on the part of every believer of the Gospel. We have learned from the living Oracles that our calling is a "heavenly calling";—even to share in all the honors of the "princely priesthood" in the soon coming kingdom. The coronals of glory will never wreathe unhallowed brows. To the sceptered honors of the world to come none but the pure in heart, and holy in life, will ever be exalted. We must then "give all diligence to make our calling and election sure." We also owe duties to the "Church of God." For eighteen hundred years, in widowed bereavement, has she been the object of the world's scorn, detestation, and bitter persecution. In sorrowful anxiety, in wearying labors, in ceaseless watchings, and hourly perils, has she marked the desert pathway with her bleeding foot-prints, in constant conflict with merciless superstitions, and every form of relentless unbelief. The blood of her martyred children has crimsoned the earth. Her surviving sons and daughters have pressed onward through tears, and even increasing perils, fainting, sighing, and dying all along the way. Her pathway is now through the perils of the last days. Her enemies are strong, numerous, well-disciplined and confident of ultimate victory. With diminished numbers, failing strength and fainting heart, she is now marshaling her forlorn hope for the last struggle in the "conflict of ages." We must stand by the colors of Immanuel now. Now is the time to signalize ourselves as soldiers of the cross. Darkness gathers in impenetrable shroudings above; dangers of every conceivable form thicken around; but final victory will be on the Lord's side. Our exhortation will be to personal conformity to our Lord Jesus Christ,—to active and unremitting diligence in labor in His vineyard,—to continually and faithfully holding forth the word of life to the perishing;—and to comforting one another in these last evil times. For a crown of glory we must cheerfully sacrifice, at least, a share of worldly wealth. This dispensation nears its close.

With these few words of friendly admonition we greet the readers of the RESTITUTION. We hope to make the paper, what it has already been, a medium of instruction and comfort. We want both your aid and your prayers. May our efforts be blessed, and our readers edified.

S. A. CHAPLIN.

TORONTO, Dec. 2.—In the Provincial Lunatic Asylum yesterday, a female patient named Mrs. Newell, an English emigrant, afflicted with the notion that her five children's souls could not be saved unless she herself died some terrible death, set fire to her clothing, and then knelt in devotion while enveloped in flames. The fire was extinguished, but the patient died this morning, after great agony.

The Ten Kings of Rome.

"The beast which thou sawest was, and is not; and shall ascend out of the bottomless pit, and shall go into perdition.

And the ten horns which thou sawest are ten kings which have received no power as yet; but receive power as kings one hour with the beast." Rev. xvii. 8, 12.

We invite the reader's attention to the following extracts from a letter written from Rome, by Joseph Medill, now editor in-chief of the Chicago Tribune. Mr. Medill, of course, wrote this letter without any idea of the prophecy, and yet it seems to point to the same great facts as set forth by John. Rome was, then ceased to be, during the reign of the Papacy, and now exists again after a lapse of between twelve and thirteen centuries, and there are just ten kings in reconstructed Italy or Rome. But here is the letter which speaks for itself:

After this hasty and imperfect retrospect, let us take an and see what the profits of this fortunate season's business for Victor Emanuel footed up.

There were two links still missing to complete the grand chain, viz: Venitia, with 7,765 square miles, and 2,496,442 inhabitants, yet under the iron yoke of Austria, and the Pontifical States, with 4,716 square miles, and 692,196 unwilling subjects of His Holiness, pinned down by French bayonets.

VENITIA WAS TRANSFERRED

by the treaty of Prague, Aug. 23, 1866, to Prussia, who turned it over to Italy the same day, and then "gobbled" up all the North German states for her own share of the spoil, annexing "Principalities and Powers" Dukedoms and Margravates, right and left, to the number of about three dozen or two-score. Bismark thereby simplified and reduced the map of Germany to the comprehension of school-boys, which it had not previously been, but was known as the "labyrinth of geography." But the "Man of Destiny" stood by and bit his finger nails. He had been completely euchred by Bismark and Emanuel.

There now only remained one sister state out of the fold to complete Italian unity; but, while that was the smallest, it was the most important of all. It was the Hamlet of the play; it was the state which had originally created the Italian Republic, and drew Italy around itself as the center of gravity, and held all the states in its fraternal embrace for 1,200 years,—the same length of time which they had been torn from the parent state.

Time ran on, and the span connecting 1866 and 1870 was a short one. Prussia was once more to befriend Italy and advance her cause. Solferino had given to Emanual Lombardy. Sadowa had added Venetia, and expelled Austria from Italy, and created a nation, but without a capital. Sedan was now to give Italy its capital and crown the edifice. The German invasion of France necessitated the withdrawal of the 20,000 French soldiers who had stood guard for the Pope and held the Romans down for eleven years, while Italy watched and waited. The hour had now struck, and the time for the delivery of Rome was at hand. The last French regiment had scarcely embarked at Civita Vecchia, before the citizens began to hand out the tri-colored flag, and send deputations to Florence urging the king to take possession of the ancient capital of Italy. As usual he was bold and prompt, and no time was lost in appearing before the gates of the ancient Aurelian wall, and demanding that they be opened forthwith. A few shots were fired in the air for form's sake, when the Pope ordered the gates to be opened to spare the effusion of blood, and the Italian army amidst the frantic shouts of welcome of the overjoyed citizens. From every window was thrust a national flag (and the wonder was how or when so many thousand banners were made). At night the city was illuminated until the light almost rivaled that of the day; rockets mounted into the heavens by millions; bells were rung; cannon roared and shook the city; bonfires were lighted on each of the Seven Hills; the people danced, waltzed, and embraced, and kissed each other in the streets; there was a perfect carnival of rejoicing,—for Rome, after twelve centuries of night had emerged into day, and again was the capital of Italy. Rome was occupied by the Italian army on the 20th of September, 1870; a plebiscite was ordered, and the vote for annexation was nearly unanimous,—only the monks and priests voting in the negative. On the 9th of October, 1870, the Pontifical states was annexed to the kingdom by royal decree, and Rome was solemnly proclaimed to be the capital of united Italy. The national parliament held its first session in Rome the ensuing winter, and thus the Roman senate was re-established after a lapse of nearly 1,300 years. As the King of Italy marched into the palace on the Quirinal Hill, King Pius retreated in good order across the Tiber to the Vatican, where, laying down the earthly crown, he took up his spiritual mitre.

MARCHED INTO THE ETERNAL CITY,

Rejoice!

Rejoice! dear scattered band. Your sufferings are almost over. It is but a little while now—much a little while, until the once pierced feet shall stand upon Olivet's cleaving brow, and the dear hands, once nailed to the cross, wave a scepter of righteousness over all the earth.

O Palestina, rejoice! Rejoice! beautiful historic land, for thou wilt soon be redeemed from the curse. The conflicts that have raged within thy borders for so many ages past, will soon be over. The Roman will despoil Jerusalem no more. No more will the Crusader and the Saracen meet in deadly conflict upon thy shores, oh beautiful lakes of the Holy Land. Not much longer will the crowned monarchs of earth dispute each other's right to thy possession. The city of God will shine like a resplendent gem within thee, and the glory of the nations and their honor will be there. The covenant that God made with Abraham, will be a sure covenant. The renewed Canaan will be his for an everlasting possession, and Jesus our Savior, will reign!

He is coming soon, Oh, He is coming! Our best Friend, who died for us! How the glories of this world pale before that solemn thought! How vain they seem, how trifling! It is all vanity. What need of toiling like slaves for such ephemeral treasures? We are on our way home, and our elder Brother is going to meet us and escort us to our Father's house.

Let not the wild surging waves sweep any away from the Rock. Cling to Jesus. Sow the good seed with diligence. Use well the talents given. Lay up treasures in heaven. There remaineth for the faithful rest, and a crown.

The Hidden Man of the Heart.

"Whose adorning, let it not be that outward adorning of plaiting the hair, and of wearing of gold, or of putting on of apparel; But let it be the hidden man of the heart, in that which is not corruptible, even the ornament of a meek and quiet spirit."—1 Peter iii. 3, 4.

The above language from the Apostle Peter has been deemed positive proof of the immortality of the soul and its continued conscious existence after death. It is assumed that the hidden man of the heart is the soul and that it is not corruptible, etc., which is deemed demonstrative of the position named above. But it is evident Peter is not talking about the nature of the soul, but of the true adorning which should characterize all true Christians. That this is the case will be seen from all modern translations.

WAKEFIELD. "Nor let your ornament be that outward ornament of plated hair with braided gold or of costly raiment, but the hidden man of the heart with the imperishable ornament of a meek and gentle mind."

IMPROVED VERSION, printed in 1809. "But let it be the hidden person of the heart, in the incorruptible ornament of a meek and quiet spirit."

MCKNIGHT. "But let the hidden man of the heart be adorned with the incorruptible ornament of a meek and quiet spirit."

DOUAY BIBLE. "But the hidden man of the heart in the incorruptibility of a quiet and meek spirit."

WESLEY. "But the hidden man of the heart in the incorruptible ornament."

It will be seen from these various translations that it is the ornament that is called incorruptible, and this adorning is to be something peculiar to the child of God. If it refers to the soul of man and not to the adorning which should become the Christian, then all men both saints and sinners have the ornament and Peter's exhortation was superfluous.

As to the hidden man of the heart we think Peter means no more by this than Paul does when speaking of Christ "dwelling in our hearts by faith" and of Christ "formed within" the hope of glory." The inward man is possessed only by righteousness; the Bible does not speak of wicked men having the inward man. Hence it does not refer to the soul in any sense. The word heart means the mind, and the hidden man dwells in the mind or heart by faith, and what better ornament than a true Christ-like character formed within us, can we aspire to. We conclude therefore that Peter is not talking about souls but about the true ornament which Christians should have. May that adorning dwell in each of us.—R.

☞ The slothful man is a burthen to himself, his hours hang heavy on his head; he loitereth about, and knoweth not what he would do.

The Resurrection a Necessity.

Were we to inquire of all believers in a future existence, who base their faith upon the teaching of the Bible, How do you prove a future state of existence for the dead? Would not the uniform answer be, We prove it by showing that there will be a resurrection of the dead. This is certainly a fair and logical way of answering the question in a general way, but to be a Bible more explicit let us inquire a little further. 1. Is it necessary to believe in a literal resurrection? Will the same organic structure that dies be raised? Will identity be restored? Will there be no difference between the resurrected body of Moses and that of Paul? Can there be a recognition of individuals in the resurrected state? Is not why talk about sitting down with Abraham Isaac and Jacob in the kingdom? Properly speaking, no two are exactly alike physically. This answers a wise purpose in the present state of existence, and reasoning from analogy, in the age to come it will be necessary to distinguish persons by the physical form, therefore identity must be restored, in other words the same physical organization that dies must live again, the change being one of nature and not of form.

In all the instances found in the Bible, where a resurrection has actually taken place, a literal reliving of the dead has been the result. Not a single departure from this rule can be shown. And in all cases where a resurrection is yet future the exact location of the dead is referred to. "They that are in their graves shall hear his voice." "And the sea gave up the dead which were in it." And to crown this grand Bible truth, to-be the resurrection of Jesus Christ that is given as a specimen of all the saints, who slumber in death's dark shades; For God who raised Jesus from the dead will also quicken the mortal bodies of the saints and "we look for the Lord from heaven who will change our vile bodies and fashion them like unto his glorious body." Now the identity of Jesus was established subsequent to his resurrection from the dead; not by an exact resemblance of character or faith but by an exact physical resemblance, even the imprints of the nails and the spear wound. The idea that God will organize other matter and flesh a character upon it similar to the one developed here in altogether a different body, may suit a believer in metempsychosis, but does not satisfy my longing to live again.

The objections urged against the foregoing literal, but very scriptural views of the resurrection of the dead, are of two kinds, viz: 1. Philosophical, and 2. Scriptural.

1. We are told that after death the materials of which our bodies were composed gradually decompose and assimilate with the earthy matter that goes to form vegetation, which in its turn forms food for animals that finally serve the human family for food, and thus in course of time what once formed a human organization has become component parts of animals and other human bodies!!! and like the Sadducees the objector asks: "In the resurrection whose body shall it be, since so many have had it?" The weight of the objection depends altogether upon the standpoint from which it is viewed. I admit if it is viewed from a human or even "scientific" standpoint the objection seems weighty!! But would not the same objection weigh if the body should be confined at death in a hermetically sealed cast steel casket that would prevent any of the particles of the body escaping. Suppose a human body to have been thus confined four thousand years ago and could to lay be viewed from a human or "scientific" point, what is there in the unrecognizable mass that would warrant the belief that from this mass a human body could be formed? Nothing, simply nothing. Eternal oblivion might as well be written upon it! Let the everlasting shades of the black night of forgetfulness envelop it in its somber folds. For there is no power residing in mortals that can re-arrange the atoms forming a perfect structure and even if it could where is the power to give the inanimate form life? But if the wonderful phenomena of raising the dead and giving them life is to be wrought by God, then the difficulty vanishes; for who can limit the power of Him that formed the vast globe and whose power sustains it whirling through space?

> "Look all the oceans' tad ocean foam,
> With fury dashes against the shore,
> When ask if God who raised the storm
> Can into life the dead restore."
>
> Where every scene on which we gaze
> By God is painted in each eye
> How can we doubt his power to raise
> The dust who his a Creator He."

Then let my faith be based upon the eternal, unchangeable Word of God, for He has spoken it and cannot lie. "I will redeem them from death."

2. The "Scriptural objection" is based upon a misapplication of the language used by Paul in 1 Cor. xv. "Thou fool, that which thou sowest is not quickened except it die, and that which thou sowest thou sowest not that body that shall be but bare grain, it may chance of wheat or some other grain, but God giveth it a body as it hath pleased him and to every seed his own body." Verses 36-38

Now if this language is made to apply to each resurrected body, then, to argue for the identical body to come up in the resurrection, that goes down in death, is sheer folly!!! No such thing could result; the only argument that could be drawn from Paul's illustration on the above hypothesis is this: The human body is planted like a grain of corn; the original grain that is planted does not re-appear in the new crop, but a number (not an individual) of grains is the result, each grain being in shape, quality, size and nature just like the grain that was planted. Who will say that the original grain planted, is the one or rather the number produced in the new crop? Is it not plain that if the figure is applied to individual bodies, that where one BODY is PLANTED a number just like it will be RAISED? Not one of them however being the original one buried!!!

The difficulty vanishes at once if we apply the figure to Christ where it properly belongs, Christ being the typical grain, germ, or seed whose multiplied crop or harvest is the saints resurrected with bodies just like the original typical grain (Christ). This is the proposition. Now for facts to sustain it. Paul is simply using the language of Jesus as recorded in John xii. 24. "Verily, verily I say unto you except a corn of wheat fall into the ground and die it abideth alone, but if it die it bringeth forth much fruit." This language uttered with direct reference to his death and its results is susceptible of but one meaning, and that meaning Paul has with logical effect woven into his argument, proving that the saints (the harvest) would be raised because Christ (the germ or first fruit) had been raised. Note carefully the fact that two questions are propounded at verse 35. The first question is this: "How (implying cause or means) are the dead raised up?" and the second question is this: "With what body do they come?" The first question is answered strictly in accordance with the nature of the question, i. e., The death, burial, and resurrection of Christ (the grain) is a grand cause; the resurrection and incorruptible nature of the saints (harvest) will be the grand effect.

The answer to the second question "With what body do they come," certainly harmonizes with the foregoing view and will not harmonize with any other. Notice carefully Paul's language, "So also is the resurrection of the dead. It is sown in corruption, it is raised in incorruption, It is sown in dishonor, it is raised in glory. It is sown in weakness, it is raised in power. It is sown a natural body, it is raised a spiritual body. And so it is written the first man Adam was made a living soul, the last Adam was made a quickening spirit."

This language certainly conveys the idea that the same it that goes down corrupt, dishonored, weak, and natural, must come up incorruptible, honored, powerful, and spiritual. Long has the difficulty of reconciling Paul's figure with a literal re-living of the dead perplexed honest Bible students, and as we hail with delight expositions that show harmony in Revelation, we submit the foregoing to the candid judgment of men and women who love the truth.

The Nations Shall Come to Worship in Jerusalem.

The Redeemer having, with wonderful condescension, designed to dwell with men, and his temple being rebuilt in Jerusalem, the nations are represented as coming to worship before him. "And it shall come to pass in the last days, that the mountain of the Lord's house shall be established in the top of the mountains, and shall be exalted above the hills; and all nations shall flow unto it; and many people shall go and say, Come ye, and let us go up to the mountain of the Lord, to the house of the God of Jacob; and he will teach us of his ways, and we will walk in his paths; for out of Zion shall go forth the law, and the word of the Lord from Jerusalem," Is. ii. 2, 3. This prophecy is repeated in nearly the same words, Micah iv. 1, 2. Again, "At that time, they shall call Jerusalem the throne of the Lord; and all the nations shall be gathered unto it to the name of the Lord to Jerusalem; neither shall they walk any more after the imaginations of their evil heart," Jer. iii. 17. "Thus saith the Lord of hosts, It shall yet come to pass that there shall come people, and the inhabitants of many cities; and the inhabitants of one city shall go to another, saying, Let us go speedily to pray before the Lord, and to seek the Lord of hosts; I will go also. Yea, many people and strong nations shall come to seek the Lord of hosts in Jerusalem, and to pray before the Lord," Zech. viii. 20-22. "Because of thy temple at Jerusalem shall kings bring presents unto thee," Ps. lxviii. 20. "They that dwell in the wilderness shall bow before him, and his enemies shall lick the dust. The kings of the Tarshish and the isles shall bring presents; the kings of Sheba and Seba shall offer gifts. Yea, all kings shall fall down before him, all nations shall serve him," Ps. lxxii. 9-11. "It shall come that I will gather all nations and tongues; and they shall come and see my glory;—and it shall come to pass that from one new moon to another, and from one Sabbath to another, shall all flesh come to worship before me, saith the Lord," Is. lxvi. 18-23. "And it shall come to pass that every one that is left of all the nations which came against Jerusalem shall even go up from year to year to worship the King, the Lord of hosts, and to keep the feasts of the tabernacles. And it shall be that whoso will not come up of all the families of the earth unto Jerusalem to worship the King the Lord of hosts even upon them shall be no rain. And if the family of Egypt go not up and come not, that have no rain, there shall be the plague wherewith the Lord will smite the heathen that come not up to keep the feasts of the tabernacles. This shall be the punishment of Egypt, and the punishment of all nations that come not up to keep the feast of tabernacles. In that day shall there be upon the bells of the horses HOLINESS UNTO THE LORD; and the pots in the Lord's house shall be like the bowls before the altar. Yea, every pot in Jerusalem and in Judah shall be holiness unto the Lord of hosts; and all they that sacrifice shall come and take of them, and see thee therein; and in that day there shall be no more the Canaanite in the house of the Lord of Hosts," Zech. xiv. 16-21. J. A. BEOU.

Paul's "Desire to Depart."

In the "Improved Version" of the New Testament, we find the following note in connection with the translation of Phil. i. 22-24. The translation reads: "But if it be given me to live in the flesh, this preaching of Christ is the fruit of my labor; yet what I shall choose I know not; but I am in a strait between two, having a desire to depart, and to be with Christ; for this would be very far better."

The words in italics are thus in the translation. The following is the note in the margin:—

"The Apostle probably thought that the advent of Christ to raise the dead was very near. See 1 Thess. iv. 13-18, and therefore judged that a quiet rest in the grave till that event, would be to himself preferable to a life of suffering and persecution; though he was content to continue in his present suffering state for the benefit of the church. At any rate he could not mean to express an expectation of an intermediate state of enjoyment between death and the resurrection; for he hints at no such topic of consolation to the bereaved Thessalonians in the passage above cited. And if he had expected that a state of felicity would have immediately succeeded the dissolution of the body, it would have been impossible for him to have declared to the Corinthians, 1 Cor. xv. 17, 18, that if the dead rise not, their faith would be vain, and that all who had fallen asleep in Christ were perished."

In the same version we find the following translation of 1 Thess. iv. 15-18:—

"For this we say unto you by the Word of the Lord, that we who shall be alive, and who shall remain to the appearance of the Lord, shall not be before those that are fallen asleep. For the Lord himself will come down from heaven with a shout, with the voice of the archangel, and with the trumpet of God; and the dead in Christ will rise first; afterward, we who shall be alive, and who shall remain, shall no caught up together with them into the clouds, to meet the Lord in the air; and then we shall ever be with the Lord.—Wherefore comfort ye one another with these words."

In the margin is the following note on the foregoing:—

"Observe here, that all the consolation which the Apostle administers to the bereaved and mourning Thessalonians is derived from the Christian hope of a resurrection, and from what would happen at that awful and glorious period. He takes no notice of an intervening state of perfection and felicity of which their deceased friends were even then in possession. A circumstance which the Apostle could hardly have omitted had the existence of such a state been revealed to him."

We think the foregoing sensible remarks commend themselves to every candid reader, and are in strict harmony with the teachings of the Scriptures.

Rest.

Thank God that there remaineth a rest for his people. The weary, wayworn pilgrim is to have a rest that will far more than compensate for all the toils, all the sufferings, all the griefs, that he can have to endure here. He will have a rest, which, with a body made immortal, with no proclivity to evil, will be far more than a recompense for all the vicissitudes of this mortal state.—Yes, a rest in a land where no sin shall enter; where no sorrow shall be known; where Jesus shall dwell, where all shall be peace and blessedness, is worth living for, hoping for, fighting for.

Brethren and sisters, are you all longing for that keeping of a Sabbath? Are you sighing for the day of deliverance to come? or are any of you growing cold and lifeless? Has the lovely character of Jesus less charms for you now, than it had last week, or month, or year? Does his dying love effect you less than when you first believed? If it does, you are in a dangerous position, and unless you watch, and strengthen the things that remain, so that your works may be approved of God, you can never realize the blessedness of the rest which is for the people of God.—Mattie Soldin.

From Brother Amos.

Dear Brethren, and readers of the INSTITUTION, have returned to Missouri again, and considering the bad weather we had a good meeting with the brethren in Holt Co. A good interest was manifested, and others are seeking for the truth. As we travel from place to place we have many calls for labor, the harvest is ripe but the laborers are few. We find great opposition at different places, and when we took back on the race our Savior run, and how He was persecuted it should strengthen us, dear brethren, and encourage us to bear the burden and heat of the day, that we may at last reign with Him in his kingdom.

Yours in the hope,
D. O. AMOS.

Sad Intelligence.

On the 24th day of the present month at Hartford City, Ind., our beloved Brother Wm. H. Hornaday fell beneath the hand of the destroyer—death, after a severe illness of typhoid fever. We accompanied his remains from the place of his death to Windfall, Tipton Co., the place of his former residence, where he was laid away in peaceful rest until the regathering and reunion of God's holy dead. He was in his thirty-third year, in the prime of life, full of ambition and zeal in the cause of Christ, for which he unselfishly sacrificed all. He died poor in this world but rich in faith; heir of the kingdom which God has promised to them that love Him. He fought the good fight, he finished his course, he kept the faith. Noble generous soul, beloved by all who knew him. He practiced what he preached, his living voice is no longer heard cheering the pilgrim, nor inspiriting with the erring and the wayward,—though dead he yet speaketh. May you and I dear pilgrim, imitate his noble and virtuous life—remembering in sympathy, in prayers and deeds of kindness our worthy Sister bereaved with her little ones, whom he has left to our care. She nobly gave to the cause we love, him so dear to her, on whom she depended for care and protection, for sympathy and support. May the blessing of the divine Father, the comfort of the blessed promises sustain her and them with all the bereaved ones, until the long dark night of sorrow and of death shall be over. May you and I greet them there. Amen.

D. T. HALSTEAD.

Literalism vs. Mysticism.

"In the day thou eatest there of thou shalt surely die," or as the margin more correctly reads "Dying, thou shalt die."—Gen. ii. 17.

The sense evidently is from the moment Adam sinned, he was placed in a dying state, and continued there until he died, which was nine hundred and thirty years after his creation. Gen. v. 5. This is true literalism, which needs only to be read to be understood and believed.

Mysticism justifies reading the passage thus: "In the day thou eatest thereof thou shalt surely die a spiritual death," thereby changing the penalty threatened in the case, from a real to a spiritual death, which is said to be alienation from God,—hence alienation from Him is the penalty of sin, or the result of sin is its punishment. If this be true, the penalty might have run thus: "In the day you sin, you will become a sinner!" To escape this absurdity, the mystical principle justifies the addition of eternal death to the penalty thus: "In the day thou eatest thereof thou shalt surely die a spiritual death, from which, if you are not freed when you die a natural death, you will be punished with eternal death, which will be unending torment in hell."

This is mysticism, and which lies at the foundation of all the false doctrines of christendom. When man had the folly or presumption to change the irrevocable decree of the Creator, from a corporeal to a moral death, he was prepared to make any perversion of the Word of God which would best subserve the cause of error.

☞ Shipments of firearms and ammunition from the United States to Europe are constant, and on a scale of magnitude that would excite surprise could the facts be known. Scarcely a week passes that large quantities of "hollow ware" are not quietly put aboard ship, appearing in the manifest as nothing more than so many "cases." These shipments for the most part are installments forwarded from the American manufacturer in execution of orders given, perhaps, years ago.

State Evangelist.

It will be remembered by the brethren who attended the Indiana Conference at Antioch last August, that D. T. Halstead was unanimously chosen State Evangelist, that he proposed to labor as such for eight hundred dollars, the ensuing year, that pledges to the amount of something over six hundred dollars were made at once.

The financial committee was required to appoint solicitors in each congregation, to raise funds to assist in paying said Evangelist. We made the appointments at an early day, after Conference Quite a number of those who made pledges, have paid the first installment, one-fourth. We have had no report from a number of congregations as yet. We have not been advised whether these congregations propose to assist in paying brother Halstead. "The Lord loves a cheerful giver." All acknowledge that he is admirably qualified to discharge the duties required of an Evangelist.

We desire those whom we appointed solicitors in the congregations, to report to us at once, and let us know what they propose to do. If we do not get more funds brother Halstead will have to leave the field before the year closes

It was not my purpose to give the brotherhood a moral lecture when I commenced, but merely to "stir up their pure minds by way of remembrance." Let us act according to our convictions of right and act promptly.

THE RESTITUTION

WHEN WILL HE COME?

It may be when the spring's mild breath
Awakes the buds from wintry death;
When opening flowers allure the bee,
And birds rear nestlings in the tree.

It may be when the yellow grain
In golden waves moves o'er the plain:
When gladdened reapers bind the sheaves,
And summer zephyrs fan the leaves.

It may be when the boughs are mute,
When garnered is the autumn fruit;
When the sweet rose of June is dead,
And birds in sunny climes have fled.

It may be when, at dewy eve,
The son of toil his work shall leave,
To seek his pillowed rest at home,—
At close of day the Lord may come

It may be at the midnight hour,
When locked in slumber's soothing power,
The trump may summon thee to meet
The Judge upon the judgment seat.

It may be when the dawning ray
Of rising sun first gilds the day,
Thy guardian angel thee may bear
To meet the Savior in the air.

Unknown the season, hour, or day,
When Christ will call his bride away;—
Before the close of passing year
The King of glory may appear.

O, church of God, thy falling tears
Have "watered deserts" years and years;
Lift now thy head,—for soon at home,
Thy song shall be—The Lord has come.

Discussion.—No. 3.

My third negative argument, or scriptural array upon the proposition, Resolved that man retains his consciousness after the phenomenon called death, consisted in what inspired writers say of the condition of man in death.

1. Job in lamenting his condition in affliction says that had he died in infancy, "then would I have lain still, and been quiet, I should have slept; then had I been at rest, with kings and counsellors of the earth, which built desolate places for themselves; or with princes that had gold, who filled their houses with silver; or as a hidden untimely birth I had not been; as infants which never saw light. There, (where Job then would have been, or in death) the wicked cease from troubling, and there the weary be at rest. There the prisoners rest together; they hear not the voice of the oppressor. The small and the great are there; and the servant is free from his master." Job iii. 13–19.

2. But where this quiet? where this sleep? where this rest? Spiritism and orthodoxy say in heaven, but what says Job? See xvii. 13–16.

Indeed the inspired writers harmonize; the sentence was "Dust thou art, and unto dust shalt thou return."

3. Job. xiv. 1–5. Here Job says his bounds are set, but spiritism and orthodoxy say not so, that when death takes place then men will know no bounds, that he will then be as a bird freed from a cage and at liberty to go where he may see proper.

Turn from him that he may rest. Rest where? In the dust. Job xvii. 13–16.

"For there is hope of a tree, if it be cut down, that it will sprout again, and that the tender branch thereof will not cease. Though the root thereof wax old in the earth, and the stock thereof die in the ground; yet through the scent of water it will bud, and bring forth boughs like a plant." Job here brings forth an incident in nature and makes an effort to establish by analogy a conclusion in reference to the destiny of man. But hear what the conclusion is when reached: "But man dieth, and wasteth away; yea, man giveth up the ghost, and where is he? As the waters fail from the sea, and the flood decayeth and drieth up; so man lieth down, and riseth not; till the heavens be no more; they shall not awake nor be raised out of their sleep." Job with this conclusion before him then exclaims: "O that thou wouldest hide me in the grave, that thou wouldest keep me secret, until thy wrath be past, that thou wouldest appoint me a set time, and remember me! If a man die, shall he live again? all the days of my appointed time will I wait, till my change come. Thou shalt call, and I will answer thee; thou wilt have a desire to the work of thine hands." But where does Job desire to be hid? Spiritists want no hiding, but perfect freedom.

Job desires secrecy there in the grave; but spiritists public life in the spirit-world.

Job desired a set time when God would remember him, but spiritists set that time themselves and set it at death.

Job asks a question: If a man die shall he live again? Spiritists and orthodoxy say no, he never dies. Consequently no broken link, no living again, but a continuance of this life.

4. "Oh that my words were now written! oh that they were printed in a book! That they were graven with an iron pen and lead in the rock forever. For I know that my Redeemer liveth, and that he shall stand at the latter day upon the earth. And though after my skin worms destroy this body, yet in my flesh shall I see God; whom I shall see for myself, and mine eyes shall behold, and not another; though my reins be consumed within me."

The marginal reading of verse 26, is "After I shall awake, though this body be destroyed yet out of my flesh shall I see God,' showing evidently that Job was (1) to sleep; (2) to awake, and (3) to see God, and that at the latter day when He would stand upon the earth. But spiritism and orthodoxy say no sleeping, no awaking, but a sight of God immediately after death, and that not on earth but in heaven. Which shall we follow? Spiritism, or what the Idumian says—the inspired man.

5. Psa. vi. 4, 5. Here David, whom Peter declares on the day of Pentecost to have been a Prophet says that in death there is no remembrance of God. But the exponent of spiritism and orthodoxy says not so David, in death the memory is quickened, and man remembers not only God, but all his past actions with ten fold distinctness.

6. Psa. xxx. 9. Here David gives us to understand that when the sentence "Dust thou art and unto dust shalt thou return," is carried out, and that when the rest is in the dust that then this dust is incapable of giving God thanks, of praising God, or of declaring his truth. And again to the point.

7. Psa. lxxxviii. 10–12. There are a few points worthy of notice in this language. 1. That God will not show his wonders to the dead. 2. That as the dead cannot praise God, in the dust, neither can they ARISE and praise Him (at least till He bid the time—the resurrection morn.) 3. That his loving-kindness will not be declared in the grave. 4. That his faithfulness will, not be declared in destruction (to where man goes in death.) 5. That his wonders shall not be known in the dark. And (6) that his righteousness shall not be known in the land of forgetfulness.

But further upon the inability of man in death to do homage to God we will give two more quotations. Psa. cxv. 17. "The dead praise not the Lord, neither any that go down into silence," and Isa. xxxviii. 18, 19. "For the grave cannot praise thee; death cannot celebrate thee; they that go down into the pit cannot hope for thy truth. The living, the living, he shall praise thee, as I do this day; the father to the children shall make known thy truth."

8. Psa. cxlvi. 3, 4. We would remark that we have seen from the quotations thus far made that man returns to the dust; that he rests in the dust, that he sleeps in the dust, that he then is in the land of darkness, in the land of destruction, in the land of forgetfulness, incapable of doing any homage whatever to God; and now in this last quotation, that in that very day (day of death —when his breath goeth forth) HIS THOUGHTS PERISH. Most assuredly then the proposition is lost. But that it may sink too deep ever to be exhumed in this community I will cite three other Scriptures.

9. Psa. xlix. 6–20. This Scripture is sufficiently plain without any comment, and I only desire to call particular attention to verse 8, where David declares that the soul of the character here described ceaseth forever. Then we may speculate in reference to the condition of the soul after death, but David settles this question for us. It ceases forever. No continued conscious misery in the death of the soul but an entire cessation.

10. Eccl. iii. 18–22. I will remark for the benefit of the reader that since the discussion and after returning home I have examined the rendering of the Douay Bible, a Catholic version made from the Septuagent on this text and will give it: "I said in my heart concerning the sons of men, that God would prove them, and show them to be like beasts. Therefore the death of men, and of beasts is one, and the condition of them both is equal; as man dieth, so they also die; all things breathe alike, and man hath nothing more than beast; all things are subject to vanity. And all things go to one place; of earth they were made, and into earth they return together. Who knoweth if the spirit of the children of Adam ascend upward, and if the spirit of the beasts descend downward?"

11. Eccl. iv. 3–10, This completely establishes the negative of the proposition; no need of any more testimony, nor any more comment. But we will briefly sum up from these quotations.

Man then is made of the DUST and unto DUST he returns. His rest is in the DUST. He goes into the land of DARKNESS, of DESTRUCTION, and of FORGETFULNESS. There he is incapable of offering prayer to God, of praising Him, and of publishing his law. There is no work nor device there. No wisdom there. No knowledge there. There his thoughts perish and he knows not anything.

"Contend for the Faith."

These are the words of the Apostle Jude, evidently written for the people of God in the "last time." In the third verse of his sententious epistle this "servant of Jesus Christ," says: "Beloved, when I gave all diligence to write unto you, and exhort you that ye SHOULD EARNESTLY CONTEND FOR THE FAITH which was once delivered unto the saints." "Contend for the faith." How suggestive the expression! The Apostle in looking down the vista of time, amid the perils of the last hours of this age, saw the antagonistic principles of Truth and Error arrayed in close combat, and hence his admonition to the soldier of the cross. If not before, we have now reached a crisis where we can determine the necessity of the Apostle's exhortation. The people of God are compassed with dangers, and the combat deepens. Trials always test the valor and faith of the Christian; and it is by these that many stumble and fall: still the Holy One of Israel has declared he would have a "tried people." Jude, by the prophetic Spirit, saw the Lord's children in conflict with the enemies of Truth—he saw them in violent rencounter with the powers of darkness, the beast and his image, and in addition to this outward pressure, he saw traitors and cowards in their ranks, "spots in their feasts of charity," so he cheers them on to the contest and says, "Contend for the Faith."

The man who can breast opposition in a Christ-like spirit, who can stand the shock of attack without beating an inglorious retreat, such an one is morally brave, and for him there awaits a "crown of rejoicing." The words of the Savior are, "He that endureth to the end, the same shall be saved." And again, "Strive (i. e., agonize, or strain every nerve,) to enter in at the strait gate." Says Paul, "I press toward the mark." And he exhorts the church to "Fight the good fight of faith;" "Work out your own salvation with fear and trembling;" "So run that ye may obtain," "Strive together for the Faith of the Gospel;" "Labor therefore to enter into that rest;" "Stand fast in the faith; quit you like men; be strong."

Letter From Brother Gibson.

DEAR BROTHER:—

I have been a reader of Dr. Thomas' works for the past twelve months, and revere his memory very highly in that said works have been the cause of dispelling from my mind many errors that are taught by orthodoxy, but cannot but think that his teaching is in error in regard to the resurrection. Do not the Scriptures teach two resurrections and one judgment, and that at the first resurrection the righteous only will have part. I cannot find any mention in Scripture that at the first resurrection there will be a judgment. Did we not have the revelation of the Spirit through St. John? In the revelations we should have no record to more than one resurrection and no testimony of their being one thousand years apart. I think that the RESTITUTION teaches that at the coming of our Savior that the righteous and the unprofitable servants will both be judged, if so are its teachings sustained by Scripture? Does not the whole of Scripture teaching on the subject teach in regard to the resurrection (that is the first) that all who have part in it shall die no more, and does it teach of judgment in relation to these? My impression is that the fact of their being accounted worthy to attain to it by being raised then will be a powerful judgment in their favor, and the only one as I can see by God's Word that they undergo.

Luke xx. 35. "But they which be accounted worthy to obtain that world and the resurrection from the dead, neither marry nor are given in marriage, (verse 36,) neither can they die any more, for they are equal unto the angels, and are the children of the resurrection." Rom. vi. 5. "For if we have been planted together in the likeness of his death, we shall be also in the likeness of his resurrection." Phil. iii. 11. "If by any means I might attain unto the resurrection of the dead." Rom. xx. 6. "Blessed and holy is he who hath part in the first resurrection, on such the second death hath no power. But they shall be priests of God and of Christ, and shall reign with him a thousand years." Rev. xx. 6. "And the rest of the dead lived not again until the thousand years were finished, this is the first resurrection." St. John v. 28, 28. "Marvel not at this, for the hour is coming in the which all that are in their graves shall hear his voice and shall come forth, they that have done good unto the resurrection of life, and they that have done evil unto the resurrection of damnation." In the last two verses it will be observed that the hours named above, is one thousand years apart, between the resurrection of life and the resurrection of damnation. In Dan. xii. 1, 2, speaking of the time of the end,—"At that time thy people shall be delivered, every one that shall be found written in the books. And many of them that sleep in the dust of the earth shall awake, some to everlasting life, and some to shame and everlasting contempt." Here also between the awakening of each class one thousand years transpires, and upon the awaking of this latter class of those who have lived upon the earth previous to the millennium (that is the unrighteous) the judgment will then commence and not before, if I am not wrong in my views. To sustain my views further, that the judgment takes place only at the close of the thousand years, I will quote Rev. xx. 11, 13. "And I saw the dead small and great, (after the one thousand years) stand before God, and the books were opened, and another book was opened which is the book of life, (I suppose by the last book being called the book of life, it would contain the record of those upon whom immortal life will be conferred) and the dead were judged out of those things that were written in the books, according to their works, and the sea gave up the dead which are in it, and death and hell delivered up the dead which were in them, and they were judged every man according to his works."

Dear Brother: I have never seen these views advocated before. They appear to me to be Scriptural and if I am in error please let me hear from you either through your valuable paper or by letter, as I feel a great interest in understanding this subject. It is truth only and light that all those who are seeking the kingdom want that they be prepared for the coming of the King.

My prayer is that He may soon come.

Truly Yours in the one faith.

The Judgment of the Dead.

"Who shall judge the quick and the dead at his appearing and kingdom." 2 Tim. 4. 1.

The penalty of the law given to Adam was death. "Thou shalt surely die." The first punishment under the gospel was death. "In sorrow, and in the sweat of thy face shalt thou eat bread, till thou return to the ground; for out of it wast thou taken; for dust thou art and unto dust shalt thou return." Adam was excluded from the tree of life lest he should eat of it and live forever. "And all the days that Adam lived were 930 years, and he died." This is the death that has passed upon all men. "Wherefore, as by one man sin entered into the world, and death by sin; and so death passed upon all men, for that all have sinned.

This accounts for all the death that will ever occur in this world. If no provision had been made in the gospel to save man from death, no further notice would have been taken of the dead. There would have been no need of the judgment of the dead. But Christ died for all, because all were dead. He died to save men from death. He said, "For God so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son to die for it, that whosoever believeth on him, should not perish, but have everlasting life," and he raised up at the last day.

This office of life, from the dead, to those who believe in Christ, removes the certainty that the first appointed death will be final to all; and puts those to whom the offer is made on a second trial, a probation. The object of this trial is to save men from being lost in death, by a resurrection from the dead. "He that believeth on the Son shall not perish, but shall have everlasting life, and I will raise him up at the last day." Under this offer of life from the dead, men have lived and died. Some have complied with the conditions of life from the dead, and some have not. They lie together in the grave; their worthiness or unworthiness is not known. This condition of the dead, and the promise that those who shall be accounted worthy, shall be raised up, render it necessary that the dead should be judged. When the Lord comes he will come to the living world. The world that has passed away will be dead. He will come to judge the living and the dead, but he will first

"And he commanded us to preach unto the people, and to testify that it is he which was ordained of God to be the judge of the quick and the dead." Acts. x. 42. The living are one class to be judged. They are those who have not died. The dead are another class to be judged, they are those who have died. Again: "I charge thee therefore before God, and the Lord Jesus Christ, who shall judge the quick, and the dead at his appearing and kingdom."

These are the same two classes to be judged, the living and the dead. And again the same fact is stated in Rev. xi. 19. "And the nations were angry, and thy wrath is come, and the time that the dead should be judged, and that thou shouldst give reward unto thy servants, the prophets, and to the saints, and to them that fear thy name small and great." Here are the living nations to be judged, and here are the dead to be judged, and then rewarded. Then, there will be a judgment of the dead in distinction from the judgment of the living world.

2. THE DEAD WILL BE JUDGED WHILE THEY ARE DEAD.

They cannot be judged at any other time. The conditions of the resurrection require this. If we are Christ's we shall not be lost in death, but we shall be raised up at the last day. If we believe in him we shall not perish but have everlasting life, and be raised up at the last day. If we are taught of God and come to Christ, we shall be raised up at the last day. If we eat his flesh and drink his blood, we shall have eternal life, and be raised up at the last day. John vi. 39. 49. 54. 54. If the spirit of God dwell in us while we live, our mortal bodies will be quickened. If we have the first fruits of the spirit, our bodies will be redeemed. Rom. viii. 11.23. If we strive to attain unto the resurrection of the dead as Paul did, we shall attain unto it. If our conversation is in heaven, from whence also we look for the Savior, our vile bodies will be fashioned like unto his glorious body. Phil. iii.11. 12. If we sleep in Jesus, we shall be raised from the dead. If we are included in the harvest of which Christ is the first fruits, we shall be made alive at his coming. If we are found worthy to obtain that world and the resurrection from the dead, we shall be made like the angels, so that we can die no more. Luke xx. 36. These assurances of being raised from the dead, all depend upon the conditions specified. If these conditions have not been complied with, the dead will not be raised up at the last day. The judgment of the dead determines who have complied with these conditions, and their resurrection is the award of this judgment. The judgment must precede the resurrection, for only such as are found worthy to be raised, will be raised up. The dead will not be raised up to be judged, but they will be judged in order to raise up such as shall be worthy of a resurrection. The decisions of this judgment will be according to the conditions of our probation. "He that believeth on the Son shall have everlasting life, and I will raise him up at the last day. He that believeth not the Son shall not see life, but the life of God shall abide on him." That the dead, then, will be judged previous to the resurrection of the dead, is an unavoidable conclusion.

3. THE AWARD OF THE JUDGMENT OF THE DEAD.

The Lord himself will descend from heaven; he will stop in the region of the clouds, before his feet shall stand upon the earth, and while there he will judge the dead by the word which he had spoken, or endorsed while in the flesh. He looks over the dead of all nations. He remembers the words by which they were to be judged in the last day. He may be supposed to repeat the words which have been spoken, and apply them to the dead before him, as follows: "Man that is in honor and understandeth not, is like the beasts that perish," they shall never see light; but God will redeem the righteous from the power of the grave. Ps. xlix.12.20. "The man that wandereth out of the way of understanding shall remain in the congregation of the dead." Prov. xxi. 16. The wicked are dead, they shall not live, they are deceased they shall not rise, but the righteous shall live, "together with my dead body shall they arise." Isa. xxvi. 14.19. The saints are preserved forever, but the wicked have passed away; and, lo, he was not, yea, I sought him but he could not be found. Ps. xxxvii.28.36. "He that believeth on the Son hath everlasting life, and he that believeth not on the Son shall not see life, but the wrath of God abideth on him." John iii.36. "This is the will of the Father, that of all which he hath given me I should lose nothing, but should raise it up at the last day. Not to be raised up at the last day is to be lost. John vi.49. My Father hath given me power over all flesh, that I might give eternal life to as many as he hath given me. John xvii. 2. And this is the will of God, that every one that believeth on the Son might have everlasting life, and I will raise him up at the last day. John vi. 40. Finally, all the dead of whom Christ is the first fruits, all who are accounted worthy of the resurrection from the dead, will be made alive at his coming, and be caught up in the clouds to meet the Lord in the air, and so shall they ever be with the Lord. But all who have not become Christ's and who do not belong to the harvest of which Christ is the first fruits; all who are not accounted worthy of the resurrection, will not be raised from the dead, they are perished, they are lost, they have passed away, so as to never see light or life. This judgment will be passed upon the dead while the Lord is in the air, before the saints are raised up, and before his feet will stand upon the earth.

4. THE AWARDS OF THIS JUDGMENT WILL BE FINAL.

The judgments of the Lord are true and righteous altogether. Ps. xix.9. Therefore they will never need to be changed. If the judgment of the righteous is final,—which none deny—the judgment of the wicked also will be final, for the judgment of both classes is at the same time, and by the same authority. If to have everlasting life is a final judgment; not to see life is equally final. Those who will not be worthy of a resurrection at the time of this judgment, never can become worthy of it. "For there is no work, nor device, nor" knowledge, nor wisdom, in the grave where they lie. Eccl. ix. 10. God is immutable, therefore his judgments in the judgment of the dead, will be final to both classes. Then in this judgment will be determined the destinies of all who have died before the coming of the Lord. The decisions are obviously just. Every man is judged according to his works. All who are found worthy to live, will be raised from the dead, and live forever. And all who are not found worthy to live will not be made alive, but remain under the sentence of death which has passed upon all men. Without the resurrection they are perished, they are lost, they have returned to dust, so as to be as though they had not been.

RECAPITULATION.

1. The dead will be judged while they are dead, at the appearing of Christ, by the word which he had spoken or endorsed while in the flesh.

2. All who have complied with the conditions of the resurrection, being worthy of it, will be raised from the dead at the last day, to live for ever. But those who have not complied with the conditions of the resurrection, not being worthy of it, will not be raised from the dead at the last day, but will remain under the sentence of death which has passed upon all men, as they would have done if no resurrection from the dead had been offered to sinners.

3. The awards of this judgment are true and righteous altogether, and are therefore final. They will never need to be changed, therefore the judgment of the same dead will never need to be repeated.

Life in the Holy Land.

Extract from a letter received from the Rev. P. S. De Haas, U. S. Consul to Jerusalem, by Francis P. Harper, N. Y.

We enjoy our new position and home very much. Nothing could be more charming than life in this sacred land. Near this all the great events in the history of the world transpired. Here all the patriarchs lived, died, and are buried; here our blessed Lord redeemed us from the curse of sin, and secured our glorious resurrection by his victory over death. The whole country seems to breathe an inspiration. You never tire visiting the holy places. We live on the very summit of Mount Zion, and scarcely a day passes without our seeing the place where Christ was crucified, and the garden of his agony, or mount of his ascension, and yet the desire to see and visit these places increases with every fresh sight and visit. You can sit under one of the old olive trees in Gethsemane for hours without growing weary, and then will leave reluctantantly. So when you stroll down the Kedron, or over Olivet to Bethany, the mind becomes so absorbed in contemplation you forget everything present and only live in the past. What glorious living! From boyhood I have been singing in my heart, "Could I but stand where Moses stood." Last week I visited that sacred spot, spent the Sabbath on the top of Pisgah, and preached on Nebo! To describe my feelings would be impossible. The dream of my life was realized, I was standing on the very rock where the Almighty and his servant Moses once stood. The grandeur of the scenery was appropriate, and I felt like exclaiming: "Now, Lord, lettest thou thy servant depart in peace, for I have seen thy salvation." One night we camped at the ford of the Jabbok, where Jacob so gloriously prevailed with God, another at Zoar, to which Lot fled on the destruction of Sodom. We encircled entirely the Dead Sea; so, for a whole week, were 1320 feet below the level of the ocean, the lowest spot on the globe. The salt and sulphur formations here are wonderful—I can't describe them. Mrs. Lot is still standing a pillar of salt. The Arabs call her Bon Sheik's Lot. But I must close.

A SPIRITUAL FRAUD. A woman calling herself a spiritual medium gave an exhibition at Providence a few evenings since, and among other feats lifted a large piano with several persons seated on it. The audience were almost converted to a belief in her supernatural gifts, when a well-known citizen stepped upon the stage, and, announcing that he had discovered her secret, proceeded to repeat her "manifestations" one by one. He proved that the wonderful effects were attributed to purely physical causes, the medium being blessed with highly developed muscles. The entertainment ended with more abruptness than elegance.

Training for Dominion.

If there be no resurrection, and no future state of being for men,—MEN, we say, not "ghosts,"—Christianity is a delusion and faith is vain. In all generations the best people in the world have been the greatest sufferers; the most loyal to God have had the hardest lot on earth. Exceptional cases few and far between do but confirm the accuracy of this general statement. Let any intelligent man read—we do not say ecclesiastical history, for that awful field is too wide, but—the eleventh chapter in the epistle to the Hebrews, and ask himself calmly, seriously, "What does all this mean?" Here is a constellation of the devout, the holy, the God-fearing, the children of faith, and their experience is given in a series of graphic touches terribly suggestive of privation, suffering, and agony. Seen in the light of resurrection, and a future world of honor, dignity, and unfading splendor, the moral grandeur of this picture gallery of heaven's heroes is wonderfully imposing; but seen in the light of hard fact only, with the assumption that there is to be no return of the Lord Jesus, and consequently no rising from the dead of those who fall asleep trusting in Him, what can you make of it? Only this, the same that a clear thinker made of it eighteen centuries ago: "If there be no resurrection of the dead, then is Christ not risen; and if Christ be not risen, then is our preaching vain, and your faith is also vain. Yea, and we are found false witnesses of God, because we have testified of God that he raised up Christ; whom he raised not up, if so be that the dead rise not. For if the dead rise not, then is not Christ raised; and if Christ be not raised, your faith is vain; ye are yet in your sins. Then they also which are fallen asleep in Christ are perished." If in this life only we have hope in Christ, we are of all men most miserable;" men to be pitied, as we have risked all upon the hope of resurrection when He who is "our life" shall return.

In the chapter refered to, we have this appalling summary of the sufferings of those renowned worthies: "They were tortured; had trial of cruel mockings and scourgings, yea, moreover, of bonds and imprisonment; they were stoned, they were sawn asunder, were tempted, were slain with the sword; they wandered about in sheepskins; being destitute, afflicted, tormented; . . . . . they wandered in deserts, and in mountains, and in dens and caves of the earth."

And there is a companion picture to this of the Hebrew confessors, representing the first witnesses of Christ. Let us glance at that, too: "For I think that God hath set forth us the apostles last, as it were appointed to death; for we are made a spectacle to the world, and to angels, and to men. We are fools,—weak—despised. Even unto this present hour we both hunger and thirst, and are naked, and buffetted, and have no certain dwelling-place; and labor working with our own hands; being reviled, we bless; being persecuted we suffer it; being defamed, we intreat; we are made as the filth of the world, and are the offscouring of all things unto this day." "In labors more abundant, in stripes above measure, in prisons more frequent; in deaths oft. Of the Jews five times received I forty stripes save one. Thrice was I beaten with rods, once was I stoned, thrice I suffered shipwreck, a night and a day I have been in the deep; in journeyings often, in perils of waters, in perils of robbers, in perils by mine own countrymen, in perils by the heathen, in perils in the city, in perils in the wilderness, in perils in the sea, in perils among false brethren; in weariness and painfulness, in watchings often, in hunger and thirst, in fastings often, in cold and nakedness."

As there is a righteous ruler of the universe, it cannot be that a world in which men suffer for righteousness' sake has as yet realized the purpose for which it was created. Nor is it possible for men who think logically from the attributes of a personal God to rest in the conclusion of philosophical scepticism that the doctrine of a future state is simply a sentimental dream; useful, perhaps, in its way, to the common people; but not to be admitted for a moment by the magnates of philosophy. Nor, after prolonged thought on the various aspects of the subject, can we see that the idea of equity—and surely that is a divine idea—is met by the theological assurance that the souls of the righteous are now enjoying perfect happiness in heaven. This doctrine, even if it were scriptural, which assuredly it is not, would necessitate some most puzzling questions; such, for example, as:—What is meant by falling asleep in Christ? What great object is to be attained by the promised resurrection of the righteous? How are the meek to inherit the earth, and to be recompensed therein? In what way are the saints to judge the world? What is the meaning of appointing one over five, and another over ten cities? Is there any intelligence at all in the words, "We shall reign on the earth?" Is "the kingdom under the whole heaven to be given to the saints of the Most High," a mere figure of speech without any corresponding reality to justify it or make it intelligible? Why did not Paul get the crown of righteousness from the righteous Judge when he died, instead of saying it was laid up for him until the appearing and the kingdom of his Lord? Such questions could be multiplied to any extent, and correct answers to them would be simply impossible either on the theory of philosophical scepticism, or on that of orthodox theology. God has not done with his witnesses and confessors when they die, as the former assumes; nor are they rewarded then in a disembodied condition, as the latter has so long taught. The sceptic who will not believe what is written, and the Christian who believes more than is revealed, are alike at fault, although in totally opposite directions; but the man who is neither unbelieving nor credulous, will find clear revelation for the faith that when the Lord comes those that sleep in Him shall be raised incorruptible, whilst the living saints shall be changed, and both shall be installed in such spheres of permanent dignity and authority as they were fitted for by the discipline of earth. Then it will be found emphatically true, that the "sufferings of this present time are not worthy to be compared with the glory which shall be revealed in us."—Rainbow.

Αὐτόνεκρα—"perished;" utterly destroyed so as to be incapable of rising again; annihilated; one of the thousand passages which teach directly, or by obvious implication, that without resurrection there is no future life.

Declension in the Early Church.

As we pass from Paul to Clement, and from Clement to the Fathers that succeeded him, we find the Gospel becoming less of grace and more of merit. The light wanes as we travel down the patristic road, and remove ourselves from the apostolic dawn. It continues for some time at least to be the same Gospel, but its glory is shorn, its mighty force abated; and we are reminded of the change that seems to pass upon the sun, when, after contemplating Him in a tropical hemisphere, we see him in a northern sky, where his beams, having to force their way through mists and vapors, are robbed of half their splendor. Seen through the fogs of the patristic age, the Gospel scarcely looks the same which had burst upon the world without a cloud but a few centuries before. This disposition—that of making God less free in his gift, and man less dependent in the reception of it; the desire to introduce the element of merit on the side of man, and the element of condition on the side of God—operated at last in opening the door for the pagan principle to creep back into the church. A change of a deadly and subtle kind passed upon the worship. Instead of being the spontaneous thanksgiving and joy of the soul, that no more invoked or repaid the blessings which awaked that joy than the odors which the flowers exhale are the cause of their growth, or the joy that kindles in the heart of man when the sun rises is the cause of his rising—worship, we say, from being the expression of the soul's emotions, was changed into a rite, a rite akin to those of the Jewish temples and still more akin to those of the Greek mythology, a rite in which lay couched a certain amount of human merit and inherent efficacy that partly created, partly applied the blessing with which it stood connected. This was the moment when the pagan virus inoculated the Christian institution. This change brought back a multitude of others in its train. Worship being transformed into sacrifice—sacrifice in which was the element of expiation and purification—the "teaching ministry" was of course converted into a "sacrificing priesthood." When this had to be done, there was no retreating; a boundary had been reached which could not be recrossed till centuries had rolled away, and transformations of a more portentous kind than any which had yet taken place had passed upon the church.—J. A. Wylie, D. D.

World to Come.

We give our readers the following beautiful extract from a writer in the "Rainbow." After speaking briefly of the development theory of modern scientists he thus continues:—

We still believe in Genesis, and see with pleasure and joy of heart the dignified origin and position of our earthly head and father. Crowned with material and moral glories, he receives a dominion over all the world. There was royalty in his constitution, and he ascended the throne for which he was fitted by his nature. He was dethroned and disinherited, and a curse fell upon the visible for his sake. The thorns and the thistles have indeed grown rank in all the fields, natural and moral, incredible labor being demanded as the only method of preserving any order, or reaping any harvest of good. The rich and the poor sigh in common for the unattainable, the oppressed and the oppressor are equally miserable, and to human vision there is no visible goal where antagonisms may cease and conflicting elements in nature and society come into reconciliation. Such a termination is only known by those who have the secret of the Lord, for the eye of reason needs the telescope of faith. Our instincts after a kingdom of justice are worth considering in their place; but they are not strong enough to give unconquerable wings to hope. She requires the sure word of promise supported by oath to give strength to her pinions, and then she can rise exultingly. He, the Supreme One, has made known the secret of his will, that in the dispensation of the fullness of the times, all things in heaven and on earth shall be headed up in one; one Lord, one King, one kingdom. Creation is in birth pangs; all creatures sigh for the liberty of the glory which cometh at the manifestation of the sons of God. In the redemption of our body, we see the restoration of the royalty and the repeal of the malediction. Lo! the recovered paradise shines out with surpassing splendor and grace; most divinely fair, and more resplendent in beauty than any ancient garden for the childhood of humanity. And at last the true kings wear the purple and the golden crowns; the men who overcame the world and overcame themselves being trained for rule and glory by suffering and patience. God has not put under the angels the "world to come," but that stately and refulgent age displays with open doors of life when the absent nobleman cometh in his kingdom, when the holy and mighty ones descend to the "valley of decision." Not alone by sure decree of divine will, but by the fitness of things, by essential righteousness, the saints take the kingdom. The miracles of our Lord and his Apostles were outflashings from the crowning age, "powers of the world to come," prophecies of the time, when man no longer will be the slave of earthly elements and brute forces, but shall recover his dignity and power, his inheritance and his kingdom. There are several things pressing upon us which undeniably show that we are getting close to the thick darkness; and when that closes in upon us, how near to the gates of salvation and the threshold of the higher life! In the trans-Atlantic domain, demoniacal forces are let loose, and have become rampant. In the old world the great military powers are turning against the heavy sufferers, and will have no more time from her plagues. It is right enough to strike the iron into the heart of the ancient superstition; it must not, however, be denied that divine truths are as much ignored as medieval fooleries. The recoil of the human mind is from superstition to atheism.

The men of science and philosophy, so-called, are marching on to the desolate country where "No God!" is inscribed on the banners. And surely no monkish superstition could be more insane than that dreadful conclusion of the emancipated reason. It is, however, manifest that after the ten kings, inspired by an autocratic will, a greater force behind them, have made the whore desolate and burnt her with fire, we shall see atheism full-blown; the last and worst form of organized hostility to truth, righteousness, and God. According to the measure of life enjoyed, or according to the measure of faith in possession, some may pray to escape from the theatre of evil manifestation, and some to have valor and endurance in resisting all the terrors and subtleties of the time. But, blessed be God! because we know how the terrible drama finishes, and how sublimely the power comes into the field, which has no terror save to evil workers, but is redolent of love and life. In the well-grounded hope of a glorious conclusion, may we not prove, by exceeding dignity and purity, that we are breathing the fine air of a higher country, and catching the stately manners of the court and kingdom to which we belong.—G. Greenwell.

How the Millennium is to Come.

People think they see signs of promise in the movement of reform. They think to give the church a better shape, and the state a better government, and the world a freer Bible, and that thus the millennium will come. I have no confidence in any such hopes. I see more of promise in the darkest features of the time than in all these paltry and patriotic dreams. The world is perhaps more wicked now than it has been since Noah's flood—considering the light which it rejects. And yet in this very darkness I read the promise of coming light. In this very misgiving, despe*ration and gloom, I see the argument* for the speedy springing forth of glorious and unfading hopes, not as human reason calculates, but as God purposes. I behold in it the rapid winding up of the present dispensation to give place to that better state of things of which the Prophets all have spoken. Statesmen and churchmen see in it the unmistakable evidences of unprecedented changes, though they widely differ as to what those changes are to be.

I have read somewhere, in a very sagacious writer, that when happy changes are contemplated most people erroneously turn to the quarters of light for the signs of its approach. This has ever been man's mistake when looking for the fulfillment of God's great purposes, and is the mistake of many now. People are looking for the setting up of Christ's kingdom, and the introduction of millennial glory by reforming and rebaptizing present modes of effort and thought. But so it will not be. God's method of progress is to make darkness the way to light, death the prelude to life, despair the introduction to salvation, and corruption and confusion the road to order and glory. It is not in what seems hopeful, but in what seems gloomy and untoward, that we are to look for the signs of the speedy forthcoming of God's wonder-working goodness. It is the stirring upon the face of the dark waters that give prognistics of the breaking forth of light and life and beauty. The bursting glories of spring come directly out of the bleak winter. It is from the corrupting seed that we obtain the harvest. The darkest hour is said to be that which immediately precedes the day. The period most hopeful is that when the apparent motives for despondency are most overwhelming. The stress of the controversy between hope and fear always falls upon the eve of triumph. Those dim hours of dismay to the scattered followers of Christ at his crucifixion were but the preludes to the bringing in of light and immortality for man. The bloody persecutions under the Roman emperors which threatened the extinction of Christianity were the immediate precursors of its victory over even the throne of the Cæsars. And so the Scriptures teach that it will be in the ushering in of the great consummation. The sun must darken, and the moon withhold her light, and then shall the Sun of righteousness arise with healing in his wings.—J. Scott.

The All-Conquering Hand.

It is related that the Duke of Wellington once ordered an officer to undertake some duty which involved great personal peril. The officer did not shrink from the danger, but said to the Duke, "Let me, before I go, have one grasp of your all-conquering hand, and I can do it."

Confidence in a commander is a source of strength and a presage of victory. But how often is that confidence misplaced and betrayed. The greatest conquerors are doomed at last to defeat. No human hand can control the elements, resist adverse circumstances, or wage victorious warfare with death, the king of terrors and the terror of kings. The Duke of Wellington is dead. The hand that the officer desired to grasp has grown pale, pulseless, powerless, and has gone to mingle with the dust from which it came.

But, thanks be to God, the Christian warrior has an unconquerable leader, an all-conquering king. Born in lowliness, partaker of our nature, tempted in all points like as we are, persecuted, hated, despised, crucified, slain,—the Captain of our Salvation has been made perfect through suffering, and lives at God's right hand to save and succor those who seek his face.

His is an all-conquering hand. He has conquered sin and Satan, disease, palsy, leprosy, and all manner of infirmities; He has rebuked the winds, calmed the waves, walked upon the waters, raised the dead, entered the tomb, rent the rocks, burst the graves, abolished death and triumphed over every foe. His own right hand, and his holy arm hath gotten Him the victory.

He sends us to our work. Through storms and dangers, terrors and calamities, through the realms of desolation, and to the very gates of death and hell; but He bids us fear not, and offers us, to assure and strengthen our hearts, the grasp of his "all-conquering hand." He says, Lo, I am with you always, even to the end of the world."

With such a helper who can fear? With such an all-conquering hand, stretched forth to grasp, and clasp, and strengthen and sustain us, of what can we be afraid? Danger is safety, sorrow is joy, labor is rest, and conflict is peace, while we can feel the clasp of his all-conquering hand. His commands are not grievous. His yoke is easy. His warfare ends in victory, and if He calls us to lead a forlorn hope, to rush into the face of death itself, let us plead only for the grasp of his hand, and then go forth to do his high commands.

We shall never do his work unaided,—we shall never ask his help in vain. The soul that trusts in Him has a shield and buckler, a rock of refuge, and a tower of strength. And to the weakest and the faintest of his servants He says, "Be of good cheer." "Fear thou not; for I am with thee; yea, I will strengthen thee; be not dismayed; for I am thy God: I will strengthen thee; yea, I will help thee; yea, I will uphold thee with the right hand of my righteousness." Isa. xli. 10.—Sel.

The Reign of Christ.

That Christ is to reign in some sense on the earth, is perhaps admitted by all who believe that He is the Savior of man. Some suppose that He has been reigning spiritually, or rather, mystically ever since He left the earth. In the sense it is supposed by many, that He will reign in the future.

But why should not Christ's reign be literal and personal. Reason does not oppose it. It is as reasonable that He should reign personally, as that He should reign at all. It is as reasonable that He should so reign, as that Adam or any of his posterity should reign personally. The Bible does not oppose it. Every thing we find in the Bible relating to Christ's reign, goes to show that He is to reign in a literal sense. Christ as the Savior, is a personal being. The Lord told David, that "of the fruit of his loins, according to the flesh, he would raise up Christ to sit on his throne." Acts ii. 30. "Unto us a child is born, unto us a son is given; and the government shall be upon his shoulders, ... upon the throne of David, and upon his kingdom to order it, and to establish it with judgment." Isa. ix. 6, 7. "Behold the days come, saith the Lord, that I will raise unto David a righteous Branch, and a King shall reign and prosper, and shall execute judgment and justice in the earth." Jer. xxv. 5. "He shall be great and shall be called the Son of the Highest, and the Lord God shall give unto him the throne of his father David, . . . and of his kingdom there shall be no end. Luke i. 32, 33. "Of this man's seed hath God, according to his promise, raised unto Israel a Savior, Jesus." Acts xiii. 23. "Christ our Lord which was made of the seed of David according to the flesh." Rom. i. 3, 4. "Jesus Christ of the seed of David raised from the dead." 2 Tim. ii. 8. "He not took on him the nature of angels, but he took on him the seed of Abraham." Heb. ii. 16.

Christ then, as the seed or son of David, is to reign. As the son of David He was born to be King. He lived, died, and rose from the dead personally, as David's son. As David's son He is at the right hand of the Father; gone away to receive for Himself a kingdom, and to return to set up his kingdom on the earth, to reign from sea to sea and from the river to the ends of the earth. There is nothing mystical in all this. Why should we not receive it as we have it stated? Christ is the last Adam. The first Adam was personal, and his dominion literal. So will it be of the last Adam. As sure as Christ was born David's son, so sure will He reign David's son; and of his kingdom there will be no end.—Sel.

The Journey's End.

We have read of the caravans of pilgrims, who after months of weary travel, approach the Holy City. They have been drenched by storms, burned by blazing suns, pinched with hunger, and choked with the dust of the desert.—Their shoes are worn out, their garments soiled, and their tottering limbs can hardly sustain their steps. Through days of suffering, and nights of sleeplessness, and constantly assailed by merciless foes, they have toiled along, until now they approach the end of their pilgrimage.

The sun, breaking through the clouds of a lurid day, is just sinking behind the hills of Lebanon. The pilgrims ascend an eminence, and lo, Jerusalem is before them! Its turrets, towers, pinnacles, and domes all blaze in golden splendor, reflecting the rays of the setting sun. A scene of almost supernatural enthusiasm ensues.

"Jerusalem, Jerusalem!" is shouted from hot and blistering lips. "Jerusalem, Jerusalem!" is re-echoed through the long lines of the rear. The lame, the fainting, the dying, are animated with new life, as they rush forward to catch a glimpse of that sacred city where the Savior bled and died.

Tears gush from all eyes. Some overwhelmed with joyous emotion, prostrate themselves upon the ground, and breathe a silent prayer of gratitude and thanksgiving. Some throw their arms into the air, and shout wildly in the outbursting of their rapture, "Hallelujah!" All past fatigues, perils, sufferings, are forgotten. The pilgrimage is ended, their goal is gained.

But O, when the pilgrim of earth, weary of the long, painful, perilous journey, arrives within sight of the celestial city,—a sight so brilliant that no mortal eye can look upon it,—as he gazes upon the splendor of the metropolis of God's empire, and listens to its choirs, and knows that in this city the Savior has a mansion prepared for him, with robe and harp and crown, and that there he shall repose in peace forever, can language tell his joy? The imagination sinks exhausted in the vain attempt to compass such blessedness.

Prayer.

Prayer does not consist in empty compliments to God, or fulsome eulogies to the Almighty. Many who ought to know better, seem to think so. They spend half the time devoted to public prayer in complimenting the Divine Being—telling Him how grand, sublime and glorious He is in his perfections, instead of confession, intercession, supplication and giving of thanks, there arises as a stench in the nostrils of the Almighty, a round of fulsome eulogies from sinners. Instead of praying for the people and to God, they pray at the people, and from God.

Prayer does not consist in exhortation. Some people's prayers consist of these two parts: First, heavy and turbid compliments to God. Second, vapid, verbose exhortations to the people. The people are invited to prayer, and instead of hearing and uniting in sending up the voice of supplication, their ears are berated with hortatory exclamations and appeals. We have heard preachers spend one-half the five minutes some of them devote to prayer in this kind of exercise. It is not prayer. Don't know what to call it. Thousands of hungry hearts turn away from such altars, empty and dissatisfied. "Ye ask and receive not, because ye ask amiss."

EDITORIAL DEPARTMENT.

A Plea for the Body.

We are told that the body is not of much account. It is called the "mortal coil," the "tenement of clay" and the "soul's house." It is condemned and abused, it is blamed for all the mischief done, and is to be deserted at death, while the soul is going forth on wings of light to realms of bliss, forever free from its cumbersome clay. Now all this may do for the poets who write much nonsense and for theologians who wish to amuse the people with their theories of mysticism. But science and the Bible, nature and common sense, show us that all such notions about the body are mere fancies. All men have bodies, and the whole career of man in life depends upon his body. Without a sound nervous system there can be no mind. Without muscle there can be no endurance. The hand that writes, the tongue that talks, the lungs that breathe and the brain that thinks are all physical and belong to the body. During the ages of superstition certain philosophers vied with each other in torturing their bodies, claiming that the imprisoned souls rejoiced over their calamities, but as Christianity dawned upon these benighted men, they learned to respect the body as a necessary part of the real man.

When God made man He gave him a body. When rewards were promised or punishments threatened the body was included in the joy or the pain. Even the death of Christ was in body, and the resurrection contemplates the change of this "mortal body" to be made like unto the glorious body of our risen Lord. It is sown a natural body, and is to be raised a spiritual body. Indeed the Bible offers neither rewards nor punishments to men without bodies. All this talk so flippantly made about an immortal soul which has no eyes, no body, no parts, and which occupies neither space nor place, may do for those who deal in mere fancies, but when we talk about the crown of life, the kingdom of God, the inheritance, and the holy city, we must conclude that the Bible idea is the only rational one which treats man as a real being, and that he will have a real existence in the hereafter. Let us then with Isaiah hope in the re-living of the dead, and rejoice with the same enthusiasm which placed Him, in vision, amid the scenes and joys of immortality—"Thy dead men shall live, together with my DEAD BODY shall they arise. Awake and sing, ye that dwell in the dust; for thy dew is as the dew of herbs, and the earth shall cast out the dead." Isa. xxvi. 19.

Our affections, our friendships, and indeed all our ideas, bounded by human experience, are connected with the human form, which was made in the image of God. Any theory, therefore, which ignores the body and offers man life and joy without it, is unfounded, and contrary to the true science of our being.

The Great White Throne.

"And I saw a great white throne, and him that sat on it, from whose face the earth and the heaven fled away; and no place was found for them."—Rev. xx. 11.

What a scene of sublimity is here. The great white throne emblemizes Power, Justice and Dominion. God will take to Himself his great power, will establish justice and set up his everlasting kingdom.

The word white is also used to denote purity. We have the great multitude in robes of white, the white stone, in which is written the new name, the white cloud, on which is seated the Son of Man, with the shining sickle, and the last of the seven trumpeters in the spotless linen sounds the grand consummation: The kingdoms of this world are become the kingdoms of our Lord and of his Christ, " " " and the time of the dead" " then ushered in.

When the white throne is established, the old heavens and the old earth are to flee away, sin's rule shall end, wickedness shall cease and man's empire shall be no more. They shrink back from the awful presence of Him who sits upon the throne. The sea labors through all her depths, and the dead are cast upon the shore, the graves are unsealed; the bars are broken and the prisoners come forth. Death gives up his crown, his reign is over. The resurrection takes away his subjects and his dominion comes to a final end.

What a multitude stand before the throne. The small and great are there. The king and his subject, the master and his slave, the rich and poor, Jew and Gentile, the old and young.

This scene of judgment, of the passing away of sin and death, and the removal of the old heavens and the old earth is not compressed within an hour or a day, but reaches over the grand period of the white throne dispensation: It more directly points to that age which lies between the close of the one thousand years and the finished work of the new heavens and the new earth. During this sublime epoch the books are opened and the multitudes of the dead from land and sea are judged. The books are opened! Momentous issues hang upon the sentence of Him who sits upon the throne. But, thank Heaven, another book is opened—the book of life. Mercy, Pardon and Redemption gleam in golden letters on its pages. Angel hands have written therein the names of the noble of earth; and now will come the blessed results hoped for in the days of their sorrow. The old things shall pass away, but the throne shall remain. The dead are judged and the rewards are given. The lake of fire bearing on its burning waves death and hell, shall pass with the scenes of time. The night shall be no more; pains end with the night, weeping and death shall cease when the voice from heaven cries IT IS DONE. The work is finished, the tabernacle of God shall be with men, and his glory shall fill the earth as the waves fill the sea. Redemption shall be complete, and the great multitude shall sing Redemption's song beyond the weeping and the dying when "there shall be no more curse."

Doubting Castle Invaded.

We notice that the RESTITUTION, a paper patronized by a portion of those who believe in probation after the Lord comes, has lately changed hands, and is now removed from Chicago to Plymouth, Ind. A publishing company has been organized in Indiana to whom the paper has been sold. Elder H. V. Reed is its present editor. The RESTITUTION is one of our exchanges, and we find many excellent things in it concerning the present age, but when it treats of the age to come we are filled with righteous doubts.—A. G. Times.

That the editor of the "Times" is filled with doubts we do not question, but that his doubts are righteous is quite another thing. If his doubts are righteous, then it follows that the "age to come" of which he speaks is wrong, but if it should turn out that they are just the editor's doubts, and not founded on the Word of God, then we may yet have faith in what Brother Burr would call "heresy." Perhaps it may not be amiss in this connection to let another speak who had no doubts whatever upon the subject: "Yet have I set my KING upon my HOLY HILL OF ZION. I will declare the decree; the LORD hath said unto me, THOU ART MY SON, this day have I begotten thee. Ask of me and I will give thee the HEATHEN for thine INHERITANCE and the UTTERMOST PARTS OF THE EARTH for thy POSSESSION. Thou shalt BREAK them with a rod of IRON; thou shalt dash them in pieces like a potter's vessel. Be WISE now therefore, O YE KINGS: be INSTRUCTED ye JUDGES of the earth. SERVE the Lord with fear and REJOICE with trembling. Kiss the Son lest he be angry and ye perish from the way, when his wrath is kindled but a little. BLESSED ARE ALL THEY THAT PUT THEIR TRUST IN HIM." Psa. ii. 6-12.

That the nations of the earth will conform to this decree of Jehovah and yield obedience to his Son who will reign in Mount Zion and in Jerusalem, after their power has been broken by the rod of iron, is evident from the song which the victors sing, after they stand on the sea of glass. Now as Brother Burr expects to stand upon that mirrored sea, we will let the Bible tell us what shall then be sung. Hear it oh ye doubting children of earth. "And they sing the song of Moses, the servant of God, and the song of the Lamb, saying Great and marvellous are thy works, Lord God Almighty, just and true are thy ways, thou King of nations. Who shall not fear thee, O Lord and glorify thy name? for thou only art holy: FOR ALL NATIONS SHALL COME AND WORSHIP BEFORE THEE, for thy judgments are made manifest." Rev. xiii. 3, 4. Now as Brother B. expects to sing that most sublime anthem we would suggest in all kindness that he certainly ought to believe now what he shall sing then. "Be not faithless but believing."

The Better Thing.

"These all having obtained a good report through faith received not the promise, God having provided some better thing for us that they without us should not be made perfect."—Heb. xi. 39, 40.

The Scriptures present many things to us by way of contrast. Things temporal are brought out in contrast with things eternal, the mortal with the immortal, and the suffering with the reigning. We have Moses and Christ—the old covenant and the new covenant. The inheritance under the law and the inheritance under the Gospel. The dispensation of Moses was the age of temporal blessings; the promises under the Gospel pertain to blessings which are eternal. Hence, says the Apostle, "The things which are seen are temporal, but the things which not seen are eternal."

Keeping in view the foregoing facts we see a volume of meaning in the better things mentioned in connection with the Gospel and its promise. Christ is presented to us as a better sacrifice, to confirm a "better covenant" which was established upon "better promises." And this prepared the way for the bringing in of the "better hope" which reaches forward to "a better and enduring substance," and points us to the "better country" which is to be obtained by a "better resurrection." These are the better things to which the Apostle alludes in the conclusion of this celebrated chapter to the Hebrew brethren. The realization of all these blessed promises will not take place until the saints are all brought out and made joint heirs with Christ. Then will all the redeemed be "glorified together," or as the Apostle says: "They without us will not be made perfect." The whole body of Saints, including patriarchs, prophets, apostles and martyrs will all come forth in the morning of the millennial day and be crowned victors over death and the grave. Glorious prospect for those who are bearing the emblems of faith and hope in the valley of death, that they may reach the unfading laurels of that better country and share with the King his crown and throne.

New Publication.

THE TRUTH is the name of a new monthly just started in St. Louis. It is published by Chas. B. Cox, and edited by James H. Brookes. Dr. Brookes is a Presbyterian clergyman of eminence and a strong believer, if we mistake not, in the pre-millenial coming of our Lord. In his introductory article the editor says:

We shall also strive to comfort doubting and desponding Christians by leading them into the assurance of their acceptance, not through the fancied discovery of some goodness in themselves, but through belief of God's testimony; urging them to a higher practical holiness by walking in the light of unclouded fellowship with the Father and his Son, and by "looking for that blessed hope, and the glorious appearing of the great God and our Savior Jesus Christ." Titus ii. 13. As it is our aim to encourage diligent and devout study of the Word of life, brief and plain expositions of Scripture will be given, with special reference to the elucidation of passages commonly regarded as obscure.

From the above it would appear that this new advocate will take advanced ground on the questions of Biblical criticism and the hope of Messiah's coming. Parties wishing specimen numbers can address the publisher, No. 212 North Fifth Street, St. Louis.

☞ The outlook for the RESTITUTION seems to be very encouraging. We have added over forty new subscribers to our list in the last ten days. Let every subscriber get at least one new name for 1875. There are a number of brethren who are not readers of the paper, and we hope to put their names on our list soon.

Personal Items.

Brother J. M. Stephenson is now laboring in Lanark, Ill., and will attend the Conference at Antioch next week. He informs us that he expects to spend a part of the winter in Canada.

Brother A. F. Dugger has given up the Seventh-Day theory, and is now proclaiming the Gospel of Christ as God's way of life to the Gentiles. We hope to hear from him occasionally.

Brother Amos Sanford of Columbus, Kansas, has just closed a very interesting debate at his place with a spiritualist. He writes that a deep interest was awakened in the community, and a better feeling toward the truth prevails among the people.

Brother F. H. Berrick will spend the winter at Lansing, Mich., having been elected to the State Senate from his District, on the Independent Ticket. While there he will have an excellent opportunity to preach the Gospel to Cæsar's household.

☞ Brethren in making remittances for the RESTITUTION will please bear in mind that the postage for 1875, must be prepaid. The amount is only twenty cents for each subscriber. Please remember this item brethren as it will be too much of a burden on us to pay it all.

☞ We have on hand a number of articles on different subjects which we have not yet had time to read. Our contributors will be patient with us, as we have much necessary work on hand which must be attended to first.

The Present Outlook.

COMING EVENTS CAST THEIR SHADOWS BEFORE.

"Men's hearts failing them for fear, and for looking after those things which are coming on the earth."—Luke xxi. 26.

It needs no demonstration to convince the attentive observer of human affairs that feverish disquietude, perplexing anxiety, and fearful foreboding, are taking a deep hold of the public mind. Those that best understand the tendencies of the age, and the workings of all the antagonizing forces that are undermining the very foundations of every existing social compact, are predicting a volcanic outbreak in the comparatively near future. Without minutely specifying every indication that leads to this conclusion, we content ourselves with calling attention to some of the more marked signs of the times.

Republicanism and monarchical institutions are not only occupying a threatening attitude toward each other, but already grapple in exterminating, internecine conflict. Thrones, that seemed settled on foundations as stable as the granite basements of the everlasting hills, are toppling over as the grand swell of revolution rocks beneath. Royalty and aristocracy are becoming loathsome, intolerable nuisances to the over burdened, down trodden masses, who clamorously cry out for a new order of things. The statesman stands aghast as he contemplates the murky foldings of the gathering war-cloud, surcharged with all the elements of destructive fury, that is just ready to burst upon the world. With telescopic out-looking he endeavors to descry visions of peace and rest beyond the earthquake shock of a universal war. Labor and capital occupy hostile positions, and each is marshalling its forces for a contest that will prove the ruin of both, a strife in which the "combatants will tear each other in pieces," as tersely expressed by Hyacinthe. The great ecclesiastical despotism that, in ages past, has trampled upon royalty and commonalty alike, that has established its usurpations and proved its absurd and foolish dogmas by the ultimately convincing arguments of dungeon, rack, and fire, is now abandoned by all the great forgers of her chains and executors of her inquisitorial wrath. The Franco-German war called away the last guard furnished by European kingcraft, and deprived of the sustaining bayonets of Napoleon, a hand too strong to resist seized the crown and sceptre, and mounted the throne of the Eternal City. But she has millions of superstitious devotees obsequiously ready to do her bidding. Could she obtain control of one of the leading governments of Europe, that would aid and abet her claims to temporal power, she could easily swell the numbers of an armed force to overwhelming proportions. Were France, for instance, to pledge the restoration of the temporal power, how readily her faithful adherents of every nationality would be to enlist for its accomplishment; and not for the accomplishment of this alone, but for the overthrow of Protestant Germany, which France hates for political reasons, and ecclesiastical Rome for reasons both political and spiritual. To thwart such combinations taxes astute diplomacy to the utmost. A war when such issues are at stake would involve all Europe. That a war, intensified with religious animosities superadded to long-treasured political hates, is imminent, is conceded by those who occupy a standpoint from whence they can discern the unfoldings of coming events.

The Eastern question, too, is becoming one of alarming significance to the governments of Europe. To maintain the "balance of power" has long been a difficult affair, and every complication of political relations between existing powers serves only to make it still more embarrassing. When France and Prussia were involved in the late war, Russia gave official notice that she would be no longer bound by the stipulations of the "Treaty of Paris," which excluded her fleets from the Black Sea; and no one of the great powers was in a position to enter a protest. Now comes the announcement that Austria declares her intention to treat with the Danubian Provinces independent of any connection with the Sublime Porte—Provinces that were specially made dependent by the articles of the Treaty. Surely the days of the Moslem in Europe are about numbered, and Russia is making rapid strides toward grasping the long coveted prize—the Dardanelles and Constantinople. What will result from all the commotion about to convulse the world, is the question asked but not answered by human sagacity. The sure word of prophecy discloses beyond the present abnormal, restless, dissatisfied condition of human society, a restitution of all things. For that we labor, wait, and pray.

Spiritualism.

Dr. Geo. M. Beard, of New York, has recently given a lecture upon the subject of Spiritualism, in which he takes very strong grounds against the whole system. Dr. B. is a man of science, has given much attention to the subject, and is fully in earnest. Among other things he says:—

All the phenomena embraced under clairvoyance, mind-reading, and Spiritualism, so-called, may be accounted for by one or several of the following six facts:

First.—Trickery. Most of the trickery is of a cheap, vulgar, and transparent character; in no way to be compared with that of Houdin or other great magicians.

Second.—Guess-work or coincidences. Guess-work is both a science and an art, and much of the success of clairvoyants depends upon the mastery of this art, and the skillful use which they make of coincidences which happen to us all in every-day life.

Third.—Unconscious mental action.

Fourth.—Unconscious muscular action. These two facts, either singly or in combination, explain the marvels of planchette, table-tipping, mind-reading, as practiced by Brown, spiritualistic tricksters, and many amateurs. Those who have not looked into this subject will be surprised to find how many of these marvels can be explained by unconscious muscular action and unconscious mental action.

Fifth.—Physiological idiosyncracies. Under this head comes the peculiar flexibility of many persons, as the Davenport brothers, the Eddys, and their imitators, who can make their hands smaller than their wrists, and thus slip out of handcuffs and ropes.

Sixth.—Phenomena of trance, erroneously called animal magnetism. A passive state of the mind very easily excited in some persons and closely allied with somnambulism and certain types of hysteria. In this state there may be great exaltation of special faculties; but no new faculties appear any more than they appear in insanity, or sleep, or hysteria.

Assuming the justice of the above explanations, it is clear enough that no one but a physiologist or practical physician, or one who has made himself an expert in physiology or diseases of the nervous system, is capable of scientifically studying these phenomena.

A CHALLENGE.

In closing, the lecturer gave the following challenge: If there is anywhere on the globe any member of the human race who professes to have any clairvoyant, mind-reading, or second-sight power, or to be a medium through whom spirits of the departed manifest themselves to us by signs that are appreciated by the senses, or to be endowed with any new or unknown force, and he will come to New York and allow me the same opportunity for investigating his claims that I am accustomed to have in investigating other and allied questions, I will prove surely and speedily that he does not possess any such power in any degree.

Calmly and deliberately, and with a full sense of its importance, I offer it to the world. The day is coming when scholarship and science must array themselves on one side or the other of a mighty superstition, and I earnestly call upon the members of my profession, and especially those who are experienced in the study of the nervous system, to give somewhat of their time and force, as the need shall arise, to the arrest of this tide of folly.

Thy Kingdom Come.

This is the cry of a pilgrim church. It has arisen alike from the city and the wilderness—from the vineyard and the desert. It has gone up from martyr fires and beds of suffering. It has been wailed out over the dying and the dead, but still the prayer remains unanswered. The golden wheels seem to tarry and the coming King to wait.

The old earth moves on her way. The curse still lingers on her landscapes and sin walks her streets in gold and purple. Science has flashed her light into the darkness, she has refined and polished the baser metals, and her devotees imagine they are turned to gold. She has fertilized the soil and they dream that she can yet remove the curse. She has girdled the earth with iron and sent her strange whispers under the sea, but crime laughs at her achievements, and avails itself of her success. Moral reformers have agitated the great whirlpool, dreaming that purity may be found in its depths. They have changed laws and mustered armies, they have canvassed parliaments and legislative halls. They have stood in the forum and the pulpit, calling upon men to set up the standard of right and unfurl the banner of truth. But human evil is too strong for man's unaided arm, and the tide of sin sweeps on unchecked. Crime ignores the pleadings of humanity and justice waits in vain for recognition even in her own halls. There are cries of peace and safety, while peace is taking her flight and safety is found only in obscurity.

There is only one remedy for sin, and that is the cross—only one bright solution of earth's problems, and that is a kingdom of righteousness and peace. Six thousand years of toil and sin and suffering have rolled away and still the church waits. God's little ones are crying "How long, O Lord, holy and true." The petition "Thy kingdom come" still arises from earnest, aching hearts. The answer has been long delayed but it will come in God's own time. Not one faint cry has failed to reach the Father's ear. Not one earnest petition shall lie unanswered. The prayers of the saints rest upon the golden altar before the throne, and soon the ministering angel shall pour upon them the fragrant incense and they shall be offered before the Most High. The answer shall not be long deferred for the very fire from the altar shall be cast into the earth and there shall be "voices and thunderings and lightnings and an earthquake." A new power shall be introduced into earth's moral chaos, for the kingdoms of the world shall become the kingdoms of our Lord and of his Christ. Oppression and wrong shall be swept from high places, for earth shall have a glorious King. The wilderness shall be glad and the desert shall blossom as the rose, for the curse is forever cancelled by God's own hand. Our loved ones shall come again from the land of the enemy—ransomed by Him who holds the keys of the grave.

The feet that have trodden earth's rocky paths and rested only beneath her rod, shall walk on the banks of the beautiful river. The eyes that have been closed during death's long sleep shall gleam with immortal life. The hands that have been folded above the still heart shall carry the palms of victory, and the brow that hath borne the white seal of the conqueror, shall wear the crown of life, for there shall be no more death. No sorrow is known in the glorified earth. No sighs are borne on the fragrant breezes of Eden restored. There are no sad notes in the triumphant song of the redeemed.

Thy kingdom come. Then shall the glad earth welcome her King, and the Life-giver shall pour for us the wine of immortality. Then shall He bestow the crowns and receive the sceptre of universal dominion, for God shall be all in all, and his "will shall be done on earth as it is done in heaven."

MRS. H. V. REED.

☞ A little while and our warfare shall be accomplished. Our King shall come. His all-conquering hand shall turn the keys of death, unbar the gates of the grave, pluck his saints from the prison of the destroyer, bind the old serpent and hurl him into the abyss, put down all rule and authority and power, establish his eternal empire, renew the world, restore the desolate creation, and sway forever the sceptre of peace and righteousness. "And the Lord God shall give unto him the throne of his father David, and he shall reign over the house of Jacob forever, and of his kingdom there shall be no end." Luke i. 32.—The Christian.

THE WORLD.—As you love your souls, beware of the world; it has slain its thousands and ten thousands. What ruined Lot's wife? The world. What ruined Judas? The world. What ruined Simon Magus? The world. And "what shall it profit a man if he shall gain the whole world and lose his own soul?"

Russia Reaches For Constantinople.

The diplomatic correspondence between Austria and the Sublime Porte is ended, the former declining any further communications in the matter, and declaring her intention to treat directly with the Danubian Provinces of Roumania.

At the close of the Crimean war, in 1856, Russia, Austria, Prussia, France, England, and Sardinia, entered with Turkey, into the "Treaty of Paris," by which they bound themselves to maintain the integrity of the Turkish dominion in Europe, to recognize the full dependence of her Danubian Provinces upon the Porte, and to maintain no naval armaments upon the Black Sea. The object of the treaty, as of the war which forced Russia into it, was to preserve the "balance of power" in Europe, supposed to be seriously threatened by the hand which Russia was stretching toward Constantinople, the Dardanelles, and the provinces on the Danube. That the chains of the treaty galled Russia, was patent to all, but when Alexander succeeded to the throne, in 1855, he wisely perceived that the hereditary policy of the Crown, and the need of his realm for a southern outlet, must be laid aside for the present—that the day was not yet come for their accomplishment—that he must hide his time.

The treaty was therefore signed, but Russia at once commenced her preparations for the time when the opportunity should offer for its breach. The re-organization and increase of her army, the perfection of her vast railway system, and the establishment of great military and naval depots on the rivers running into the Euxine, were vigorously pressed, and are now nearing completion. The opportunity that she foresaw found her ready for it. When France and Prussia were absorbed in the greatest war since Waterloo, she gave notice that her fleets should no longer be excluded from the Euxine. Previous to this diplomatic announcement, great surprise was manifested that she took no hand in the contest. This, her life-long policy, was the reason. By holding entirely aloof she could accomplish her purpose. France was powerless to protest against it. Prussia had her hands full, and dared not invite a breach with the Russian Court. England dared not grapple with her alone. The work was accomplished—the entering wedge fairly fixed.

The subsequent steps have been still shrewder, and place Gortschikoff in the front rank as the diplomatic fox of Europe. The war over, and Germany united, he made his web anew. France was secured—many say by secret treaty, but more likely through non-committal promises of a future alliance. Germany is held in her old position through fear that any protest would force an alliance with France. Austria is secured through her own needs, and made the cat's paw with which to rench the chestnut—through her comes the announcement (which twenty years since would have convulsed all Europe) that the Roumanian Provinces will be treated as independent.

The Treaty of Paris is shattered, and the Turk appeals to Earth and Heaven in vain. France and Austria see their profit in the game. The mouth of Prussia is closed. England, all alone, dares not protest. Italy, the successor of Sardinia as signatory of the treaty, is too weak, and too much concerned with her own affairs to care much about it. And Turkey is "sick."

The game has been shrewdly planned, and admirably accomplished. The inevitable destiny of Russia could not be checked—so great a power must, in the nature of human affairs, have a maritime outlet. It was only a question of time, but it was hardly fancied a decade since, that the present century would witness so great a stride toward that Constantinople which is the "Key of the World."—Cincinatti Times.

A Coming Savior.

Over the Christian's engagements, habits and pursuits, whether social, professional, literary, scientific, or otherwise, the thought of a coming Savior exercises a strong control. If the love of gain besets him, the eternal riches which Christ at his coming will bestow, are to him an effectual counterpoise. If the natural bent of his mind be the love of pleasure, the anticipated joys of the second advent are calculated to quench the unhallowed flame. If the love of ease, or a lethargic indolence beset him,—If some favorite pursuit too much engrosses, or some master passion with galling bondage lords it over him; in either of these cases, and in any similar ones, what a motive is here presented to an energetic effort for deliverance. Or is he naturally ambitious? In contemplating the glories of the future, how do all the objects of human esteem sink into insignificance! Or does the love of men's applause, or the dread of man's censure—those fearfully influential principles, do these too strongly appeal to the corrupt principle within? Behold! in the anticipation of a coming Savior, a principle still more influential! For when a believing man has learned to realize the smile of an approving God, how little will he esteem the applause of his fellowmen! And when he has brought home to his soul a dread of that terrible denunciation, "Depart ye cursed," how little will he care that his name is now cast out as evil! The power of the world is disarmed by the vision of things invisible, and all its pomp and circumstance, its pageants and applause, its triumphs and its fame, all these have no glory to the mind imbued with heavenly faith, by reason of the glory which excelleth. That glory will be revealed by Christ, who is emphatically "the king of glory." This, "in his times, he will show." The heart of the Christian is full of the times; and in the many temptations to worldliness which beset him, he finds no stronger resisting power than a lively perception of the day when glory shall be revealed.—Brock.

The White Stone.

"To him that overcometh will I give to eat of the hidden manna, and will give a white stone, and in the stone a new name written which no man knoweth saving he that receiveth it."—Rev. ii. 27.

In primitive times, when travelling was rendered difficult by want of places of public entertainment, hospitality was exercised by private individuals to a very great extent. Persons who had partaken of this hospitality, and those who practiced it frequently contracted habits of regard and friendship for each other; and it became a well-established custom, both among the Greeks and Romans, to provide their guests with some particular mark, which was handed down from father to son, and insured hospitality and kind treatment whenever it was presented. This mark was usually a small stone or pebble, cut in two, and upon the halves of which the host and the guest mutually inscribed their names, and then interchanged them with each other.

The production of this stone was quite sufficient to ensure friendship for themselves or their descendents, whenever they travelled again in the same direction. While it is evident that these stones required to be privately kept and the name written on them carefully concealed, lest others should obtain the privileges instead of him for whom they were intended, how natural is the allusion to this custom, in the words: "I will give him to eat of the hidden manna;" and having done so, having recognized him as my guest, my friend, "I will give him a white stone, and in the stone a new name written, which no man knoweth saving he that receiveth it;" a pledge of my friendship, secured and inviolable, known only to himself.

Christ's Coming.

What will be the state of the world when the Lord Jesus returns? "As it was in the days of Noah, so shall it be also in the days of the Son of Man. They did eat, they drank, they married wives, they were given in marriage, until the day that Noah entered the ark, and the flood came and destroyed them all. Likewise, also, as it was in the days of Lot; they did eat, they drank, they bought, they sold, they planted, they builded; but the same day that Lot went out of Sodom it rained fire and brimstone from heaven and destroyed them all. Even thus shall it be in the day when the Son of Man is revealed." Luke xvii. 27, 30. Now since God has given such a testimony in his Word, we ought seriously to consider the remarkable fact, that the Lord Jesus is to come to this world, when things will be going on as in the days of Noah, and as in the days of Lot. The coming of the Lord Jesus is sufficient to cause fear in every heart that has not yet received forgiveness of sins, and that seriously considers the circumstances and consequences to be such as they are; for though it is very easy now to forget God, and the name of the Lord Jesus, yet in the day when He shall appear, it will be impossible to do so. In that day it will be said by unconverted men, to the rocks and mountains, "Fall on us, and hide us from the face of him that sitteth on the throne, and from the wrath of the Lamb; for the great day of his wrath has come; and who shall be able to stand?" Rev. vi. 16, 17.—Prophetic Times.

Evil Speaking.

This is a vice almost universal, even among those who profess godliness. It meets you everywhere. You cannot be in the company of even those considered good people long, without hearing something to the prejudice of some absent brother or sister. Some report or insinuation, or suspicion is breathed into your ear calculated to shake your confidence in some follower of Jesus. A reform in this matter is loudly demanded. The command is, Speak not evil one of another, brethren. If you have hitherto disregarded this command, ask for pardon and commence a reformation from this hour.

The man who is to enter the kingdom of God is described as he that taketh not up a report against his neighbor. No matter under whose patronage he finds the report going about, he does not take it up, he lets it dip, as all false and slanderous reports will when let alone.

With such a person you feel safe.—He will not betray you. There is no danger that he will, after sharing your hospitalities, and professing for you the strongest friendship, go away and report untrue and unkind things to your injury. "If any man offend not in word, the same is a perfect man and able also to bridle the whole body."

Alarming Military Preparations in Germany.

A new law for organizing the Landsturm has just been prepared in Germany. In other words, the whole able-bodied population, from the youth of seventeen to the man of sixty, are now to be trained to military service. The "Times" says upon this—"When Napoleon III. rashly plunged France into war in 1870, he had an army of three hundred thousand men; but the German forces were three times as numerous. The result was that the French army was driven in and crushed. But the German statesmen perceive that this advantage will not be obtained so easily a second time. One thing is beyond a doubt. The new French army is immensely larger than the old one. In fact, if the plans of the French government be carried out, and the finances of the country will bear the strain, no long time will elapse before France will have a national force equal to that of Germany in 1870. If Germany is to retain its present superiority, this new law may be a necessary measure, but it is an ominous sign that this is the first time in the present century that preparations have been made for organizing the Landsturm in time of peace." The "Daily Telegraph" also regards it as a portentous event.

The organizing of these vast military hosts is in exact accordance with the prediction in Rev. xvi. 12–16, that at the present time "evil spirits should gather the nations to the war of Armageddon." The result will soon be seen in the most tremendous battles, and "the time of trouble such as never was since there was a nation even to that same time," Dan. xii. 1.—Signs of Our Times.

The Art of Not Hearing.

The art of not hearing is fully as important to domestic happiness as a cultivated ear, for which so much time and money is expended. There are so many things which are so painful to hear, many of which, if heard, will disturb the temper and detract from contentment and happiness, that every one should be educated to take in or shut out sounds at will. If a man falls into a violent passion and calls me all manner of names, the first word shuts my ears, and I hear no more. If in my quiet voyage of life I am caught in one of these domestic whirlwinds of scolding I shut up my ears, as a sailor would furl his sail, and making all tight, ride before the gale. If a hot and restless man begins to inflame my feelings, I consider what mischief these sparks might do in the magazine below, where my temper is kept, and instantly close the door. Does a gadding, mischief-making fellow begin to inform me what people are saying about me, down drops the portcullis of my ear, and he cannot get in any farther. Some people feel so very anxious to hear everything that will vex or annoy them, they set about searching and finding it out. If all the petty things said of one, by heedless or ill-natured idlers, were to be brought home to him, he would become a mere walking pin-cushion stuck full of sharp remarks. I should as soon thank a man for emptying on my head a bushel of nettles, or setting loose a swarm of mosquitoes in my chamber, or raising a pungent dust in my house generally, as to bring upon me all the tattle of spiteful people. If you would be happy, when among good people open your ears; when among bad, shut them. It is not worth while to hear what your servants say when they have slammed the door; what a beggar says whose petition you have rejected; what your neighbors say about your children; what your rivals say about your business or dress. I have noticed that a well-bred woman never hears an impertinent remark. A kind of discreet deafness saves one from not a little apparent connivance in dishonorable conversation. It is well for those who seek for present or for future blessing, to shut their eyes from seeing evil, and shut their ears from hearing of blood.—Sel.

☞ It is told of a man poorly dressed, that he went to a church seeking a opportunity to worship. The usher did not notice him, but seated several well-dressed persons who presented themselves, when finally the man addressed the usher, saying: "Can you tell me whose church this is?" "Yes, this is Christ's church." "Is he in?" was the next question, after which a seat was not so hard to find.

☞ When the heart is pure, there is hardly anything which can mislead the understanding in matters of immediate personal concernment.

Report of Meetings.

I left home Nov. 5, went to Kosciusko county, commenced meeting the next evening near Henry Mersimmon's, had a good meeting, met Brother and Sister Wince at that place, remained over two Sundays. The people came out en masse, the truth has got hold of the minds of quite a number in that part of the country, and on that account the ministers of the United Brethren became very uneasy, for quite a number of their folks come out to my meeting. So they sent one of their young ministers to see me and try and get up a debate. I had written out a proposition as follows: Resolved, that we, the Church of God, are the only people that preach the Gospel of Jesus Christ as preached by the Apostles. They at first wanted to debate the immortality of the soul. I told them that would suit me, then one of them asked me if I had not a proposition already out. I told him I had, as above stated. They accepted and we agreed on the time and place, we were to have their meeting house. I met them according to agreement, but they would not debate my proposition, the one we agreed on they would not debate unless I would change my name, and call the church that I belonged to Advent church or Soul-sleeper church. I told him he could call me anything he liked for the sake of a debate, but I would not change my name. I then proposed to affirm anything I preached, but no. I then proposed to him to affirm that they, the United Brethren, preached the Gospel of Jesus Christ as the Apostles preached it, but he would not, but told the people that our church was not named in the history of the different denominations, therefore we were bogus. I then made a short speech to the people, telling them our church was named in the oldest history, and that history was the Bible, and all those named in his history were all of the apostacy, and there was no need of any history till they commenced departing from the faith, then the history commenced, then the sexton arose and told us the house could not be had any longer, and commenced putting out the lights, so the matter came suddenly to an end.

While in that part of the field, I received a letter from Brother Guffin to come over to his part of the country. I went over and held a few meetings, but the weather was bad at the time, but I had a good time with Brother and Sister Guffin in visiting and talking of the things of the kingdom. I also received a letter from Brother James D. Calder, but on account of the proposed debate, I did not go to his part of the country. So I returned home again after being gone twenty-three days. Found all well except my wife, she is afflicted again with rheumatism, which perhaps will keep me at home the most of the winter.

Obituary.

DEAR BRETHREN:—

How oft have you refreshed us and cheered our fainting hearts in days gone by, when there were but the two of us; but now alas, one is no more. Brother Levi Hart fell asleep in Jesus on the morning of Nov. 1, sadly lamented by the church and deeply regretted by all who knew him, leaving in sorrow a young and loving wife, an aged father and mother, an only sister and four brothers, all acknowledging that he was a husband, a son, a brother, without a fault, true, kind, affectionate. Besides these, he has left an only child, a dear little girl of three years, now an orphan, without father or mother, sister or brother—being the only child of Brother Hart's first wife. May the Lord be with her, and may she grow up to know the Lord as did her father, that she may be with him in the kingdom.

Brother Hart first heard the "Gospel of the kingdom" in the winter of 1868, and before the close of the year was rejoicing in the hope of eternal life through Christ Jesus; which hope became his chief delight and conversation all through life, and his comfort and stay in the hour of death. On Sept. 5, 1871, he was baptized into Christ by Brother Jas. R. Lithgow at Halifax. In the summer of 1872, there were added unto us by baptism seven, and we formed a church which continues till this day, although numbering at present but six; yet we are not discouraged feeling satisfied that where two or three are gathered together in the Lord's name, that He will be with them.

THE RESTITUTION

THE FIRST RESURRECTION.

The night is spent—the morning ray
Comes ushering in the glorious day,
The promised time of rest;
Hark! 'tis the trumpet sounding clear,
Its joyful notes burst on the ear
Proclaiming tidings blest.

Ah! see, the graves are op'ning now,
The saints come forth, and every brow
Beams with a radiant joy;
To life immortal they arise,
Inheritors of Paradise,
Where death cannot destroy.

Stupendous scene! these men of old—
Prophets, who bore the story told
Of this transcendent day;
Apostles too,
Who lived and died with it in view,
Collect in bright array.

Now "unlocked"—for like their Lord,
Whose promise shines within the word,
His likeness they should wear;
A glittering host, like stars on high,
In glory and in majesty,
Upon the earth appear!

Value of Prophecy.

The good and gracious ends which God proposes to serve by the revelation of things to come, are twofold, according to the character of those to whom the revelation is given—the world or the church. When the revelation is made to the princes, cities, or nations of the world, as by Balaam to the king of Moab, by Jonah to Nineveah, and by the dreams which Daniel interpreted to Nebuchadnezzar, king of Babylon, the great end in view is to teach their wicked and rebellious hearts "that the Most High ruleth in the kingdom of men, and giveth it to whomsoever he will;" and along with this lesson of God's personality and power, to teach this other lesson of his holy providence, that, unless they humble their pride and repent of their wickedness, they shall feel the rod of his anger, and the fierceness of his fiery indignation.

But when the revelation is brought unto the church, as of the flood to Noah, of the promised seed to Abraham, of the seventy weeks to Daniel in the house of his captivity, of the revelation to John in the place of his exile; the blessed end which God has in view is, to reward the faith of his servants, and to refresh the drooping spirit of his church, and to assure Israel, his inheritance, that however the heathen may rage, and the people imagine a vain thing against the Lord and his anointed, his faithfulness shall never depart, nor his watchfulness fail, from those who have chosen Him for their trust.

The Lord Almighty doth wish to abolish from his church, and, if it were possible, to abolish also from the world, the atheistical notion that men do shape out and body forth the future of their being, by their own sage counsel and prudent ministry, and to establish in its stead, that He ruleth the world in righteousness, and the people in equity, according to the wise and gracious constitution which He has revealed in the Gospel, for the end of everlasting life to all who will be enlightened of his Word, taught of his Spirit, and obedient to his fatherly will. To accomplish which great revolution in the practical faith of men, and link the alienated world once more to the golden chain of being which hangs from his almighty hand, it was necessary to write before the eyes of the fleeting generations of men, as it were upon the hollow vault or firmament through which the stream of time sweepeth them along, such a handwriting concerning the future, as Belshazzar saw written upon the wall when the burden of his kingdom was accomplished; that when each generation looks upon the handwriting of prophecy which is for or against it, and is daily fulfilling in its sight, it might both know and feel that the destinies of men and of kingdoms are in the hand of the Lord; and in their utmost violence are governed and restrained by his will.

Such a canopy is prophecy over the head of the nations and kingdoms of the world, to teach them the personality, and power, and holiness of God, and to give them the privilige of his blessed government; or, if they refuse, to condemn them by the witness of their own obduracy.

With respect to the church, however, there can be no doubt that ever her head the canopy of prophecy has ever been extended, and that prophets of the Lord have been constantly raised up to turn her wandering and unsteady eye to the sure light thereof. For the first revelations all wear the form of prophecy; and when afterwards the law was given, it was supported by prophecy of good and evil as its sanction, and was in truth but the inclosing bud of the Gospel; which, when it came, the prophecy of life and immortality came along with it, to all who should believe. For promise is nothing but prophecy, there being between these two no difference in the ends for which they are given, in the evidence upon which they rest, or in the fruits which the faith of them produces in the soul.

To look forward, therefore, hath been constantly the true attitude of the church of Christ, to expect the fulfillment of the prophetic word, and to desire it. He that runneth, may read this on every page of the history of the church, recorded in the holy Scriptures. Insomuch that Paul and Peter had to guard the churches against over eagerness of expectation, and when they refer to their own teaching, we gather that it was their custom:—as, indeed, we see in all the epistles — to found the primitive churches upon the expectation of things which were to arrive in this present world. And of what main service to the church prophecy was, after the day of Pentecost, Peter's discourses in the Acts do testify, of what, in the days of our Lord's flesh the Gospels testify. And can anything be so strong a proof of the estimation of prophecy, as that the Word of God in the mouth of Zacharias, the father of the Baptist, begins the New Testament in the very language of that prophecy with which the Old Testament concluded in the mouth of Malachi, as if the echo of the harp had not died away during the four hundred years of intervening time; a thousand years being but as a day in the mind of the Lord.

One other instance indeed there is, more striking still, of the valuation and estimation of prophecy to the church, that when the Gospels, concerning the incarnation of Christ, and the Acts of the Apostles concerning the plantation of the church, and the Epistles concerning their doctrine and discipline, and practice, were all completed, and the last of the Apostles remained, the sands of his glass almost run out, and the weary man exiled far away from the habitation of the church, to a lonely island of the sea, the Spirit of the Lord did seize upon his remnant of life, and possessed him with a prophecy concerning the history of the church from that time forward to the consummation of all things; which, being finished, the Spirit, in words of awful and terrible solemnity, closed the canon of revelation, with entreaties that all men would look forward and encourage each other to expect the time of the second coming of the Lord. "I, Jesus, have sent my angel to testify unto you these things in the churches. I am the root and the offspring of David, and the bright and morning star. And the Spirit and the bride say come. And let him that heareth say, come. And let him that is athirst come. And whosoever will, let him take the water of life freely. For I testify unto every man that heareth the words of the prophecy of this book, If any man shall add unto these things, God shall add unto him the plagues that are written in this book. And if any man shall take away from the words of the book of this prophecy, God shall take away his part out of the book of life, and out of the holy city, and from the things which are written in this book. He which testifieth these things saith, Surely I come quickly: Amen. Even so, come, Lord Jesus."—Edward Irving.

Was Man Created Mortal?

"Words are signs of ideas," and whatever means Jehovah may have employed to impart his ideas to man in ancient times, while the canon of Scriptures was being filled up, it is certain that the written word is the only guide for us at this day. Christ said, that the words that He spake, should judge us in the last day, and all who should believe on Him through the word of the Apostles, should be saved. All of our inquiries concerning doctrine, etc., should be, "What saith the Scriptures?" We are shut up to this kind of instruction, and this method of teaching. If the time ever was, when it was necessary for Deity to inspire certain persons to be the mediums of instruction to the people, by the impartation of the Holy Ghost (spirit), or in other words plenary inspiration, that time is past. As for instance the miraculous power with which the Apostles were endowed for certain purposes only, among which, was the confirmation of the word. But to return to the question at the head of this article.

I by no means wish to enter the arena of controversy, for the sake of controversy, or enter a criticism on any essay which some of my good brethern have written who have preceded me on this question. I recognize an honest difference of opinion, and I greatly rejoice in the fact, that our brethren—the writers or correspondents of THE RESTITUTION—seem to possess cool heads and are free from that acrimony, which too much characterizes the professed followers of Christ, where a difference of views exists.

It by no means follows, that the subsequent action of our federal head (Adam) in the least changed the design of the Creator, as He pronounced every thing He had made GOOD, man included. He certainly was invested with the power and susceptibility of becoming immortal, if he had been obedient. Angels were created beings like man, with this difference: they were individually responsible, but they were amenable to law; each one must be tested; some of them must have fallen, while others have developed characters, by which they have attained immortality. Were they then created immortal? Were those who have fallen created mortal? Undoubtedly a negative answer will be the response. Reasoning from the above premises, we must logically come to the conclusion, that man, by virtue of his creation, was neither mortal nor immortal, but was put on trial for immortality.

I am well aware that the phrase "neither mortal nor immortal" grates rather harshly on some sensitive ears, or sounds rather uncouth, but if words are the signs of ideas, we can come to no other conclusion.

Another incident which strengthens the position I have taken, is the fact that after Adam, our federal head, had eaten the interdicted fruit, the Tree of Life was guarded by the Flaming Sword, turning every way to prevent access to it. Adam would even then have attained immortality if he had been permitted access to it; showing conclusively that there was no tendency in his nature towards mortality. Will our friends tell us why this Tree of Life was so strongly guarded, on the principle which they assume, viz., that man was created mortal? To me it speaks volumes that the tendency was in the opposite direction, viz., towards immortality. Another question I wish to ask right here: What force was there in the threatening of Jehovah with death for eating this interdicted fruit, if he (and his posperity included) would have died whether he had partaken of it or not? Let those answer this question who can, for I cannot.

Again, what rules of interpretation can be brought to bear against the ideas evidently intended by Deity in His language to our first parents: "In the day thou eatest thereof thou shalt surely die (or dying thou shalt die, Mar.). Permit me to institute the query, Do the words (which are the signs of ideas) convey the idea to him (Adam) of anything but a test? To say that he would have died at all events, whether obedient or disobedient, looks to me to be stretching things far beyond their utmost tension. A forced construction of the language or words employed. "Sin entered the world, and death by sin," says the Apostle. This ought to settle the question in the mind of every candid and intelligent inquirer after truth, how death or mortality entered the world,—sin (transegression of the law) the cause,—death being the consequence, following legitimately as effect follows cause. I admit that man by his fall became mortal, and this caused a change in his very nature,—in his constitution; hence a necessity of a regeneration and a cocoon or new birth—a resurrection from the dead, in order to inherit the kingdom.

Plain Talk.—No. 1.

"But be ye doers of the word and not hearers only, deceiving your own selves."—James i. 22.

That we as a body of believers are right in theory has; I believe, been clearly demonstrated. We have at least proved it to our own satisfaction and completely foiled our opponents in their attempts to set aside our faith, and as far as we have gone may consider ourselves masters of the field theoretically. But how is it in a practical point? Does the body of believers generally show their faith by their works? Has theory and practice been combined to show that we are indeed and in truth the children of God? The righteous are compared to a city set on a hill, to a light placed in a position to benefit those around it, to salt that purifies and preserves, they are to be living epistles of the truth, they are to so live that the beautiful traits in the religion they profess will be so reflected in the face of the world that it will constrain them to acknowledge such to be the children of God. That a great amount of theoretical teaching was necessary to establish our faith all must concede, the nature of the case demanded it, human tradition must be reasoned away and the truth planted in its stead. This course engendered a spirit of controversy that in some cases assumed finally a disposition to wage offensive war against false systems of all kinds, and in some instances this course has been similar to that of a mighty conqueror who, with his overpowering hosts, has swept through a country, overturning the existing government, but failing to establish order and law in its stead. Now I do not wish to be understood as being opposed to "contending earnestly" for the faith, but I fear there has been a sad neglecting of the practical matters belonging to our system. The importance of the subject will be more apparent when we observe how much of the inspired record has been devoted to precepts for moral training. Comparatively little of the Bible teaches theory, but that little is sufficient. How brief and simple the account of man's origin and nature! how plain the statements of his condition in death! how absolutely necessary that he should have a resurrection to life! and how fitting that he should be rewarded! and how appropriate that the earth should be his place of reward! how easy to believe that God created the earth for a noble purpose! that its existence is to be perpetuated forever! that a kingdom shall be established upon it that shall embody only true and righteous principles of government! that under such circumstances the righteous should have eternal life to enjoy such glory forever; and that wicked characters should not be entitled to such blessings but should perish and cease to exist. All these statements are easy to understand and reasonable to believe. Now how great is the number of moral precepts! how often is godliness urged as being indispensable to Christian character. How many entire letters have been written inculcating purity of life! how many positive sins have been pointed out and denounced, crimes that will shut men and women out of the kingdom of God are fearlessly held up and severely rebuked. Oh for a few bold-hearted Christians in our day with moral courage enough to denounce sin even though fortified by church membership, and will dare to call things by their right names. But alas! who? who in all the broad land to-day dare preach against covetousness in the church, which Paul in his day called idolatry, but in our day is rendered "a prosperous brother in business?" Who is found that will rebuke and properly name the man who before God and man pledges himself to give a certain amount of money to sustain the cause of truth and refuses to give anything? When man with his fellowman does this his status is fixed; among his fellowmen he is called a liar, religiously he is called "a negligent brother."

God commands his people to put away lying and speak the truth, and this applies just as well to a promise to assist the cause of truth with your money, as it does to a promise to do anything else. To-day the cause of truth languishes because of unfulfilled pledges on the part of those who professed to love it. To-day voices are silent that should be heard sounding out the word of life; but the means have been withheld and they are compelled to give their time to earn a sustenance for themselves and families. My brethren, these things ought not to be.

Yours for truth,

J. F. WAGONER.

Kingdom of Heaven.

If the church is the kingdom of heaven, or kingdom of God, what kingdom is that which is to succeed the four universal kingdoms of Dan. ii. which is to be given to the saints of the Most High? and of Dan. vii. 14. "And there was given him (Christ) dominion, and glory, and a kingdom, that all people, nations, and languages should serve him; his dominion is an everlasting dominion, which shall not pass away, and his kingdom that which shall not be destroyed." According to Rev. xi. 15, this kingdom is not yet come, for it is the "kingdoms of this world that are to become the kingdoms of our Lord and of his Christ," and not till the sounding of the seventh trumpet. "Now is come salvation, and strength, and the kingdom of our God, and the power of his Christ; for the accuser of our brethren is cast down."

One of the signs of the approaching kingdom is the sign of the Son of Man, "coming in a cloud with power and great glory." "So likewise when ye see these things come to pass, know that the kingdom of God is nigh." When Christ was crucified, the "kingdom" had not come, for the malefactor asked to be remembered when Christ came into his kingdom. "Thy kingdom come." "And I appoint unto you a kingdom." "That ye may eat and drink at my table, in my kingdom."

Let us substitute the word "church" for kingdom. If the terms "kingdom" and "church" are synonymous, will they not bear to be used interchangeably? "And saviors shall come up on Mount Zion, to judge the mount of Esau, and the church shall be the Lord's."—Obadiah. Read the context—"Thy church come, thy will be done," etc. "Blessed are the meek for theirs is the church of heaven." "Seek ye first the church of heaven and his righteousness." "Many shall come from the east, and west, and shall sit down with Abraham, Isaac and Jacob in the church of heaven." "The church of heaven is like unto a treasure hid in a field, which when a man hath found, he hideth," etc. "Come ye blessed of my Father, inherit the church prepared for you from the foundation of the world." "Whoso readeth let him understand."

Thanks be to God for a "kingdom" which hath foundations, whose maker and builder is God—a kingdom for the church—an "inheritance incorruptible, undefiled and that fadeth not away."—Sel.

☞ The applications for stamps for the prepayment of newspaper postage for the first month of the new year already aggregate $500,000. The Post Office officials, however, consider that this sum exceeds the probable monthly demand. The estimate of the annual revenue from this source is $4,000,000. The Department does not expect that any considerable amount of the newspaper business will go to the express companies.

Mystery of Rev. x. and Rom. xi.

In Rev. x. 7, we find this language: "But in the days of the seventh angel, when he shall begin to sound, the mystery of God shall be finished, as he hath declared to his servants the prophets." The prefix of the article "the" indicates an allusion to a specific "mystery" that is then to be "finished" in the days after the "seventh angel begins to sound." This last expression clearly teaches, that this trumpet will, like the preceding ones, occupy a period of time, which will be filled up with events connected with the judgments of the great or final day. Many assume that this trumpet is identical with "the trump of God" of 1 Cor. xv. 52; 1 Thess. iv. 16, which brings the resurrection of the dead in Christ, but this I think is incorrect, as may be seen by a careful reference to the various places where this trump of God is referred to. It sounded first at Sinai and was a literal voice, which Moses and Israel all heard, and which caused them to quake and to fear, and the mountain to tremble also. This trumpet or voice is to sound again, for it is written: "Yet once more, I shake not the earth only, but also heaven." Heb. xii. 26. These events will of course be in the days of the voice of the seventh angel, and a part of what is then to occur. If this distinction is carefully kept in mind, much confusion will be saved in classifying the events connected with this subject. Before leaving it I will say with the light I now enjoy, am inclined to believe the second woe ended in the events of the French and European revolution, between the years A. D. 1789, and 1815, and that the sixth trumpet ceased in the year 1842 with the events that then occurred between Egypt, Turkey, and the European Allies, when the Sultan's supremacy departed into the hands of those Allies. Hence I infer the wars and other evils that have since occurred, are under the incipient stages of the third woe, and in the days of the voice of the seventh angel, and are parts of God's great and mysterious purpose, that are to usher in the sounding of the resurrection trump, now impending, as declared by his servants the prophets, of both the Old and New Testament Scriptures. Question. If these events are but the beginning of that time of trouble, which is stirring up the angry nations to such a fearful preparation for war, what will be its fruition?

Believing this, I feel an assurance, the time has fully come for the manifestation of the "mystery" of the text. In looking at this subject in the light of the various Scriptures connected with God's great purposes, as revealed by the Spirit, through holy men of old, I am constrained to believe it to be a culmination of his glorious purposes of salvation to the world as declared in Psa. xcvi. and others of like import. This mystery began to be unveiled to the church in the Apostle's day as testified in Eph. iii. 5, 6, as follows: "Which in other ages was not made known unto the sons of men as it is now revealed unto his holy apostles and prophets by the Spirit. That the Gentiles should be fellow heirs, and of the same body, and partakers of his promise in Christ by the Gospel." In our application of this promise and others of like import, we have limited them to the present dispensation, and have made this the fullness of the times of God's saving grace to both the Jewish and Gentile world. In thus doing we certainly have greatly erred; for instead of this being the age of the promised fulness, it is but introductory thereto, as was the law to the Gospel age. The work of this age is the taking out from "the Gentiles a people for his name" (i. e., a bride, the Lamb's wife). After this is accomplished, He "returns and builds again the tabernacle of David that is fallen down—that the residue of men might seek after the Lord, and all the Gentiles upon whom my name is called, saith the Lord who doeth all these things. Known unto God are all his works from the beginning of the world." Acts xv. 14-16. This testimony partially unfolds the mystery of the text, and prepares the way for the examination of Rom. xi. and other portions of direct evidences. In this chapter we have the following statements, with others of like import. "Now if the fall of them be the riches of the world and the diminishing (decay or loss—margin,) of them the riches of the Gentiles; how much more their fullness." "For if the casting away of them be the reconciling of the world, what shall the receiving of them be, but life from the dead." "For if the first fruit be holy, the lump is also holy; and if the root, so are the branches. For I would not brethren, that ye should be ignorant of this mystery, lest ye should be wise in your own conceits, that blindness (or hardness) in part is happened to Israel, until the fullness of the Gentiles be come in. And so all Israel shall be saved, as it is written: There shall come out of Sion the deliverer and shall turn away ungodliness from Jacob. For this is my covenant unto them, when I shall take away their sins." "For the gifts and callings of God are without repentance. For God hath concluded them all in unbelief (margin shut them all up together in unbelief) that he might have mercy upon all." The following points are made and sustained by these extracts, viz: 1. The fall and diminishing of Israel opens to the Gentiles, the rich assurance of the promised "fullness." 2. That this fullness is yet future, and in a resurrected state. 3. The casting away of Israel secures the reconciliation of the world to God when Israel is redeemed from death, as taught also in Ezek. xxxvii. 4. The term "lump" as here used, includes all, both Jew and Gentile, that will then "call upon his name." 5. Up to that time God "hath shut them all up together in unbelief that he might have mercy upon all." 6. This "unbelief" pertains to the mysterious purposes of God "known to him from the beginning of the world," that He would, in the dispensation of the fullness of times, have mercy upon all, as he hath declared by his servants the prophets. 7. The same ignorance and high-mindedness, of the Roman brethren, that blinded their minds, is still upon the church, with an increase of prejudice against even an examination of these glorious things. O how wondrously strange! Truly "darkness covers the earth and gross darkness the people;" therefore, God will speedily "arise and shine," for thy "light is come and the glory of the Lord is risen upon thee." "And the Gentiles shall come to thy light and kings to the brightness of thy rising." In view of all this promised blessedness, who can refrain in exclaiming with the Apostle, "O the depth of the riches, both of the wisdom and knowledge of God! how unsearchable are his judgments and his ways past finding out." Still He has revealed them to us by his spirit." Hence it is becoming in us to believe, and to praise Him for his goodness and his wonderful works to the children of men.

An objection or two answered and I close. It is contended by some, that it was not God's design to save, or even to extend the offer of salvation to the entire family of man, because there are two races, viz: The seed of the woman, and the seed of the serpent, created thus from the beginning, by the same God, who will be glorified in the salvation of the one, and in the eternal destruction of the other. Those who thus assume have forgotten the testimony of the Apostle in Acts xvii. 27, as follows: "Seeing he giveth to all life and breath and all things, and hath made of one blood, all nations of men for to dwell on all the face of the earth, and hath determined the times before appointed, and the bounds of their habitation, that they should seek the Lord, if haply they might feel after him though he be not far from every one of us." Surely, if God hath given life and breath, and made of one blood all nations of men; all must have descended from our common federal head, our first parents, and consequently, the serpent's seed, are made so not by creation, but by unbelief and wicked works like that of Cain and his descendants, the Jews, whom Christ called "a generation of vipers" and all others of like character. I do not claim that the promises above quoted, or others of like import, are to be extended to those individual persons, who after having had a knowledge of God, but did not like to retain that knowledge, and wilfully rejected and purposely forgot Him, will have another probationary opportunity, but do claim that all who never had that knowledge or the opportunity of obtaining it in this or in past dispensations, will have it in the resurrection age, which will be "the times before appointed, that they should seek the Lord," which agrees with the testimony of the same Apostle in 1 Tim. ii. 4-6, as follows: "Who will have all men to be saved and come unto the knowledge of the truth. For there is one God and one Mediator between God and men, the man Christ Jesus who gave himself a ransom for all to be testified in due time." When that "due time" does come, and the testimony goes forth in God's own appointed way, "then the fullness of the times of his promised blessings will be fulfilled to the entire lump of both Jew and Gentile, all of whom have "been shut up together in unbelief."

Signs of the Times.

The signs of the times are thrilling. Judgments, in the form of tremendous fires, floods, hurricanes, earthquakes, eruptions, famines, pestilences, disease, and plagues, are admonishing all to prepare for that day of which it is said, "It shall come as a destruction from the Almighty," that it is "great and very terrible," so great that "none is like it." Who will take warning and get ready? This is a question for each to answer for himself. A little time remains in which to work. Who will improve it? The trial of our faith is at hand; it is even here. Victories must be gained by us who have been dilatory that will cost a severe struggle. Shall we delay the entire consecration which we know we must make, if we ever see the inside of the city of God? God help us all to make it now.—Review and Herald.

"My Father's House."

In comforting his disciples with these words, the Lord speaks to them as intelligent hearers. He does not give a definition of the phrases used. He takes for granted that they knew what God's house was, and that it was a house of many mansions. And moreover, He implies that their ideas and knowledge of that house were true and sound, for He says, "If it were not so, I would have told you." He allows their expectations to continue because they were well-founded; if not, He would have corrected them. Is not this the correct implication to be drawn from our Lord's words? I think it is.

The case is analogous to that in Matt. xiii. 51, where Jesus, after his parables about the kingdom, asks, "Have ye understood all these things?" They say—Yes! which answer the Lord accepts; and we may therefore conclude that the kingdom of heaven is not any state or dispensation, which the disciples did not, at that time, understand. So with the phrase we are now considering. Because there is no explanation given of it, and because the Lord implies that their ideas and knowledge were correct, we may agree that our inquiry is narrowed by this conclusion: "It can mean nothing that the disciples did not at that time know and hope for."

If this be true, it shows the fallacy of what I think is the generally received idea of "My Father's house" here, viz: heaven, or the universe. For there is no doubt that the Apostles understood and believed, firmly, the Lord's promise, that they should judge the twelve tribes of Israel in Messiah's kingdom. These mansions therefore which they hoped to dwell in, had a more pointed locality in their minds than heaven or the universe. They hoped to dwell in the City of the Great King, and inherit the land with Abraham and the fathers, as blessers of all nations, with Messiah. I do not say that the mere holding of an idea by the Apostles, at that time is necessary proof of its correctness; but it is sufficient to make us investigate the subject before condemning them; of the danger of which, we have witness enough in the ready-made accusations of the religious world against the disciples for holding carnal views of Christ's kingdom. Now, the Scriptures show us that their views on this, were not carnal, but true; and I am persuaded that their ideas of what the Lord meant by "my Father's house," will also bear the same test of Scripture examination. In truth, this is the only test by which we can try any religious idea, the first and the last process by which to arrive at truth.

What has gone before, then, has been only preliminary; we put the question in a right shape when we ask,—How do the Scriptures use and apply this phrase—"my Father's house?" This is the way to arrive at the meaning of our Lord's words in John xiv. 2, 3; to ask, How have the Scriptures hitherto used this term? Think of that for a little, to see whether it has been used before, and in what sense or senses.

The only way in which it is used, so far as my knowledge of the Scriptures goes, is as the name which God has given to his temple at Jerusalem. That is the only place, in heaven or in earth, so far as my memory serves, that is ever called, in the Scriptures, "The House of God," "The Lord's House," "My Father's house," etc., as in Psa. xxiii. 6; cxxii; Isa. xxxvii. 14, etc.

Is it in this sense then, that our Lord uses the phrase? If not, why not? Does "God's house" mean one thing all through the Scriptures up to John xiv. and then for the first time, mean something else? If it does, we must have good evidence for the change, and good authority for the new meaning, whatever that may be. An assertion, for instance, would not be enough, nor would a suggestion be sufficient to establish a different meaning. A distinct authority is the more requisite from the fact that the very phrase is used in its scriptural sense in John ii. 16. "Make not my Father's house an house of merchandise." Here, in chapter xiv., the narrator is the same, the speaker is the same, the phrase is the same. Is there any reason then why the meaning should not be the same? I know of none. We are shut up to the conclusion, I think, that the phrase "my Father's house," means what it did twelve chapters before, and in all previous Scriptures, viz: God's temple at Jerusalem.

This may appear a very strange and startling conclusion, and to the popular religious mind a very low idea of the Lord's words; but the question is: Is it according to the Scriptures or not? Is it true? We must suit our tastes to the Scriptures, and not the Scriptures to our tastes. I think it is scriptural, and therefore true, and that it should appear neither startling nor low to the Scripture reader.

It is scriptural, because it agrees perfectly with the development of God's purposes as declared by the Prophets. Notably with the sure mercies of David, covenanted with God's oath, and as unfolded in Isa. lv. and lvi. God promised to David that a son of his, who should be Son of God as well, would build an house for God, and would be settled in God's house forever, as well as in God's kingdom.

Now, when Jesus spoke of "my Father's house," He was speaking of his own, for He is the Son of David who shall be settled therein forever, "a priest upon his throne" as Zechariah expresses it. I presume that the temple which Ezekiel saw and describes in the end of his book, is the house which Messiah shall build for God. This at least is true, that He is the only builder whose work will endure forever. All previous temples have perished and will perish, till his is appraised, for He is the only one fit to build a house for God.

This is what Nathan is sent to tell David, that God had never required any of Israel's judges to build Him an house; nevertheless, David's thought was good and honoring to God, and therefore God covenants to him a weight of blessing; but the best intention and the most costly works of mortal man can never produce anything worthy of being the temple of God; whereof the Holy Spirit is a witness to us, in the appointment of a tabernacle or tent for God to dwell in. See Heb. ix. 11–14. By the ark of God, dwelling within curtains, and by God refraining to command a temple to be built, He was teaching men that his worship was in a temporary and transition state, and that the time had not yet come when the works of men's hands could honor God. True, the temple of Solomon was commanded, but like the deliverance by Moses, it has all to be done over again. There were only "shadows of good things to come, but the body is of Christ." Yet Moses and Solomon were highly honored, thus to be made types of Him who should come after.

This idea of temporariness we should bear ever about with us. He is the most faithful witness for God's truth who does not strive after luxury, nor seek to amass possessions in this life, no, nor yet subscribe to build a gorgeous house to worship God in. A true perception of this world's state, as compared with the world to come, opens the believing eyes to the futility of all such desires. But when Messiah comes, then dreams and shadows flee away. He brings in everlasting righteousness, and that is a foundation for all endurance. Unlike Moses, Joshua, and Solomon, He delivers his people effectually, plants them in the land forever, having an unchangeable priesthood. For He is the one foretold in Psa. xxiii. The outshepherded of God, whose life was restored, for He walked through the valley of the shadow of death, committing his cause to the righteous judge, who shall honor Him before all his enemies, and cause Him to dwell in God's house forever; and where He is, there shall also his people be.

"The Lord of hosts shall reign before his ancients gloriously." "I will that they also whom thou hast given me be with me where I am, that they may behold my glory which thou hast given me."

"I will come again and receive you unto myself, that where I am there ye may be also."

These three extracts belong together, and show that the Lord's brethren shall also dwell in God's house. This is what is promised in Isa. lvi. 4–7.

"To them will I give in mine house . . . . . a name and a place, etc., and make them joyful in my house of prayer; for mine house shall be called an house of prayer for all people."

I suppose that this is the mother-text of the phrase "my Father's house," as used by our Lord, and as apprehended by his disciples. This part of Isaiah's witness to Messiah, is in direct continuation of chapter lv., with its free and universal invitation to every one to incline the ear, come unto God, and hear for eternal life, and share in the everlasting covenant, the sure mercies of David. This promise of a name and a place in God's house, is but the fuller detail of one part of that covenant, the sharing of which is offered to every hungry, thirsty, perishing one. Now, these Apostles to whom our Lord spoke, had inclined their ear and set to their seal that God was true, in their confession that Jesus was the Christ. They therefore looked for God's fulfilling to them his promise of a name and a place in his house; and I suppose that our Lord's words, "Believe also in me," etc., was a certificate that their faith was true, and that there would be room for them all in that house which He would build for God; spacious enough for all nations to come up and worship in, and doubtless with many mansions for its priests and ministers. Moreover, He tells that He would prepare for them that place which God's Prophet had offered to every hearing faithful one; and therefore He says: "Believe also in me." Our faith should be like theirs; in Him and to this end.

This is an exposition of the passage "according to the Scriptures," and so far as my acquaintance with them serves. It is true that the passage will read well, and make good sense when understood as referring to heaven or the New Jerusalem, but that is not a sufficient test. If it had been, then Satan's quotations to our Lord would have been quite sound. The question always comes back to this: What authority have you for supplying it? However ingenious an exposition may be, let us see that it is according to the Scripture.

In considering this passage as before indicated, I have been more established in the truth of two great axioms; first, that the plain and literal meaning of the Scriptures is the true one; and second, that the New Testament must be understood in the light of the Old, as the unfolding and explaining of what God had before spoken, and not as a new revelation. Whatever knowledge of God and of his will we have obtained, has been got in accordance with these principles, and I think they are the teachings of God's Spirit—spiritual truths.

I speak as to wise men; judge what I say.—D. Lindsay, in Rainbow.

The First Advent.

"Will He come?" there are voices asking, as the years go by, and no Deliverer appears among the believing ones of the the house of Israel. Simeon waits in Jerusalem "for the consolation of Israel," and Anna fasts and prays in the temple, until it is given her to look upon his face.

There are watchers sitting among the hills of Judea, watchers among the wise men of the East, watchers among the thoughtful shepherds that are guarding their flocks through the lonely night. They have read of the Messiah. They know He will come. The Word of the Lord cannot fail, and so they wait.

A wonderful star blazes out in the firmament. It becomes a sign to the Magi; they follow and behold and worship the child that is born King of the Jews. Heavenly messengers are sent to the lowly shepherds, and they leave their flocks to go and look upon the babe that is laid in a manger.

And so He comes,—the Prince of Life, the Redeemer of his people; the light of the world, the trust of the Gentiles,—He comes, a helpless babe, in a feed-stall for cattle, but the waiting ones believe and accept Him, because of the signs, and because of the Word. He comes; is clothed in the frail garments of mortality, wears the seamless robes of a carpenter, and lives and walks among the humble. He announces his mission, the glad tidings of the kingdom are heard, and crowds of the common people become his disciples. By beautiful lakes and on mountain sides, in the crowded city and in the desert, in ships on the sea and among multitudes on the land, in Galilee and in Nazareth, in the synagogue and in the house of the publican, in Capernaum and in Jerusalem, in the garden and on the highway, by the well of Samaria and at the table of his friends, to Pharisee and fishermen, to ruler and beggar, to women and to children, he teaches the wonderful Gospel of peace. He opens the gates of life, He shows the way and plan of salvation, He points to the everlasting glory. "Come," He says, "I am the way, the truth, and the life, whosoever believeth in me shall not perish, but have everlasting life, and I will raise him up at the last day."

Disease and death flee from his steps; a word, a look, a touch of his garment, and pale, emaciated and dying forms spring back to health and life. The palsied are brought and go home rejoicing, carrying their beds. He rebukes the raging fever and causes the leper's spots to depart. The healed spread abroad his fame. Eagerly the wild maniac of the tombs tells the story of restored reason. The eyes of blind Bartemius—the seeing—follow fast after Jesus. And how exults the deaf that he may ever more hear, how joys in speech the lips of the life-long dumb! and oh, how deeper still thrill all the chords in the hearts of those who see when the dead are raised. Look upon the daughter of Jairus, the son of the widow of Nain, and the beloved Lazarus, as they lie in the icy embrace of death, and behold the pale lids unclose, the lips open, and warmth and bloom come back to the relaxing features, at a word from Him. What food for wonder is here! What convincing proofs that He is the Messiah!

His disciples are taught to pray; He stills the tempest of winds, walks on the sea, feeds the fasting multitudes on the mountain, lays his hand in blessing on the children, forgives the weeping woman who anoints his feet, heals the withered hand, casts out evil spirit, and puts to silence questioning Pharisee and Sadducean philosopher.

He teaches the grace of humility, the forgiveness of enemies, the returning of good for evil, and the blessedness of giving. The birds of the air, the lily, the grass of the field, the sparrow, the man and his house; these are the easy texts of his sermons. The sower and his seed, the wheat and the tares, the leaven and the meal, the merchant-man and the pearls, the house-holder and the vineyard, the king and the wedding, the virgins and the bridegroom, the mustard plant, the lost money, the straying sheep, the prodigal son; all these and more are the ground-work of his inimitable parables, that speak as never man spoke to the hearts of men.

He calls, and the fisher drops his net, the scribe forsakes his pen, and the tribute-taker "the receipt of custom." Friends and home, and love and fame, are left behind. The followers of the carpenter's son must not expect to reap wealth, or be crowned with glory. Fame and honor are not to be found in the path trodden by the lowly Nazarene. Nakedness and poverty, scoffings and jeers, persecutions and death, are the things promised here, and yet, they follow; for beyond the suffering and the tears, the cruel mockings and shameful deaths, there are crowns and heirships, a kingdom, eternal life, unfading glory.

But his ministry is finished, and He must be offered up. "A world of sinners lost" must be saved by his death. He looks over Jerusalem, the beautiful city of the kings, weeps at the blindness of her children, foretells in prophetic strain the dreadful overthrow that is coming upon her, shows what tribulations the church must endure, before He shall come again, institutes the supper, endures the agony of trial in the garden, is betrayed by one of his own disciples, taken by a mouly crowd to the house of the high priest, tried before Pilate, and condemned to death.

Alone He suffers, bears the cruel jeers and scourgings of his enemies, wears mockery's acanthine wreath and royal robe, and is led out to Golgotha to be derided, and to die upon the cross.

It is done with now, that hateful doctrine of king-ship and a kingdom, think high priest and Scribe and Pharisee. "He, the humble Nazarene, can aspire to David's throne no more." "We have put him to death, we shall hear no more of him." But in three days the stone is rolled away from the tomb, and the Messiah lives to die no more.

A few more lessons are taught to his followers; He goes up from the Mount of Olives to prepare a city, and men in shining raiment stand by and assert that He is coming again,—"COMING BACK TO EARTH ONCE MORE." And as the watchers in the old time waited for his first advent, so we must wait for his second. The time draws near.

"Only a few more shadows
And He will come."

Avoid Extremes on All Questions.

It is a very common occurrence for persons, when they brace themselves hard to avoid extremes on one question or thing, ere they are aware, they run as far to the opposite extreme; like the vibration of a pendulum from a perpendicular line, or veering from one side of a given meridian line to the other. Let these lines represent truth, for that always lies somewhere between the two extremes, but not always equidistant from each other.

Universalism, or unconditional salvation was inaugurated to combat the God dishonoring doctrine of the papal church, and which was handed down to her harlot daughters as an heritage of abomination, viz: eternal torture,—not punishment. Both doctrines are erroneous, but if one error is to be preferred to another, the former of course will take precedence. The covenants of promise to the fathers, which is the embodiment of the Gospel; see Gal. iii. 7–9; Gen. xii. 1–4, 6, 7, 13; xiv. 17; Mark xvi. 15, 16, in all of these texts and indeed in every text where the Gospel is spoken of, it expresses or implies an inheritance in the land, a resurrection from among the dead to immortality. This last is not inherent, as is generally believed, both in heathendom, as well as in the so-called Christendom, but it is to be sought for, by patient continuance in well doing. See Rom. v. 5–12. Query: Will a person seek for that which he already possesses? Echo answers, Will he? Our orthodox friends (self-styled) have found out that the brimstone, in which they formerly dealt so extensively to convert sinners, has now lost its savor, and consequently they have changed their mode of tactics (to use a military figure) and gone to the opposite extreme, viz: to tell the young converts "to get religion" and you will be eternally happy, as every Bible student who is candid, and not too deeply dyed in the stygian waters of bigotry, but will say, that both positions are wide of the mark, both have crossed the meridian line of truth.

The punishments threatened to the unbeliever in the Gospel of the kingdom, or the glad tidings of the same, is condemnation—a non-inheritance in it. Know ye not that the unrighteous shall not inherit the kingdom of God; neither idolaters, nor adulterers, nor effeminate, nor thieves nor drunkards; no revilers nor extortioners shall inherit the kingdom of God. See 1 Cor. vi. 9, 10. A negative—a non-inheritance, is the punishment of the sinner, even of the worst type, this implies a non-resurrection to immortality or eternal life.

To one who can appreciate the glories of the kingdom, and to lose this, by unbelief or disobedience, must be awful indeed to contemplate. Punishment does not always necessarily imply physical suffering, it is more generally applicable to mental suffering. Ecstatic joy is no where held up in the Scriptures as an incentive to a Christian life, but the saint who will attain the kingdom and the consequent glories of it, must do it to by incurring reproach, much tribulation, persecution, self-denial. This is what Christ Himself taught. The servant would be above his master if it were otherwise. For further proof on this point, the reader is cited to Heb. xi. If our modern evangelist's assertions are true, relative to the "getting religion" as the current phrase is, in common parlance; then all the ancient worthies, from righteous Abel down to the apostolic days, must have been the most consummate imbeciles the world has ever known, for the terms on which the kingdom, and the consequent salvation is predicted, have not been changed in the least. "It is through much tribulation that we are to inherit the kingdom.

The question of "public prayer" is one in which many of our own brethren have ran into an extreme, as I think, they have witnessed the pompous, boisterous, wild and incoherent and uncalled for prayers from the different sects and from some wild fanatics, and have veered to the opposite extreme, i. e., not praying in public at all, and to discard it altogether. It is true, or at least I am not aware of any positive command enjoining it, nevertheless the precedent is established, both in the Old and New Testaments, which always has, with the obedient believer, all the force of a command, in the absence of it. Our faith takes cognizance of many things not positively commanded. One in particular now occurs to me, viz: the time of the celebration of the Lord's Supper.

Many questions will arise, the solution of which must depend on some precedent established, or on our judgment in the premises; by comparing Scripture with Scripture and thereby we are enabled to ascertain the concurrent testimony relative to any given question which may arise. The Apostle Paul wrote many things, not by inspiration, but by permission. To be sure we must not contravene any plain, positive command by so doing.

In order to avoid the extreme of ecstatic joy without the propelling of faith, as is often the case; we ought to be well guarded, lest we run to the opposite extreme, and become too stoic and indifferent. Faith built on the Word, and not on the impulse of the moment is the only safe conductor amidst the concussion of the moral element with which we often come in contact.

Time would fail to give even a synopsis of the many questions which arise in our minds, some of which have elicited much heated discussion. But I rejoice in what I believe to be a fact, that within the last two or three years, a marked improvement characterizes the writings of correspondents of the RESTITUTION and other kindred publications, and from what I can learn relative to our Conferences, but I regret that I have been unable to attend on account of the want of pecuniary means. As the Psalmist says, "Behold how good and how pleasant it is for brethren to dwell together in unity." Our brethren in their correspondence, and in their meetings view many things different even from the same standpoint, but I believe there is not that sensitiveness with us as formerly. But I greatly fear that most or all of us lack that spirituality which should characterize the followers of Christ, as Brother Wilson said in substance in his valedictory address.

Yours in hope of eternal life, when Jesus shall come the second time.

Brother [illegible] and many others, not more than [illegible] miles from an organized body of the one precious faith. There are a few here and there in this section of country, widely scattered, as sheep without a shepherd. We can not often heed the injunction, Forsake not the assembling of yourselves together, but I trust we all are looking for the speedy appearing of the Chief Shepherd, who shall crown all his with immortality; therefore let us take heed to our ways, lest thinking we stand we fall. Our trials are many, no doubt, we are beset on every side by those who hate the truth. The fact is their immortal soul theory is a blind, through which they cannot see nor understand the Scriptures. I cannot believe that I have an immortal soul, because inspiration says it is to be sought for. Rom. ii. 7. To them who by patient continuance in well doing seek for glory and honor and immortality, eternal life. Would mortal man, sane in mind tell a brother or son to seek for something already in his possession? I think not. See what the Master says: John vi. 40. "And this is the will of him that sent me, that every one which seeth the son, and believeth on him, may have everlasting life; and I will raise him up at the last day." And again. John x. 27, 28. "My sheep hear my voice and I know them and they follow me. And I give unto them eternal life, and they shall never perish, neither shall any man pluck them out of my hand."

"Behold," says the Apostle Paul in 1 Cor. xv. 51–56, "I show you a mystery; we shall not all sleep, but we shall all be changed, in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye, at the last trump; for the trumpet shall sound, and the dead shall be raised incorruptible, and we shall be changed. For this corruptible must put on incorruption, and this mortal must put on immortality. So when this corruptible shall have put on incorruption, and this mortal shall have put on immortality, then shall be brought to pass the saying that is written, Death is swallowed up in victory." Many more passages might be quoted, but this is sufficient to warrant me in standing out boldly and denying that I received from Adam an eternal life principle as a son inherits name and property from his parent. To claim such, to my mind, would be to deny the office of Christ, and disbelieve his own (Christ's) statement, "I give unto them eternal life."

Coming Realities.

The Bible deals with facts and realities. Even faith is declared to be "the substance of things hoped for." The Bible hope is real and tangible; it rests on promises which cannot be broken. The Scriptures speak of God as a self-existent, all-wise Being. Christ was not a myth. The creation of man is a fact. Paradise, with the tree of life and its rivers, was a reality. The earth and sky really exist. Life and death are realities. Indeed, the whole creation is literal. The world of the future will be as real. Christ on his throne will be as real as Christ on the cross. His glory will be as literal as his suffering. His kingdom will be tangible Abraham looked for a city which hath foundations, whose builder and maker is God. He was called to "go out into a place which he should after receive for an inheritance." Job declared that in his flesh he should "see God." David's flesh is resting in hope, and he is to be satisfied when he awakes in the likeness of Christ. Isaiah sings: "Thy dead men shall live, together with my dead body shall they arise," and that "the earth shall cast out the dead." Hosea prophecies that God will "swallow up death in victory." Daniel says those that "sleep in the dust shall awake." Our Lord promises twelve thrones to his twelve apostles, and declares that the "meek shall inherit the earth." Paul looked for a crown. John's hope was to see Christ and "be like him." Peter was waiting for his crown "when the Chief Shepherd should appear." The broken hearted and weeping church at Thessalonica, were assured that the Lord himself should descend from heaven, and those who sleep in Christ should then wake.

There are no myths about the coming life. To be like Christ, equal unto the angels, to die no more, to inherit the kingdom, to live in God's city, to behold life's river, to see Abraham [illegible] prophets, to know each [illegible] s of speech [illegible] alities.

[illegible] th [illegible] as real as the old [illegible] mar it, death shall be unknown, sorrow and weeping come not there. Names that have become dear in life's pilgrimage, shall shine in brightness on the gates of the city, and be written on the foundation stones of topaz and emerald. Paradise, the tree of life, the river and the throne, are among the realities of God's Word.

Our hope deals not in mere fancies of the imagination. It embraces the glories of a world made new, will cheer us during life's toils, and be our stay when the cold shadows of death stretch across our path. Having, then, a hope based upon such promises, and reaching forward over the valley of death to that world of life and immortality, let us be diligent that we may be placed at the right hand of the King, where there are joys and pleasures forevermore.

All For Christ.

Do we realize as we should what is implied in giving up all for Christ? It cannot mean less than an entire surrender of self, and a complete dedication of the whole heart to the work of his love. There can be no half way work in his service. Christ must be all to us. His victory must be complete. He rules as king or not at all. Men converted to his standard must do more than merely believe. Faith is essential, but it should be an ever-living, active, working faith. It calls for sacrifices, both of time and means. It calls upon us to bear the burdens incident to the new life begun in us, and which we are bound to reveal to others. There are crosses to be borne, sacrifices to be made, and burdens to be shared in working out the great problems of the Gospel of Christ. The demands are not only on our moral nature but upon our energy. We must make the work our business, as well as our profession. Religion is not a mere garment, to be put on and off; it becomes a part of us. Christ must dwell in us richly. We are not to lose our identity or individuality, but the new manhood is to be stamped with his likeness. The ownership becomes mutual; Christ is ours, we are Christ's; and the labor, the suffering, and the glory become mutual also. Did He become subject to the Father, and make a full surrender of his will to that of the Father? Then we also must reach that point in the new life, where we can say: "Nevertheless thy will and not mine be done." "He that taketh hold of the plow and looketh back is not fit for the kingdom of God." We cannot retreat. The motto is: "Push on to victory." We give all to Christ!

☞ "The Christian Ensign" is the name of a new monthly periodical just started in Detroit, Mich., by J. Cockroft, and edited by W. L. Strand, of Oshkosh, Wis. Its motto is: "Devoted to the exposition and defence of the Christian faith, against all counterfeits, of whatever name or nature." Sixteen pages. Terms one dollar per year.

The "Ensign" is the organ of one of the numerous factions of John Thomas. The Editor claims that he has been abused by his former brethren, the Christadelphians, which is probably true. We charitably hope that, as he has seen and tasted the bitter spirit, he may exercise that charity toward others which he has a right to claim toward himself.

☞ We would call the attention of our readers to the prospectus of the "Millenarian," published in another column. Brother Wilson aims to make it an exponent of Bible truth, and to present such subjects as will be of general interest. Those wishing a first class periodical, devoted to the exposition of prophecy and kindred questions, will find the "Millenarian" just the thing. The prospectus, however, will fully explain its objects, which the reader will please examine. Let there be a generous response in the way of subscriptions.

☞ Our meeting in Plymouth on Sunday, was one of interest. We came together as a Society of believers in the Gospel of Christ. Between twenty and thirty united together for the worship of the Divine Father, and to build each other up in the faith of Christ. We gave two discourses to attentive audiences. In the evening one came forward for baptism. We hope to see a goodly number become obedient to the Word of Life, and thereby secure a crown of glory in the coming kingdom of our Lord.

We Shall all be Changed.

If many who are sceptical concerning the teachings of revealed truth, would more closely scrutinize the mysteries of nature, it would perhaps be found that as many difficulties are to be encountered in the satisfactory explanation of all the lessons of the great volume spread out before our eyes, as in the complete explication of every doctrine of that sublime book that treats of the "unseen and eternal things." Chemistry has established the fact that the vast multiplicity of substances that compose the material universe, are reducible to a comparatively few simple elements; and that it is by a different combination of these ultimate elements that the countless varieties of all created objects are composed. The atmosphere that envelopes the earth, the waters of the ocean, the earth itself in its soils, rocks and minerals, the whole vegetable creation, from the monster Baobab of Africa, or the towering pine of California, to the tiniest plant that decks the waste, the trees of the forest, the grass that carpets the earth, the fragrant flower, the animal world in all its varieties, from the leviathan of the deep or the huge elephant, from the extinct mastodon or megatherium to the microscopic animalcula; from the condor to the smallest insect that floats upon the breeze—indeed, from man himself down through every order of being—with all that constitutes each and every individual of beast, bird, fish, insect, or blood, bone, nerve, muscle, hair, feathers, scales, and whatever else may pertain to the organization of the countless numbers that "live, and move, and have a being," are but results of combining a few simple elements in different proportions. A combination of simple elements in one proportion, gives an elixir of life—in another a most deadly poison. It is indeed impossible to conceive what infinite wisdom and power could produce from all possible combinations of elementary substances; nor can we tell how much the curse has marred the original objects that composed a creation when all was very good. The fruit of the tree of life may have been a combination of the same elements that form the substratum of all nature; while the fruit of that forbidden tree, "whose mortal taste brought death into the world," may have been another combination of elementary matter. We, in order to illustrate the change from the unglorified state to the glorified, as the result of the resurrection, call attention to the following from Dr. Nelson:

"God can make very durable and very glorious things, out of materials the very opposite of firmness or of brilliancy. He has done this. Of all the substances with which we are acquainted, we esteem the diamond the hardest and the most glittering. Charcoal is as black and as crumbling as any other body known to us; yet these two bodies are the same! The learned know—the plough-boy does not—that the difference between charcoal and diamond is, that the Creator has ordered a different arrangement of particles! The same materials are differently placed, that is all. If we are wishing for a body more beautiful than they now have, they may be assured that God can, if he chooses, take a part of our present fragile, corruptible form of clay, and make of it something exceedingly glorious. 'It is sown in dishonor, it is raised in glory.'" That most beautiful and enduring of all gems, that seems crystalized light, is only crystalized charcoal—so that charcoal changed, or glorified, is the diamond.

A change, then, effected by the Almighty, energizing operations of the infinite spirit, will glorify these fragile forms that go to the "dust and decay" of the grave. That beauty that the "effacing fingers" of disease removes from the "warm cheek of youth on which smiles and roses are blending," and changes into the livid pallor of the corpse, shall reappear on the love-lit countenance that glows with the radiancy of divine light and life. When the resurrection change takes place, the deformed becomes glorified, the mortal immortalized, the weak becomes powerful, and the corruptible is changed into the incorruptible and changeless. Our Lord teaches that the "children of God," who are "the children of the resurrection," become "angel-equals"—so that all the loveliness of form and feature, all the seraphic sweetness, all the cherubim beauty and perfection of the first-born sons of light and morning stars of creation, shall be the perfections of the frail children of disease and death when "we shall all be changed." "Behold, I show you a mystery; we shall not all sleep, but we shall all be changed." The living part of the church who are "left over" to the coming of the Lord, although they do not pass through death, will be changed "in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye." At some point the comparatively near future, or far than time's most infinitesimal point of duration, and the child of God, whether in the field or lulled in sleep, whether in the robustness of health or just sinking under the power of disease into the death-slumber, shall be quickened into the vigor of life everlasting. The dead, too, will undergo the same mysterious and surprising change. "So when this corruptible shall have put on incorruption, and this mortal shall have put on immortality, then shall be brought to pass the saying that is written, Death is swallowed up in victory." "Therefore, my beloved brethren, be ye stedfast, immovable, always abounding in the work of the Lord, forasmuch as ye know that your labor is not in vain in the Lord."

Isa. xxxv.—angel-equals literally.

The Night and the Morning.

"Weeping may endure for a night, but joy cometh in the morning."—Psa. xxx. 5.

Our text presents strong contrasts—weeping and joy; night and morning. This is the night time of life, when our pillows are moistened with tears, but soon the morning light will dawn, and with it will come joy eternal.

And what a night this has been! How it's dreary hours have dragged their weary length along, loaded with sorrow, pain and death. Scarce had creation's light dawned, ere the cloud of sin appeared and settled down upon the world, like a dark pall. Weeping then began, and it has continued ever since. Scarce had our first parents begun their life of innocence and happiness, ere they fell, and the just God said to the woman, "I will greatly multiply thy sorrow;" and to the man He said, "Cursed is the ground for thy sake. In sorrow shalt thou eat of it all the days of thy life." Sorrow was to be their lot forevermore. And so it proved. Their first born son, on whom their hopes no doubt rested, brought a flood of sorrow to their hearts when he reddened his hands in his brother's blood. The night of weeping had commenced, and all creation shared in it. The children of Adam have all inherited his sorrow. This is true individually, socially and nationally. The earth itself, yea "the whole creation groaneth and travaileth in pain together until now."

This is the night, too, of Gentile darkness and superstition. "Darkness covers the earth and gross darkness the people." Sorrow and weeping everywhere prevail. The evil passions of men are still gratified, and deeds of darkness are plentiful. The great heart of the world is sorely burdened and oppressed, and longs for the dawn of that glorious morning when joy shall come.

This is the night, also, of Zion's sorrow, and the time of Jacob's trouble. "How doth the city sit solitary that was full of people; how is she become as a widow! she that was great among the nations, and princess among the provinces, how is she become tributary! She weepeth sore in the night, and her tears are on her cheeks." Sam. i. 1-2. She, too, is looking and longing for the dawn of the morning of joy. "For weeping may endure for a night, but joy cometh in the morning." As Jeremiah truly says, "They shall come and sing in the height of Zion * * and their soul shall be as a watered garden, and they shall not sorrow any more at all." Jer. xxxi. 12.

And what shall we say of the people of God—the faithful in Christ Jesus? What a history their's has been! How many tears have been shed, how many hearts burdened, how many crosses borne, but all in patient hope, looking towards the light of that coming day when their crosses should be laid down and their crowns taken up; when their burdened hearts should swell with joy. The dark night has often been lit up with the glare of cruel fires consuming the children of God. It has witnessed the onward flow of their precious blood, which has ever since been crying out to God, "How long, O Lord, holy and true dost thou not judge and avenge our blood on them that dwell on the earth."

Even our blessed Savior himself was not exempt from the sorrows of this dark night, but is said to have been "a man of sorrows and acquainted with grief." Witness his burdened heart and flowing tears on learning of the death of his much-loved friend, Lazarus. See him again, when he approached Jerusalem for the last time, weeping bitter tears over its sad doom. And again, in the garden of Gethsemene, when in agony he cried out to his Father, "if thou be willing, let this cup pass from me; nevertheless, not my will but thine be done."

And brethren, what shall we each say of our own personal experiences? Are not our lives burdened at times with the inevitable sorrows of this long night of weeping? Is there a pleasure that is not curtailed by pain? No, the dark clouds are ever present, and will be, till the morning shall dawn.

Then "they that sow in tears shall reap in joy." The morning will surely come, though long it delays. The Sun of Righteousness will certainly arise, with healing in his beams. The night will certainly end, with its weeping, and the morning of joy will be ushered in.

Then all these sorrowing ones will be gathered—their faces beaming with joy, as they behold "the King in his beauty, and the land that is far off." "God shall wipe away all tears from their eyes, and there shall be no more death, neither sorrow, nor crying, neither shall there be any more pain, for the former things" will be "passed away." Let us toil on, brethren, and keep up courage a little longer. We may now almost see the morning light creeping over the hill tops. A few more moments of weeping time, and then, oh, then our joy will come. Soon may it be.

Our Refuge.

"The eternal God is thy refuge and underneath are the everlasting arms."

Trial and suffering are man's surest heritage. They meet him everywhere and stand beside him in all the walks of life. No rank is too high for them to reach—no station so obscure that they will not search it out. Life is a troubled sea and its waves are lashed to madness by the winds of passion and strife. There is only one refuge from the fury of the tempest—only one haven where we may find rest and be sheltered with peace. "God is our refuge and strength, a very present help in trouble. Therefore will we not fear, though the earth be removed, and though the mountains be carried into the midst of the sea. Though the waters thereof roar and be troubled, though the mountains shake with the swelling thereof." The pitiless storms beat alike upon the children of men, and the troubled waves toss our little barks without distinction of faith or character. But the humblest Christian hath an anchor which cannot fail. The Christian hope reaches to the rock of our salvation. The peace of God which passeth understanding gleams with unfailing light amid the darkness. The golden promise that cannot be broken flashes the rainbow of hope across the cloud, for the foundation of God standeth sure, and He knoweth them that are his. The corsair Death sails over the angry billows and his black flag waves in triumph on every breeze, he spares not the babe in a mother's arms nor the silvered head of age falls before his breath. The criminal is cut off in the midst of sin, and the good man is smitten down at his post. Neither faithfulness nor truth can ward off his blows or bid defiance to his power. But "as the mountains are round about Jerusalem, so the Lord is round about his people from henceforth even forever." And across the very banner of death is written the words, "I am the resurrection and the life." Even death hath no power to hold those who have made a covenant with God, for He is our rock and our salvation. Persecution may assail us in the wilderness, but glory awaits us in the city. Thorns may pierce our brows during the pilgrimage, but we shall find a crown at our journey's end. Temptation haunts our footsteps now, but victory shall crown us on the other side. The crimson waves of sin and suffering beat around our weary feet but they shall yet rest on the banks of life's river. Death may claim our loved ones now but his royal seal shall be broken by one who is greater than he, for they shall be mine saith the Lord of hosts, in the day when I make up my jewels.

The tempest of life shall be stilled upon the green shores of peace, and the waves of affliction shall be lost in the bright depths of eternity's ocean, for "behold I will lay thy stones with fair colors, and lay thy foundations with sapphires, and I will make thy windows of agates and thy gates of carbuncles, and all thy borders of pleasant stones."

SHERIDAN TO SECRETARY BELKNAP.

Headquarters Military Division of the Missouri, New Orleans, La., Jan. 4.—To the Hon. W. W. Belknap, Secretary of war, Washington, D. C.:

It is with the deepest regret that I have to announce to you the existence in this State of a spirit of defiance to all lawful authority, and an uncertainty of life which is hardly realized by the general government or the country at large. The lives of citizens have become so jeopardized that, unless something is done to give protection to the people all security usually afforded by law will be overridden. Defiance to the laws and the murder of individuals seems to be looked upon by the community here from a standpoint which gives impunity to all who choose to indulge in either, and the civil government appears powerless to punish or even arrest. I have to-night assumed control over the Department of the Gulf.

The Shakers.

A writer in the Hudson (N. Y.) Register gives an inside view into the life of the Shakers at their Mt. Lebanon community. The picture he draws of existence there, and the manner of cramping and flattening out of the individual intellect, is not by any means an inviting one. Their creed is not a positive one in any form, but what they principally believe in is Spiritualism, though of this little account appears to be taken. Members joining the community are required to renounce anything like freedom of thought, and are enjoined to absorb and digest as rapidly as convenient the dogmatic instructions of the elders, all of whom appear to possess a sanctity not unlike that of the medicine man of an Indian tribe. The confessional, too, is encouraged, the men confessing to elders and the women to elderesses. Books are not allowed in the community unless approved by the elders, and their owners are forbidden to lend them to friends without first obtaining the sanction of the godly medicine man. It can readily be imagined that by this means the leaders of the community rapidly gain control of the members, body and soul, and are thoroughly cognizant of even the minutest details of their everyday life. It is not singular that men and women alike lose all appearance of vigorous life very rapidly, and degenerate into haggard, pallid automatons. The serious sketch given from personal experience by David Brown does not give a very different impression from that made by the humorous one of Artemus Ward.

How Warren, the "Medium," Made a Fortune.

A sharp fellow, with a queer history, is the Spiritualist medium who has lately been edifying believers at Tammany hall. Years ago he found out the modus operandi of some of the more startling kinds of spiritual manifestations, and thereupon took up the business of public lecturing, with a view of displaying and exposing them. He went from place to place, but could not get audiences, could not make the thing pay, finally gave it up as a failure, and afterwards, in course of time, found himself trying to get a living by keeping a fish-stand. By and by one day there came to his fish-stand the well-known editor of a spiritualist paper, who was surprised to find the unbeliever in that business, and at last said to him: "Now, as you know all about these manifestations, and can give them to such advantage, why don't you go around giving them before Spiritual meetings, instead of running them down?" The unprincipled fishman "saw" the notion, took to it, went about as a medium in the way that had been suggested to him, and has met with such success that he is able to show $70,000 to his credit in the bank. He now laughs in his sleeve as he tells of the failure he suffered while showing up the "manifestations" which have since brought him a fortune, and holds that mankind prefer his present career to his previous one.—Cincinnati Commercial.

The City of Gems.

The British Museum recently became possessed of a jacinth, a precious stone of exceeding rarity. The specimen is no larger than a pea, and, says the London "Times," "dashes and glows with a luster which seems to denote the presence of fire and flame." It cost three thousand five hundred dollars.

The eleventh foundation of the wall of the New Jerusalem is of jacinth (Rev. xxi. 19, 20,) and if a "specimen no larger than a pea," is in the estimation of men worth thousands of dollars, what must be the glory of a city whose foundations are "garnished with all manner of precious stones," its gates of pearls, and its streets of gold! This city is said to have "the glory of God," and, as Dr. Cumming remarks, "When that living glory shall be reflected from the blue sapphire, from the green emerald, from the dark-red sardonyx, from the deep-red jacinth, from the violet amethyst, from the pale topaz, and from the flashing diamond,—no longer in fragments, but in quarried rocks high as cathedrals, massive as the Pyramids,—what a flood of splendor will pour from that bright city whose foundations are these precious stones! how justly may we expect it has no need of the sun, nor of the moon, nor of the stars! because all the light that they yield will be paled beside the intensity of that brighter light that never shall be extinguished, that glory that shall never die. Are we citizens of that city? If we are, let us rejoice that our heritage is sure, that our destiny is certain.—Messiah's Herald.

The Use of These Earnests.

"Now for a swifter race!" was the resolve of one over whose path sorrow was beginning to darken heavily. "Now for a busier and more useful life!" was the utterance of another, as he rose from his knees, after pouring out the bitterness of his grief into the ear of God.

In these cases tribulation was taking its true course and working its right end. It had gone down to the most sacred depths of the renewed heart, and was calling up buried feelings of devotedness that had remained dormant, but not extinct, under a mass of worldliness. It smote our selfishness, our narrow-mindedness, our sloth, our flesh-pleasing, and reminded us that we had no time to loiter or to sleep. Tearing off the veil which prosperous days had flung over our eyes, it pointed to the vanity of things "seen and temporal," till the vastness of the unseen and the eternal so grew upon us, that we rose up and went forth, resolving on a swifter race and a busier life on earth.

Still there was a hindrance. The very trial that stirred us up also weighed us down, unknitting our strength, and causing us well nigh to faint. The pressure stayed our swiftness, and the deep wound, still bleeding, enfeebled us. We sought to run, but were often held back; and when we would have gone forth to do the work of God, we were constrained to turn aside and go alone, that, in weeping and pleading, we might relieve our heavy hearts. We may at times seem to escape from the sorrow, and, in the fire of zeal, almost forget its bitterness; yet it returns to us in full strength, and we feel as if a chain were on our limbs. There is not indeed the bondage arising from any uncertainty as to the relationship in which we stand towards God. These fetters fell from us when we received God's record of forgiving love, and knew what it is to be freely pardoned. These fetters no amount of trial can re-impose on us, if "we hold the beginning of our confidence stedfast unto the end." Nay, it is often in a day of grief that we realize most blessedly how completely grace has set us free. But though there is no re-placement of our chains, and no bitterness of bondage again tested, still chastisement is "not joyous but grievous;" and "being grievous" it sometimes disheartens and disables us, so that we cannot do the same amount of service, or undergo the same degree of toil for God, as otherwise we might have done. At the first lighting down of the stroke this is always felt, for we are identified in the flesh, and the flesh gives way. "The spirit is willing, but the flesh is weak." And for a considerable time this continues to be experienced; shorter or longer, according to our natural characters, or according to the specialties of the trial.

Hence it is that affliction is oftenmore a season of preparation for service than a time of actual service, save only as patience is service, for "they also serve who only stand and wait." Let us not fret, then, or be cast down, because we feel disabled for zealous service for a time. Let it suffice us to know that we are preparing for this. And when the load is lifted off or becomes lighter, then we run with speedier foot, then we labor with fuller strength and freer heart. We cannot expect to be wholly free from sorrow here, for some amount of trial is always needful to keep us from forgetting that this is not our rest—that this is the night and not the day; but still these intervals of calm and sunshine are precious times—times of blessing; times of service? times for the swift race and the busy life.

These mornings here, coming after the nights that thicken over us, are most profitable. They not only relieve the 'o'er-fraugh heart," but are seasons in which we find leisure to learn lessons of wisdom and holiness, which in the time of the sorrow we had overlooked or put from us. The returning elasticity of spirit enables us to rise from our depression, now that the weight has in some measure been lifted off. Too continuous a pressure of grief is apt to make us moody, selfish, despanding, slothful. It narrows the circle alike of vision and of sympathy, and dries up the springs of our nature. But when peace returns after a season of trouble, we seem doubly fitted as well as nerved for duty. The trial, has sobered and mellowed us. It has taught us to endure hardness as good soldiers of Jesus Christ. It has rubbed off excrescences. It has made us less selfish, less contracted in soul. It has taught us to look round with sympathy upon a suffering world and a weeping church. It was as if we had been taken aside for a season into some quiet nook or dark cave, from which, while alone and undisturbed, we could look out unobserved upon the multitudes that passed and repassed. And having been thus brought to form truer, riper judgments, we are led forth again to act—to act more unselfishly, more zealously, yet more stedfastly and soberly.

Our life, after a night of trial has passed over us, should be a life of truer aims, of steadier walk, of higher level, of keener, purer vision. It not, we have suffered in vain.

During the night, much was of necessity hidden from us. But the morning discloses what the night had hidden. It shows us how desperate the struggle was between us and our God, and of which at the time we were hardly aware. It shows the amount of patience, love, and faithfulness, that have been expended on us by God. It shows the extent of the evil in us which had drawn down the chastening. It puts us in a position for bringing into practice the knowledge of the world's vanity and wretchedness which sorrow had taught us. Thus the morning carries out the lessons of the night, and gives us opportunity for exemplifying them. And thus the alternation of trial and rest which makes up our lot on earth, is in truth but a succession of lessons, and of opportunities for practicing them. "Day unto day uttereth speech, and night unto night showeth knowledge." (Psa. xix. 2.)

Thus trial prepares for service. It nerves us, it braces us for toil. It shows us what alone is worth living for, so that when the force of it is in some measure abated, we find ourselves ready to start anew for the race, ready to wield the weapons of our warfare with a firmer and more skilful hand.

These intervals of brightness, then, are the true seasons for labor. These earnests of the morning should be prized as opportunities specially afforded us by God for strenuous labor. If thus laid out, how blessed will they be found! They are brief, for tribulation is our lot on earth, not ease; but this should only arouse to new vigor; for if they be thus brief, we have no moments to idle away.

But it is here that so many stumble. In trial they call upon the Lord and vow their life to him. Through evil report and good they will follow him; on the rough way or the smooth, they will walk with him; by labor, by sacrifice, by watchfulness, by costly gifts, they will prove their love, and zeal, and constancy! Good words and sincerely spoken! Out no were the words of the disciple, "If I should die with thee, I will not deny thee in any wise." He spoke what he truly felt, but when the hour came, the resolution was not to be found. So with us. Trial calls forth many a high thought and prompts to noble purposes. Yet how seldom do these thoughts ripen; how often do these purposes die! Peace returns, sunshine brightens over us, our broken strength knits again, and we sink back into sloth! The calm hour for which we longed, that we might do something for God, has come, but it finds us nearly as heedless and selfish as before we entered into the storm.

This must not be. Why were we smitten, but just that we might be stirred up? And why were we delivered, but just that we might work more strenuously, more efficaciously? How sad, then, that both the trial and the enlargement should fail of their purpose!

These times of enlargement are times of light and gladness. In these mornings joy has come to us. It is not the mere reaction from sorrow; it is not mere familiarity with suffering; it is not oblivion of the past; it is not the calm of over-spent feeling. It is joy from the Lord. And "the joy of the Lord is our strength." He who gave us the night has given us also the morning. He who called up the storm has brought back the calm. So that it is his joy in which we rejoice; and this joy is our strength. Let not this strength lie idle. The calm will not last: the clouds will soon return, and it concerns us to lay out well the brief hour of light. "I must work the works of him that sent me while it is day; the night cometh when no man can work." —Horatius Bonar.

Conference Report.

The annual conference of the Church of God, in Iowa, convened at West Irving pursuant to notice, at seven o'clock p. m. on the 25th of December, 1874.

Bro. J. M. Stevenson preached the introductory sermon, after which the conference adjourned until nine o'clock a. m., the 26th. Convened per adjournment. Bro. Hipsher being absent, Bro. R. J. Hill was chosen president pro tem., and John Fitz secretary pro tem. Bro. L. Marsh was then chosen as a committee of arrangement. Bro. Marsh then moved that a collection be taken up to pay the balance claimed by Bro. M. Wing, as due him for evangelist labor. On considering the subject, the motion was amended, and a committee of two, Bro. White and Bro. Fish, were chosen to settle with Bro. Wing, and report at the next quarterly conference.

The election of officers for the ensuing year was then held, which resulted in the choice of Bro. A. Hipsher; of Ames, Story county, as president; John Fitz, of West Irving, Tama county, as secretary; Doctor White, of Nevada, Story county, treasurer. Bro. R. J. Hill preached from Philippians iii. 4-11, upon the necessity of christian labor and effort, after which conference adjourned until three o'clock p. m.

Convened as per adjournment, and voted that we select an Evangelist for the ensuing year, to labor in this State; also, that Bro. J. T. Prine be our Evangelist.

Resolved, That Bro. Hill appoint solicitors in each organization, and wherever there are brethren, to take subscriptions for the support of Bro. Prine, which are to be paid quarterly in advance to the treasurer. Also, that the secretary take subscriptions from the brethren now present, which resulted in raising $101.60.

At seven o'clock p. m., Bro. J. M. Stevenson preached on the design of the gospel in this and the ages to come, to a large and attentive audience. On first day morning, the brethren met at half-past nine for prayer and social exercises. A happy season was enjoyed in talking of the coming kingdom, and the glory to be brought unto us at the revelation of Jesus Christ our Lord. At eleven o'clock Bro. Prine preached on the hope of the gospel. After a recess of ten minutes, Bro. Brayton spoke on the enlargement of the Christian view of God's love, after which we adjourned until six o'clock p. m.

Convened as per adjournment, and—

Resolved, That this conference give a recommendation of standing to all its preaching brethren who are traveling; also, that a recommendation of standing be required of all preaching brethren from other States, either from their respective churches or conferences, to entitle them to our fellowship.

Resolved, That this conference request, through these minutes, all organizations of brethren in this State, to represent themselves, either by delegates or letter, to this conference at its next meeting.

Resolved, That Bro. Hipshar appoint time and place of holding the next quarterly conference; also, that the secretary be requested to send a copy of the minutes for publication in THE RESTITUTION.

Bro. J. M. Stevenson then preached a masterly discourse to a large audience, on the blessing of the nations through Abraham's seed, after which the conference adjourned, all seeming to be well paid for coming together.

JOHN FITZ, Secretary.

"Death, a Ferry-Boat."

"Death to God's people is but a ferry-boat. Every day, and every hour, the boat pushes off with some of the saints, and returns for more." —Exchange Paper.

Now, is no. that nice? The "boat" does not go without a ferryman. If so, "the devil" has succeeded to obtain "worship" from Jesus; and by persevering temptation has brought the Son of God to act servilely for his Satanic Majesty! How so? Because, he "who had the power of death"—the "ferry-boat"—" is the devil." Heb. ii. 14. But if Jesus has not consented to serve Diabolos, then his Satanic Majesty has to serve the "ferry-boat" himself. Just the business we should expect him to be engaged in; a cruel, barbarous, heartless work. But thanks be to God, Jesus will one day spoil the devil's ferry, dash his boat to pieces, and "destroy" the old ferryman. What, neighbor, think you, will "God's people" do when ferry, ferry-boat, and ferryman are all swept away together? Oh, now this praising death dishonors God, robs Christ, and exalts "the devil!" May these people learn that they owe death no homage; but that they do owe all their future and eternal life to our Lord Jesus Christ, who is the "Resurrection and the Life," and who will destroy death and the devil.—Set.

"Let Him Alone."

The time may come when the awful words pass from the lips of the righteous Judge, "Ephraim is joined to his idols, let him alone," and providence will let the man alone; and the Word of God will let the man alone; and his own conscience will let the man alone; and the Spirit of all grace will let the man alone. It is not for us to usurp the prerogative of the Omniscient. It is not for us to affirm of any one, let his character and conduct be what it may, that he has reached or passed the mysterious point beyond which that comes true. It is not for any one to pass such sentence upon himself. But let all of us stand upon our guard, and reflect that if for months and years we have been growing colder, deader, more indifferent to spiritual things, to the unseen and eternal realities; if conscience has been gradually losing her hold and weakening in her power; if we can listen now unmoved to what once would have impressed and affected us; if we count and daily with temptations that once we would have shunned; if sins are lightly committed which once we would have shrunk from; by these and such like marks, it is apparent that our day of grace has been declining, the shadows of its evening have been lengthening out, and that, if no change occur, if this course of things go on long, ere the sun of our natural existence go down, the sun of our spiritual day may have set, never to rise again.—Dr. Wm. Hanna.

DIED

Elder WATERMAN PHELPS, of Bunneyville, Jefferson Co., Wis., Wednesday night, Dec. 16, 1874, of Typhoid Pneumonia, aged 60 years.

Brother Phelps was born in the State of New York, was there a Methodist Exhorter in his youth, married and removed to Mc Henry Co., Ill., heard the message of the Coming One in connection with the delusion of the third angel's message, and for many years was a diligent laborer in that cause. About twenty years ago he removed to Wisconsin, where he continued to reside till his death. About ce years since he abandoned the seventh day Sabbath and Ellen White's delusion of the third angel's message, and began the proclamation of the Gospel of the Kingdom. His health, however, was so precarious to permit him to travel much and his labors were principally confined to his own neighborhood, and for the church of which he was pastor, a majority of whom were baptized by his own hands. His labors have been long and arduous, his sufferings, privations and trials many and hard to bear, yet he never murmured at the hand of God, but ever took up and bore his cross with cheerful alacrity. He was cheerful, kind and generous to all, and one of the few men of whom it could be said "He never had an enemy."

He died stong in the faith, leaving behind him an example of faithfulness which to his sorrowing fellow laborers is more precious than the odor of costly ointment. Without doubt a tender Father has said to him "Thou shalt rest and stand in thy lot at the end of the days." He leaves a sick wife and large family, most of whom also have families, to share the sympathy and sorrows of a host of friends throughout Wisconsin and Illinois, who will be made sad at the news of his death. But he received the messenger joyfully. Let us not sorrow but be glad that his labors are ended and he can now rest in peace till the Mighty Deliverer comes. His funeral was attended by a large concourse of people on the 20th, at Bunneyville. Sermon by the writer. Text, "There shall be no more death."

A CIRCULAR TO OUR FRIENDS.

Since the transfer of the RESTITUTION has been made, and the choice of Brother H. V. Reed as Editor, he has determined to transfer the publication of The Millennarian to us. There have been numerous requests for its continued issue, hence we have accepted the responsibility of its continuation, and have concluded to make some changes, and additions which we announce now:—

THE MILLENNARIA N,
EDITED BY THOS. WILSON AND H. V. REED,

Will be issued promptly once a month, and will be increased from sixteen to twenty-four pages. It will be printed from new type, and will be neatly covered for the protection of the reading matter. It will not be an organ for any party, and will contain no local or church news, notices, etc., but will be filled with choice articles pertaining to the glorious Kingdom of God—the Millennium—Israel's restoration—Coming Events, political and religious—the Life and Death questions—Destiny of the Wicked—and other great outlines of the faith as revealed in the Scriptures of truth.

Its tone will be gentle but firm, and no hobbies of any sort will be allowed place in its columns. We shall see to it that every number is fit to place into the hands of inquirers after truth, so that brethren everywhere may freely subscribe for it with this end in view.

Although the size has been increased, and a cover added, and although we shall, under the new law, be compelled to prepay the postage, yet we have concluded to keep the price the same. It will be sent to any address postage paid for

ONLY ONE DOLLAR PER YEAR IN ADVANCE.

Send in your subscriptions at once, and lend us the support this enterprise deserves. Remember The Millennarian is in no wise a rival of the Restitution, but works hand in hand with it. There is a field for both, and both should be well supported.

We now await a liberal response at once, and ask our friends everywhere to subscribe for our monthly. We want to know how many to print in January, so that all may be supplied with the first numbers, as well as all succeeding ones. Write early.

Direct all letters as follows:—

WILSON, PEIRCE & Co.
182 Clark St., Chicago, Ill.

TO THE OLD SUBSCRIBERS.

Owing to the labors of Brother Reed in the Gospel field for some months past, it has been next to impossible for him to issue The Millennarian monthly. There are three numbers due, viz., October, November and December. We will engage to supply three of the first numbers of the forthcoming volume to all the old subscribers, in lieu of the three now due, which will give them twenty-four pages more than they would have received under the former arrangement. And if any wish the balance of the numbers for the year 1875 (which of course they will) they can receive them by remitting us seventy-five cents. We have submitted this proposition to some of the former subscribers and they express perfect satisfaction. Let us hear from you immediately. There is no time to be lost.

CHANGE OF ADDRESS.

THE RESTITUTION

BLESSINGS.

Beautiful drops of blessed rain,
Tapping against my window-pane,
Come ye to bless our earth again?

This blissful message ye bring to me
From distant mountain and far blue sea,
"Our God can ne'er forgetful be."

Lips that seldom are tuned to praise
Turn to Him now, in grateful lays,
While every heart its tribute pays.

And hill, and valley, and smiling plain
Swell the notes of the glad refrain,
Beautiful, beautiful, blessed rain.

Weak and helpless, we children call Upon our Father who bleseth all,
And into his shattering arms we fall.

The crumbs from his table if He withhold,
Or a moment leave us without his fold,
We faint with hunger, or starve with cold.

He holds the sea in his hollow hand;
The mountains arise at his command;
We pitiful children helpless stand.

But his tender mercy doth never wane,
He sendeth the early and latter rain,
And our barns are filled with golden grain.

How Much Did God Love the World?

"God so loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in Him should not perish, but have everlasting life."—John iii. 16.

This passage tells us just how much God loved the world. He loved it so well that he made provision to save it. It also tells us on what condition men can be saved—"whosoever believeth in him shall have everlasting life." And also what will become of those who do not believe in him—"They shall perish." He so loved the world that he made provision to save it, on such conditions as will secure its perpetual prosperity. He loved it as well as he could.

1. He gave his Son to die for the whole world.

God gave his only begotten Son to die for the world. He sent not his Son "into the world to condemn the world, but that the world through him might be saved." John iii. 16, 17. Christ gave his life for the life of the world. John vi. 51. "For the love of Christ constraineth us, because we thus judge, that if one died for all, then were all dead." 2 Cor v. 14. He gave himself a ransom for all. 1 Tim. ii. 6. He tasted death for every man. Heb. ii. 9. "He is the propitiation for our sins, and not for ours only, but for the sins of the whole world." 1 John ii. 2. He came to save that which was lost. Matt. xviii. 11.

All of this class of Scriptures speak the same thing. They are perfectly agreed in their testimony. They cover the whole ground. Nothing that was lost is left out. Christ died for all—to reconcile all to God—to pardon all—to justify all—to save all. His life was the price paid for the redemption of the whole world. This provision is the basis of all pardon and salvation. It is ample, and full, and complete. There is no other name, or way, under heaven or among men given, by which sinners can be saved. This provision to save men is for all alike. If it is sufficient to save one, it is sufficient to save all. If it is not sufficient to save all, it is not sufficient to save any.

God so loved the world that he made this provision to save it, while the world was lying in wickedness. Eph. i. 4. It was made known immediately after the just transgression, so that it might have been communicated to all, of all generations, as naturally as parents instruct their children; therefore the world is without excuse. Rom. i. 20. This love of God to the world was unconditional and universal. It was equal towards all, without partiality, and without hypocrisy. This is the provision to save the world on the part of God.

Will not this ample provision to save all men, save all men? No. It will not save any. It will not affect the condition of the world in the slightest degree. Ample provisions may be made to feed a famishing city, but unless the provisions are partaken of by the people, it will not save any from starvation. So, God has provided the bread of life for the life of the world, but it must be eaten, or it cannot give life.

The provision for salvation is unconditional and universal.

2. But the salvation is always conditional.

The same God of love, that made provision to save men, imposed the conditions upon which men can be saved. He loved the world so well that he offered to save it on such conditions, and such only as would secure perpetual obedience and prosperity. Hence the conditions of the Gospel.

"Without faith it is impossible to please God." Heb. xi. 6. Faith then must be required as a condition of salvation. "As Moses lifted up the serpent in the wilderness, even so must the Son of Man be lifted up, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish but have everlasting life." John iii. 14, 16. "This is the will of him that sent me, that every one that seeth the Son and believeth on him, may have everlasting life, and I will raise him up at the last day." John vi. 40. "Go ye into all the world and preach the Gospel to every creature; he that believeth and is baptized shall be saved, and he that believeth not shall be damned." Mark xvi. 15, 16.

These testimonies are sufficient for a sample of the conditions upon which men can be saved. The whole of this class of Scriptures, are in substance alike. They are in complete harmony with our text, and with God's purpose to save the world. God has purposed to save the world, on the conditions of faith and obedience. The terms are the same to all.

3. How many will be saved?

All who comply with the conditions of the Gospel in every age will be saved. All who enter the strait gate, and walk in the narrow way will be saved. Matt. vii. 14. "Therefore whosoever heareth these sayings of mine and doeth them," will be saved. Matt. vii. 24. He that loveth Christ more than he loves his father or mother, or wife or children, or houses or lands, will be saved. Matt. x. 37. 39. Every one that hath forsaken houses, or brethren, or sisters, or father, or mother, or wife or children, or lands for Jesus' sake, will be saved. Matt. xix. 29. All the Father hath given to Christ will not be lost, but will have everlasting life, and be raised up at the last day. He that believeth on the Son will have everlasting life, and be raised up at the last day. John vi. 39, 40. All who become Christ's by believing the Gospel, and being baptized in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins, and who hold the beginning of their confidence firm unto the end, will be saved. Col. iii. 29. All of whom Christ is the first fruits from the dead will be saved. 1 Cor. xv. 23. And finally, all who are found worthy to obtain that world, and the resurrection from the dead, will be saved. All of this class of Scriptures are in complete harmony, and they show that all who comply with the conditions of the Gospel will be saved.

4. How many will perish?

All who do not comply with the conditions of the Gospel will not be saved. All who do not repent will perish. Luke xiii. 3, 5. All who do not believe on the Son of Man will perish. John iii. 14, 16. All the wicked will perish, so that their place cannot be found. "I have seen the wicked in great power, and spreading himself like a green bay tree, yet he passed away, and lo, he was not." Psa xxxvii. 10, 20, 36. He shall be as though he had not been. Obadiah 16. All who walk in the broad road that leadeth to destruction, will reach that end. Matt. vii. 13. "Except ye repent ye shall all likewise perish." Luke xiii. 3, 5. "Except your righteousness shall exceed the righteousness of the Scribes and Pharisees, ye shall in no case enter into the kingdom of heaven." Matt. v. 20. He that believeth shall not be damned. Mark. xvi. 16. "No man, having put his hand to the plow, and looking back, is fit for the kingdom of God." Luke. ix. 62. "Whosoever he be of you that forsaketh not all that he hath, he cannot be my disciple." Luke xiv. 33. "The works of the flesh are manifest; which are these: adultery, fornication, uncleanness, ... I tell you again, as I have also told you in time past, that they which do such things shall not inherit the kingdom of God. Gal. v. 19, 21. "For the wrath of God is revealed from heaven against all ungodliness and unrighteousness of men; that they which commit such things are worthy of death." Rom. i. 18, 32. All those described in this chapter from verse 18, to the end of the chapter will perish. "He that loveth father or mother, or wife or children, or houses or lands more than me is not worthy of me." Matt. x. 37. All such will perish. "Except a man be born of water and of the spirit, he cannot enter into the kingdom of God." John iii. 3, 6. All such will perish. "Now if any man have not the Spirit of Christ he is none of his." Rom. viii. 9. "Except ye eat the flesh of the Son of Man, and drink his blood, ye have no life in you." John vi. 53. All such will not "see life, but the wrath of God abideth on them." John iii. 36. They will not be raised up at the last day. If any have not the Spirit of Christ, their mortal bodies will not be quickened, or if they have not the first fruits of the Spirit, their bodies will not be redeemed. Rom. viii. 11, 23. Or if they are not looking for the Savior from heaven, their vile bodies will not be fashioned like unto Christ's glorious body. Phil. iii. 20. If they are not raised from the dead they are perished. 1 Cor. xv. 18. Once more, all who are not found worthy to obtain that world and the resurrection from the dead, and whose God is not the Lord, all such will not be raised from the dead, or become the children of God by being the children of the resurrection. But they will perish as they would have done, if no provision had been made for their salvation. These testimonies are in complete harmony. The witnesses all speak the same thing, they are of the same mind and of the same judgment concerning those that perish.

In all this testimony, no excuses are made, no apologies are offered. There is no plea made for those who did not like to retain God in their knowledge, or for the unfortunate children of the wicked. Or, for those whose understanding is darkened, and who are alienated from the life of God through the ignorance that is in them, because of the blindness of their heart. Eph. iv. 18. But on the contrary, it affirms that those who had been without the true knowledge of God, and who had been given over of God to a reprobate mind for generations, and for centuries, that they shall perish, and that they are without excuse. Rom. i. and ii.

5. The promises to those who become righteous, and the threatenings against those who remain wicked, are alike final.

God is immutable, his purposes change not, he cannot deny himself, his counsel shall stand, his judgments are true and righteous altogether. Therefore his promises, and threatenings will never need to be changed.

Are the class of promises, and the class of threatenings, which I have introduced, final? Do they discribe the final destiny of the righteous, and the wicked? Why not? They appear to be final. They express God's judgment in relation to both classes, with equal positiveness. There is no indication in them that they are not final. If they are not final, they do not reveal anything beyond what they affirm as a final result. Our text says, "He that believeth in the Son shall not perish but have everlasting life." If this is not final to both classes what does it mean? "The wages of sin is death, but the gift of God is eternal life." If this is not final to both classes, what is their condition beyond? "Broad is the road that leadeth to destruction, but narrow is the way that leadeth to life." If this is not a final result, what is beyond it? If, to raise men up at the last day, saves them from being lost, why does not this describe the final condition of both classes? "He that believeth on the Son hath everlasting life; he that believeth not the Son shall not see life." What is there beyond this for either class? Those who are found worthy of a resurrection will be raised up; this will leave the rest of the dead not raised up. Why will not this decide the destiny of all the dead?

All admit that the promises to the righteous are final. If this is so, how can we avoid the conclusion that the threatenings to the wicked are equally final? The same God that made the promises, made also the threatenings. The Savior said, "The word that I have spoken, the same shall judge him in the last day." Will the judgment in the last day be final to those who shall be judged? Those the words to which I have referred will be final, for they are the words by which men will be judged in the last day. If, as Paul said, the dead shall be judged at the coming of the Lord, will not this include all who have died? If the Lord comes and judges the dead, and those who are found worthy of a resurrection, are raised up, and those who are not found worthy of a resurrection are not raised up, will the same dead ever be judged again? This judgment will be rendered on both classes at the same time, by the same authority, and after they have finished their course; so that no further developments can be possible. What reason can there be why this judgment should not be final to both classes alike? If at this time any should be found unworthy of a resurrection from the dead they must remain unworthy of it forever, "for there is no work, nor device, nor knowledge, nor wisdom in the grave," where they lie. Then the conclusion is unavoidable that the promises to the righteous and the threatenings to the wicked are alike final.

HOW MUCH THEN, DID GOD LOVE THE WORLD?

1. God loved the world so well that he provided a sin offering for the whole world, while the world was lying in wickedness.

2. God loved the world so well, that he offered salvation on such conditions, and on such only as will secure perpetual obedience and prosperity.

3. He loved the world so well, that he will save all who comply with the conditions of salvation, and so well that he will not endanger the prosperity of the world, by saving any who do not become worthy to be saved, by compiying with the conditions of the Gospel.

4. He loved the world so well, that he will judge it by the word spoken. His judgments which have been written are all true and righteous altogether, therefore his love to the well-being of the world requires that his promises and his threatenings should be faithfully executed, and that the destiny of the righteous and the wicked as set forth by them should be equally final.

5. His love to the world was so great, that it can neither be increased nor diminished, whether many or few be saved or lost.

☞ The Word of God must be nearer to us than our friends, dearer to us than our lives, sweeter to us than our liberty, and pleasanter to us than all earthly comforts.—Mason.

A New Year's Message.

We know not how to express a better New Year's wish for those who are in Christ, than to repeat the tender exhortation of the Holy Ghost, when He says, "And now, little children, abide in him; that, when he shall appear, we may have confidence, and not be ashamed before him at his coming." 1 John ii. 28.

In verse 24, of the same chapter, the word rendered abide is also rendered remain and continue; and in verse 24, of the next chapter, the same word is translated dwelleth. What is it, then, to abide, or remain, or continue, or dwell in Christ? It will suggest the proper answer to the question, if we ask, what is not to be in Christ? It is to renounce all dependence upon self, or ecclesiastical ordinances, and to trust in the Lord Jesus alone for salvation. The Holy Ghost unites us to Him by faith, giving us his place and portion in the heavenlies, and from that moment it is the privilege of the believer to know that "there is, therefore, now no (not one) condemnation to them which are in Christ Jesus." Rom. viii. 1. From that moment we may say, and we grieve Him if we do not say it, "Herein is our love (love with us, as it is in the margin) made perfect, that we may have boldness in the day of judgment; because he is, so are we in this world." John iv. 17.

If we would abide in Him, we must dwell in the assurance of his deep, unchangeable, perfect love for us. We must continue in the attitude of entire dependence upon Him all the journey through. We must remain stripped of all "confidence in the flesh," (Phil. iii. 3,) and rest with ever growing confidence upon the efficacy of his atoning death, and the certain fulfillment of his precious promises. He "of God is made unto us wisdom, and righteousness, and sanctification, and redemption." 1 Cor. i. 30. We must never at any time go any where else for wisdom, nor for righteousness, nor for sanctification, nor for redemption. Our wisdom to the end of life will be folly, our righteousness will be filthy rags, our sanctification, apart from the increasing knowledge by the Holy Spirit of what He is for us, will be a hurtful fanaticism, and our redemption is purchased solely with his blood.

He Himself says, "Abide in me, and I in you. As the branch can not bear fruit of itself, except it abide in the vine; no more can ye, except ye abide in me. I am the vine, ye are the branches; he that abideth in me, and I in him, the same bringeth forth much fruit; for without me ye can do nothing." John xv. 46. He does not say, Without me ye can do something, ye can do a little, but without me ye can do nothing. Our fruitfulness, therefore, depends wholly upon our abiding in Him with a simple, unfaltering trust in conscious communion. Again He says, "If ye abide in me, and my words abide in you, ye shall ask what ye will, and it shall be done unto you." John xv. 7. Our reception of what we ask, therefore, depends upon our abiding in Him; and it is shown that we abide in Him by permitting his words to abide in us, attracting our instant attention, carrying our fixed conviction, commanding our full confidence, keeping us constantly in his recognized presence, so that we can enter into the meaning of the lines,

"Childlike, attend what thou will say,
Go forth and dwell, while 'tis day,
Yet never leave my sweet retreat."

"And now, little children, abide in him; that, when he shall appear, we may have confidence, and not be ashamed before him at his coming." How solemn and touching is this appeal! Christ is coming, and it may be this year, this month, this week; for no predicted event remains to be fulfilled, before his shout may be heard, calling the sleeping and the living saints to Himself. Should that shout be heard now, would it find the state of our heart such toward our Lord, toward our brethren, and toward the world, that we would have confidence at his appearing, or would we be ashamed before Him at his coming?

Well might the late Dr. Candlish, of Scotland, write, "Let us then be always abiding in Him; every day, every hour, every instant; even as we would wish to be found abiding in Him, were He to appear this very day, this very hour, this very instant. He is about to appear; to appear suddenly; to come quickly. Oh! let us see to it, that as we would not wish Him to come when we were in such a state as to cause shrinking from Him in shame; as we would rather that when He appears we were in a position to spring forward with keen eye and outstretched arm—to welcome in all confidence Him whom we love; let us see to it that we 'abide in Him.' Let us always be in the posture in which He who gives his little children' this counsel was Himself when He closed the book of Revelation, 'He which testifieth these things saith, Surely I come quickly. Amen. Even so, come, Lord Jesus.'"—The Truth.

☞ God cannot be indifferent to sin, nor can He disregard the violation of his laws and government.

Nature and God.

BY H. L. HASTINGS.

There are men who glorify nature and rail at God. They believe in a creation without a Creator, and in laws which have no Law-giver. The world, to them, is a great machine which invented itself, and runs itself, without help from God or any one else. They reject divine revelation, and talk of the light of nature. They honor nature's "laws" as just, and complain of God's judgment as cruel and severe. They believe in a god more merciful than the God of the Bible. They cannot believe in a God who drowned the world, burned Sodom, and will punish and destroy sinners at the end—they believe in the "god of nature."

But what do they gain by the change? Are not "the laws of nature," as they term them, as immutable as those inscribed on tables of stone? Do not fires burn, floods overwhelm, waters drown, earthquakes swallow up, lightnings blast, tornadoes desolate, tempests destroy, sunbeams scorch, frosts congeal, diseases waste, pains rack, sorrows pierce, and calamities afflict mankind? Are not toil, and labor, and hunger, and famine, and pestilence, and all the nameless agonies of dying men, in accordance with "the laws of nature?" Does not "the god of nature" do all this? Pray then, what do men gain by throwing away their Bibles, which they will not believe, when they must find the same facts, and worse ones, in the book of nature, where they can neither doubt nor deny them? The facts will stand. Skeptics may deny man's fall, but they cannot escape its consequences. They cannot argue pain out of their bones, misery out of their hearts, nor death out of their families. They may deny that God has cursed the ground, but they cannot rid themselves of thorns and thistles, with all their arguing and with all their unbelief. And sorrow, and guilt, and condemnation will follow them, in spite of all their doubts and skeptical objections. What then do they gain by their efforts to get rid of God?

They gain just this: they put away the chastisement of a Father and fling themselves amid the revolving gearings of an Almighty Machine that crushes them in the dust, and then grinds them to powder. They have the same facts they had before, with no possible relief from them. They retain every trouble and reject every consolation. They have the same realities of sin, and sorrow, and penalty; they have only blotted out mercy, made penitence vain, and forgiveness and peace impossible. They have kept the disease, and flung away the remedy.

Let the infidel glory in the fact that he has preserved his death-warrant and burnt up the pardon that might have cancelled it; that he has kept every sorrow of earth, and rejected every joy of heaven;—but let the Christian rather rejoice that he possesses every real blessing of which the ungodly man can boast, and, added to them all, he has the presence of a Divine Father, and the sympathy of an Almighty Friend, who, while he reproves in righteousness and punishes in justice, yet pardons with such infinite and compassionate love, that the heart of the penitent turns with tears to Him as the only Savior, saying: "There is forgiveness with thee, that thou mayest be feared."—Selected by A. Sanford.

The Pearl of Great Price.

"Again the kingdom of heaven is like unto a merchant seeking goodly pearls who when he had found one of great price, went and sold all that he had and bought it."

All the glittering mines of Golconda held not within their depths a gem of such priceless worth, no jewel gleaming in the hand of the lapidary, can equal it in value; even the far-famed Kohinore grows dim and lustreless in comparison. Its value is untold, for it hath not entered into the heart of man even to conceive of the glories prepared by the Father for his children. Men may seek after gold, and spend all the precious years of life in striving to become rich, they may toil year after year in the treasure mines of earth, but what will it avail them at last if they seek not this pearl of great price, this gem which grows brighter and brighter the longer it is worn, and adorns the old and wrinkled form as well as the fair and youthful one, by the side of which all others sink into insignificance. Let us, too, purchase this jewel, as did the wise merchant who went and sold all that he had that he might be the purchaser; houses and lands and gold were freely given in exchange for it. Many a struggle will be fought with pride and passion and worldliness ere we decide to give up all for this pearl, but when the decision has been reached, when we have let its soft light shine down into our hearts; oh, the sweet peace that will come like a benediction, like a song of victory after the battle. The soft pure light of this pearl will brighten all the dark pathways of life, it will even penetrate the darkest cloud of trial and adversity, and its sweet and holy beams will gleam across the dark valley and shadow of death even down into the grave. How useless at the hour of death will be all the pomp and riches of life! He who has sacrificed all for the kingdom though he be the humblest of men will be richer than all the crowned princes of earth. In possessing this pearl we shall possess the glorious gift of immortality, we shall drink of the fountain of perpetual youth, we shall mingle with the great and good of all ages, no pencil can paint the face of an immortal one—the face from which the marks of pride and passion have been forever erased—the face reflecting the light of immortality, but such faces will ever beam upon us, such lovely forms will ever walk by our sides, such seraphic voices will blend with ours in singing the new song, an infinity of pleasure and happiness will be ours, and the sweet smile of the Infinite King will radiate over all.

J. A. KERR.

The Children.

They are helpless and innocent; the heart aches for them. Would that we were as innocent as they. But the tired and over-worked parent will fret and scold at their every fault. Each careless action and little failure is treated harshly, as if we older ones never made mistakes. Why expect the little ones to be men and women? Why speak cruelly, when a gentle reproving command will do? Why scold, when calm, firm, sweet words will win? Do not stand on your dignity; unbend your soul; let pity and love rule. Kindness is of pleasant remembrance. But to lay your darling away with recollections of sharp loud words and hasty uncalled for blows, will bring only bitter remorse. God pity the mother who folds the active hands, and closes the bright eyes, with a long arrear of impatience like acid and wormwood to flow into the cup of memory!

How small, how trifling a thing will cause a child to shout in gladness. A smile, a toy, a caress is all it costs to bring joy. Give these to the children now, before the dark evil days of sorrow burden the heart. Send them out doors with smiles. Part from them affectionately. Put them to bed with kisses and blessings. Never let them go with sharp, biting reproofs ringing in their ears. Hush them to sleep with loving words. They will lie down on sad pillows enough in after days, without sobbing themselves asleep now. At least let the dear ones have a happy childhood to remember, the sweet memory of which no clouded future can efface. Repress wild, naughty license, but let the little gleeful heart overflow and sing with its fullness of innocent joy. Tyrannical over indulge is to spoil, but true love never spoiled a single child.

Tell them all about Jesus. Teach them to pray, and pray with them. God bless the dear sweet children. How many millions of them arrayed in white will shine and sing in glory!—The Christian.

Old Trees.

From an exhaustive article in a late number of the Atlantic, we glean a few curious particulars regarding "Old Trees:" "The most ancient tree on record is the cypress of Somma—a town near Naples, at the base of Vesuvius. One tradition relates that this tree was planted in the year of Christ's birth; and another, that it was full grown in Cæsar's time, fifty-two years before the Christian era. The dimensions of the tree are 121 feet in height and 23 feet in circumference. When Napoleon planned the route of his great road over the Simplon, he carefully turned its line in order to spare this hoary patriarch of the vegetable kingdom. One of the trees in the garden of Chapultepec, called the cypress of Montezuma, has a circumference of 45 feet, and a height in due proportion. Four hundred years ago this tree was remarkable for its splendid stature. In the village of Atlisco, in Puebla, stands a cypress which measures 76 English feet in circumference, and has a cavity in its trunk that is 16 feet in diameter, and might shelter ten or twelve men on horseback. Another tree, of the same species, in the church-yard of the village of Santa Maria del Tule, is, according to Humboldt, 118 English feet in circumference. The estimate of the age of the oldest of these trees, is from 4,000 to 6,000 years.

A half a century ago, single specimens of the American pine were frequently met with having a diameter of six feet and an altitude of 250 feet. A pine was cut in Hopkinton, N. H., in 1844, from which a mast was hewn 110 feet long and three feet through at the smaller end. Lambert's pine, on the northwest coast, grows to the height of 230 feet, and the Douglass pine to the height of 300 feet. Future Recognition.

BY MRS. H. V. REED.

In the days when men used to announce from the pulpit that there were infants in hell that were only a span long, they preached as a suitable accompaniment to that theory that there would be no future recognition among the saints.

The few who were "elected" to be saved were described as cold, shadowy ghosts, and transported to some indefinite world to spend the years of eternity with other ghosts, all of whom were perfect strangers. These important "doctrinal points" were generally discussed in connection with each other, and perhaps the second proposition was the logical result of the first, for any man who had advocated the first theory would naturally hope that nobody would know him in the next world, and he could hardly be blamed if he preferred to remain incog even in this. While these items come in naturally enough among the "decrees" and "secret wills" and big box pulpits of Calvin's day, they have a strange sound to our ears from a modern pulpit. We wonder greatly where any Bible-reading man can pick up such a ghastly relic of the dark ages as the theory that in the world to come we shall all be strangers in a strange place.

Not only are we to be utter strangers to each other but to ourselves, for it is argued that memory will be gone; we can recall nothing that has ever occurred in our life history. If this be true, we might as well be anybody else as ourselves, and the same mode of reasoning would prove the transmigration of souls, for we may have been cats or oxen instead of men and women for aught that we should be able to remember to the contrary.

Can we picture to ourselves anything more desolate than waking from the death state in a land of perfect strangers? Not one familiar face or loving voice to bid us welcome. Not one clasp from the dear hands that have ministered to our wants during the years of our pilgrimage. It may be argued that our Savior will be there to welcome us to his kingdom, and that no one can be lonely in his presence. But if memory is gone He too is a stranger to us; we have no knowledge of his redeeming blood, no faith in the atonement, no memory of what He has suffered for us. We can have no love for Him, because we know nothing of the dark hours wherein his sympathy has strengthened us, have no memory of the bitter trials wherein He has been both friend and shield, and we might walk the golden streets in perfect indifference to inquire "Who is the man Christ Jesus?"

If the grave is to hold our loves and hopes, our joys and sorrows, our memories and all knowledge of friends, surely it must remain forever the victor, for without these we should be in God's kingdom no better than idiots. We should care nothing for the crown, having no memory of the cross; care nothing for the glory, knowing nothing of the shame; care nothing for life, being ignorant of death; care nothing for happiness, having no knowledge of suffering; care nothing for Christ, having no knowledge of his dying love.

We hear a great deal about the unsatisfactory condition of the orthodox ghost, which can neither have a body or clothes, but with all deference to everybody, we would rather be a respectable ghost with a good memory, than to have a literal body with memory, friends, and consciousness lost. There may be those who have become so obnoxious to themselves that oblivion would be hailed as a luxury, and it is very likely there are some who would not want to be recognized in the other world, else this theory would never be preached, for the wish must be father to the thought. But to the most of us the kingdom would be lonely without the love of God that has been born in these years of trial; without the memory of a dying Savior, and the joy of his well-earned crown; without the grand re-union of the army of the dead, who are sleeping on their armor, awaiting the roll call that shall lead them on to victory over death.

We are assured that we shall sit down with Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob in the kingdom of God; but if we are never to know who they are, the promise as far as we are concerned, might as well never be fulfilled.

Of what avail would it be to us to be told that this man was Abraham, if all memory of his history was obliterated? We could have no interest in him if we knew nothing of his place in the promises—if we were ignorant of God's oath and covenant with him.

The Holy City itself is to bear the names of the twelve tribes of Israel, and the twelve apostles of the Lamb, but how is the significance of this lost upon a race of creatures, who, so far as they know, never heard of either the twelve tribes or twelve apostles. Let us not go back even behind the shades of orthodoxy into the ghastly halls of the dark ages. "Now we only know in part, then we shall know even as also we are known."

The future holds for us a kingdom and a crown. God's own word is pledged that our loved ones shall "come again from the land of the enemy," and reign triumphant over death; and we, if faithful, shall know and love them there, for God Himself is love.

We shall look into their eyes all radiant with undying glory. We shall clasp their hands warm with the pulse of eternal life. We shall see their cheeks blooming with unfailing health, and kiss their rosy lips all fresh with the dews of immortality. We shall sit with them under the tree of life, and talk of the years of sunshine and of shade, of joy and sorrow wherein our hearts were drawn together.

We shall see our risen Lord and know [illegible] the pierced hand and feel the wounded side, and know that it was done for us; we shall remember the story of the cross, and contrast it with the crown; and thus beyond the trial and the suffering, beyond the cross and bitter cup, we shall be prepared to appreciate the life and happiness, the glory and the crowns that God will give to those that love Him.

The Sudden Advent of Christ.

That advent will come when the world is full of living men, women, and children. No universal blast of death will have first swept across the earth, and depopulated it of its inhabitants. Living men and women and children will be all over the world when the day comes as full of strength, health, vigor, activity, thought, forethought, as at any period since God first "breathed into man's nostrils the breath of life."

It will come when men are blind to its coming, each in his own blindness, asleep—each in his own dream. The astronomer will be calculating his eclipses for years yet to come—the physician will be studying his arts, to add length of days to man's body—the philosopher, with his "philosophy falsely so called," will be improving and enlightening his species—the politician will be planning beautiful schemes for man's welfare in ages onward—the man of riches will be saying to his soul, "Soul, thou hast much goods laid up for many years; take thine ease, eat, drink, and be merry"—the man, "that will be rich" will be toiling and laboring after his "filthy lucre," rising up early and sitting up late—the man that "liveth in pleasure" will be sending for "the harp and the viol, the tabret, and pipe and wine," to be in his "feast," regarding "not the work of the Lord, neither considering the operation of his hands"—blind preachers will be speaking their smooth things and prophesying their deceits, each in his own delusion, but all of them blinding men's eyes to the day—the king, and the noble, and the magistrate, and the farmer, and the tradesman, and the laborer—the mean man and the mighty man, the married and the unmarried, the people and the priest, the servant and his master, the maid and her mistress, the buyer and the seller, the lender and the borrower, the taker of usury and the giver of usury to him,—shall all be weaving their webs of distant years and distant things, turning time into eternity, thinking and speaking of time's world as never-ending, at the very instant when the day of the Lord cometh upon them as a thief.

Sinners of this generation, as it was in the days of Lot, so shall it be in the day when the Son of man is revealed. Thousands and tens of thousands of living men, eating and drinking, buying and selling, planting and building—fluttering like the butterflies in a summer's day, about the perishing flowers of a perishing world—steeping all their senses in the earthly business of the passing hour—making everything a business, whether pleasure, daily avocation, necessary labor, natural appetites, even "eating and drinking," everything made a business of, and the soul observed and quenched therein—"whose end is destruction, whose god is their belly, whose glory is in their shame, who mind earthly things." The farmer at his market! the planter with his trees! the builder at his house! the tradesman in his shop! the student at his books! the reveller at his feast! the gambler at his cards! the rake at his revels! the usurer at his gold! the nobleman at his pomp! the king at his court! the soldier in his camp! the laborer at his toil! the idler at his folly! the drunkard at his drink! the glutton at his meat! Each at his sin! each in his day-dream! each in his soul's poison! The Lord bears it no longer. His mouth has sent forth the word of all-desolating vengeance. The vengeance storm obeys, and gathers and thickens, and rolls on, and hangs over. One moment's pause—the world is still merry, and laughing and busy, and knows not. One moment's pause—the preachers are preaching—peradventure the sinners may repent. One moment's pause—hark! the pause is for the wise virgins—hark! "A shout, the voice of the archangel, and the trump of God." The Lord can do nothing till they are in refuge, being merciful unto them.

O what a day of separation—of instant and awful—will that day indeed be! Two of a household shall be in one bed, brothers, it may be, that have grown up together, eating of the same dish, and drinking of the same cup—two women of one village, sisters in neighborly love and kindness, each for her little ones—two men of the same house of worship, dwelling together as brethren in unity, and making their daily labor good and pleasant by sharing it together, shall be working in one field;—and "one shall be taken," "caught up to meet the Lord in the air," and "the other shall be left." Oh! then will be the cry of those who are left, Lord, Lord, open to us.—Sel.

The Truest Touchstone.

The truest touchstone by which we can approve the things which are conducive to our happiness is to consider how they will operate upon our lives. For instance, you have an opportunity of getting some great advantage by doing some vile thing; while you look only at the advantage, and think over all the ways in which it may be serviceable to your pleasure or ambition, so long the temptation may be strong; but set it at a little distance from you, and the case will be altered. Suppose the thing done and the advantage gained, and then put yourself into the posture of looking back upon the whole transaction, and see what comfort will arise from the reflection. Can you rejoice in the sight of woods and parks, if every sight of them must call to your mind an innocent man whom you had ruined in order to obtain them? Such a thought must ever be attended with a secret abhorrence of ourselves; and how happy the man is who lives under a continual displeasure with himself, let any one judge.—Hebrew Leader.

The Existence of a God.

The Universe burns with Deity. All nature seems vocal to declare a Great First Cause. The mighty sun, as he pursues his never ending career, proclaims the greatness of an Invisible Being. The pale and silvery beams of the sister orb, as she scatters the gloom of night, seem to woo men to acknowledge this great truth. The countless hosts of stars, as they gem the heavens, like diamonds set in the coronet of darkness, all declare that their lamps were lit at the shrine of Divinity. The hoarse voices of the angry billows, in their ceaseless rise and fall, murmur that they evidence the fact. The bone and muscle of beasts of the field, the waving of the wing of every bird of the air, the beauty of the smallest insect which floats in the breeze, attest the solemn truth. Every tree, every plant, every flower, alike witness the same fact. Everything is indelibly stamped with the impress of Deity.—Hebrew Leader.

Study of the Bible.

THE BIBLE A NEGLECTED BOOK.

"Our bowers well trimmed and in the gayest style,
Like armies standing close in rank and file,
Adorn our intellects as well as shelves,
And teach us authors splendid as themselves;
The Bible only stands neglected there,
Though that of all most worthy of our care;
Tells, like an infant, trouble-some awake,
Is left tasteless, for peace and quiet sake."

Four years ago we wrote and published these words:—"No book in the world was ever so generally possessed, and so little comprehended, as an English Bible in the present day. Everything in society is unfavorable to its profitable perusal: the ceaseless activities of the good, and the restless insinuations of the bad, textual preaching and tormenting criticism, the multiplication of books, and the mingling of things sacred and profane, all tend to keep men from feeding in green pastures, or reposing by the side of still waters. And so it comes to pass, amid many other contradictory things, that while the Bible is more widely circulated than ever, it is much less read than formerly, and scarcely at all understood. The result is,—for that which affects the people affects the priest,—that while public worship was never so well attended as at present, the pulpit was never so powerless; conduct in the counting-house never so independent of attention in the pew; scepticism never so rampant; and happy Christians never so rare."

We see no reason either to retract or to modify these sad convictions.

Sad, when it is recollected that the Book to which they relate is one to which we are indebted for more than we can well express; for all our knowledge of the greatest fact in existence,—the birth of the world in which we live; for the only authentic account we possess of the origin and infancy of its inhabitants; for all we know about the introduction of natural and moral evil into it, and for all we can rely upon in relation to the hopes and prospects which await mankind beyond the grave.

Sad, when we reflect that this [illegible] volume is the great charter of human freedom, and the sole conqueror of its excesses; that by sanctifying figures abused revolution and [illegible] our institutions have no permanent basis, and our liberties no safeguard, apart from the virtues it inculcates, and the spirit it fosters. Sad, when we remember that no study is so exciting, expanding, and ennobling as that of Holy Scripture; that every page is marked by a majesty and purity which belongs to no other composition; that no man can long breathe its atmosphere without purifying his taste, enlarging his mind, and improving his heart.

Saddest of all, when we think of it as the chief store house of divine truth; the only key to the mysteries of existence; the sure revelation of mercy to sinners; the basis of all practical virtue;—THE STATUTE BOOK OF HEAVEN.

Happy indeed shall we be if permitted to enjoy however small a measure of success, in calling attention to its claims, in removing obstacles to its comprehension, or in restoring to it that supremacy which is its rightful place, and apart from which it can never accomplish the great purposes for which it has been bestowed. In contributing what little we can towards this result, may the Father of light be pleased to vouchsafe unto us his holy guidance and benediction.—Henry Dunn.

Luther's Opinions.

In 1520, Luther published a defense of his forty-one propositions which had been condemned by Leo. X. In the twenty-seventh we find the following:—

"I permit the Pope to make articles of faith for himself and his faithful, such as . . . . . the soul is the substantial form of the human body; the pope is the emperor of the world, and the king of heaven and God upon earth; the soul is immortal, with all those monstrous opinions to be found in the Roman dunghill of decretals."—Historical view of the controversy concerning an intermediate state.—pp. 62, 63.

Mr. Blackburne says on page sixty-four of the same work, "Luther espoused the doctrine of the sleep of the soul, upon a Scriptural foundation, and he made use of it as a confutation of purgatory, and saint-worship, and continued in that belief to the last moment of his life."—Ibid.

Dr. Blackburne further says:—"Luther, in his commentary upon Ecclesiastes which was published in the year 1532, was clearly and indisputably on the side of those who maintain the sleep of the soul."—Ibid p. 65.

Revelation 15th and 16th.

THE SEVEN SEALS BELONG TO EGYPT. 1. The wonder is that any one should ever have conceived that these judgment scenes at the close of, could belong to and in the Gospel Age! They are described as God's "judgments."—Rev xv. 4. They synchronize with "the time of wrath—and the dead that they should be judged."—Rev xi. 18. They are after "the kingdoms of this world become our Lord's." Then his "throne" shall have appeared with its living, everlasting scenery, of cherubim and seraphim. The four living creatures and twenty-four elders are there, (See Rev. xi. 17- and xv. 6,) as the attendants on the throne or kingdom of God! By consequence, the Kingdom Age (Judgment Age) shall then have actually opened. "The time of the kingdom" is the time or age of "the judgment." Many have yet to learn that the official titles of our Lord—"Judge, Ruler, King,"—are cotaneous and concurrent. They all belong to Him in His promised sovereignty over the earth. These were the titles of supreme power over Israel in the types, and must mean as much when worn "in His times" by "The blessed and only Potentate—the King of kings."

In the progress of these vials, the angel exclaims: "Thou art righteous, O Lord. He is, He was, the holy one; because thou hast judged thus." Rev. xvi. 5. Four times amid these plagues such words compel us to see and own that they belong to "The judgment!" The whole scenery belongs to the future rather than the gospel age; in which the proper "time of wrath—of judgment," is held in abeyance.

II. These plagues, in each instance where they are named, follow the opening event of the coming age. The seven trumpets.—Rev. xi. 15-18. "The sign in heaven, great and marvelous."—Rev. xv. 1-4. The opening of the heavenly tabernacle.—Rev. xvi. 18. The rapture of the saints, (which follows "the last" or seventh trump, in this only series of trumpets) —Isa. xxvi. 18-20. The Rending up of Michael.—Dan. xii. 1. The sign of the Son of man.—Matt. xxiv. 30, and the scenery.—Heb. xi. 1-16. If an opposing view be found in the word; or let this stand.

The entrance of our Lord "within the veil," was noted and confirmed by the descended spirit, at the Pentecost. —Acts i. 9-11. Acts ii. 1-16. Heb. ix. This was the full introduction of the Gospel age, which will end by a counter movement—alike dispensational—when the heavenly tabernacle will open.

III. In this age the action of the Almighty—the proper sphere of his recognized agency—lies in the Gospel. His claim to human regard, to faith, love and obedience, is expressed in the Gospel. But the whole course of the vials has a different aspect and belongs to the Lord's action in another age.

IV. Every analogy, and every scripture statement of this subject, demands faith in "the vials," as future—following those scenes which introduce the judgment age.

The plagues on Egypt were introduced by the Lord's coming "down" to deliver Israel and punish Pharoah and his host. These plagues were the judgment of Jehovah on Egypt.

NOTE.—This series of plagues, after the Lord came down, was all miraculous. It furnishes a language for "the seven vials," and five times we are told that the future deliverance of Israel shall be "after the manner of Egypt."—Isa. xi. 12-16. Micah vii. 15 20.

The ark received Noah ere a drop of the deluge ascended to drown the world. So it shall again be, "as it is written: Come, my people, enter into thy chambers—till the indignation be over past."—Isa. xxvi. 18 20. Matt. xxiv. 37.

But I forbear. If these reasons are rejected, then others are useless. With many there seems to be no settled principle as to understanding "The Word,—except that they easily accept their educational ideas, their profitable and popular views. But they have yet to learn that the "word is truth." It is truth as it stands—unerring, unfailing and eternal Truth!

By consequence, the fact that "the seven vials" are assigned to "the judgment," on apostate Christendom —that they follow the dispensational events that introduce the kingdom—that they are analogous to other judgment scenes—should suffice to settle the question that they are all future.

To this view there is no objection, save that which is founded in feeling and habit of thought, and party and popular interests; because the truth is the only and highest reason;—unchangeable and ever consistent with the course of God's providence. The popular view confounds dispensations that are distinct, ignores the positive statements of "the word of the Lord," as to the subject in hand, and has no basis, save in the minds of a few leading, erring mortals.—J. B. C.

The True Work of Religion.

How many men I meet who like to study the Bible—in their way! They would so like to know what I think about the prophet's axhead, which fell into the water and sunk—whether he really did cut down a stick and cast it in, and make the iron come to the top and swim. Then, as to Balaam's ass speaking! "Do you think," they ask, "that the ass actually spoke?" There are a great many questions that come up in connection with that incident.

Then Daniel—he has been a great favorite. There are many things in that book which tempt to infinite curiosity and speculation. It is a desirable thing with them to get hold of points in the Bible with which they can run round and round, and chase a man down, or shut him up with.

Then there is the question of Cain's marriage. I once put an article in a newspaper on the subject, "Who was Cain's wife?" and I received, I think, a hundred letters concerning it. If the subject had been on "The relations of meekness and humility to the happiness of family life," I do not believe I should have got a single letter about that.

What too many people like to exercise is curiosity—intellectual curiosity—speculative and philosophic curiosity. But these things have nothing to do with Christian living. Far be it from me to dissuade men from an active exercise of philosophical curiosity. But then, that is not religion. The structure of the church is not religion. The order of the offices in the church is not religion. One, two, five, seven sacraments are not religion. The Calvanistic system of theology is not religion. No ideal statement of living can ever take the place of life into right living, right thinking, right feeling; and the way to preach to men, the true business of christian men, and christian women, and christian ministers, is to say, "What is the way of sweetening myself? What is the way of ripening myself? What is the way of making my life more effluent of kindness? What is the way of making Christ more manifest in my disposition to men about me than I have succeeded in doing hitherto?" That is what men mostly need to do. And he who preaches in that way will very soon have a vital sympathy in his preaching which may seem to good old sturdy warriors as an "emaculated theology," but which to God, to the divine spirit itself, is, I think, the very marrow of preaching.

Building men up into perfect men in Christ Jesus is the true work of the ministry and of religion. Just so far as a man can use a system of theology, and succeed in using it, it is useful to him; but in so far as he cannot do this with it, he is at liberty to throw it away.—Sel.

Matthew Henry's Testimony.

By the creature here we understand, not, as some do, the Gentile world, and their expectation of Christ and the Gospel, which is an exposition very foreign and forced; but the whole frame of nature, especially that of this lower world; the whole creation, the compass of inanimate and sensible creatures, which, because of their harmony and mutual dependence, and because they all constitute and make up one world, are spoken of in the singular number, as the creature. The creature that is now thus burdened shall at the time of the restitution of all things "be delivered from this bondage into the glorious liberty of the children of God," (verse 21) that is, they shall no more be subject to vanity and corruption, and the other fruits of the curse; but, on the contrary, this lower world shall be renewed; when there will be new heavens, there will be a new earth. 2 Pet. iii. 13; Rev. xxi. 1.

At the second coming of Christ there will be a manifestation of the children of God. And this redemption of the creature is reserved till then; for as it was with man and for man that they fell under the curse, so with man and for man they shall be delivered. All the curse and filth that now adheres to the creature, shall be done away then, when those that have suffered with Christ upon earth, shall reign with Him upon earth.—Com. on Rom. viii. 19-23.

THE RESTITUTION

PLYMOUTH, IND., JAN. 20, 1875.

EDITORIAL DEPARTMENT

—The Editor expects to be in Goodland, Ind., over next Sunday, Jan'y 24.

—In consequence of our removal of the office and in re-arranging the mailing list there may have been mistakes made. If any one should fail to get his paper he will please inform us at once.

—Brother Wilson writes us that he has changed the name of his monthly. It will hereafter be called Our Rest instead of The Millenarian as heretofore. The first number will be out in a few days.

—Those who have ordered books and tracts will please be patient. Brother Chaplin has been sick for some days, and was not able to attend the business of the office, and there are a number of unfilled orders on hand which will be attended to in a few days.

Our Critics.

A good brother writes from Michigan that he is fearful that the RESTITUTION will drift into the Fair Chance theory, or Universalism. Another brother, in Illinois, writes that he is afraid that the paper will go over to Adventism. While still another says that we are not quite liberal enough. Now we are satisfied that these good brethren all have the good of the paper at heart, but how they can come to such opposite conclusions, is a standing mystery. On the whole we are pleased with this state of things, for it shows that we have not yet got into any rut, and these brethren see through their glasses and not ours. We propose to print a paper that will speak God's truth, regardless of the views or hobbies of men, and shall not stop to enquire what particular label shall be put on to it. We want the plain truth, and nothing but truth; [illegible] do expect to publish many things which we do not believe. But as [illegible] them a breathing place in our columns. We need to be brought to a higher life, and we shall aim, in our work, to do all the good we can, and trust that thousands may see the light as it shines from God's open, free word. To this end let every one become an earnest worker. Good is being done; a better spirit is entertained by our brethren, and the outlook is favorable for a strong advance for the truth of Christ. Our mission is to preach the Grace of God; to bring men unto Christ, by teaching the way of Life as we find it in the Holy Oracles.

Good Tidings from Prison.

The gospel has worn fetters, been hidden in caves, locked out of the mansions of kings, crucified in synods and councils, buried in dead languages, burned in bonfires, and drowned in the sea, but it still lives. It has arisen like the two witnesses in John's vision, and has prophesied in sackcloth through the ages agone. Its faithful proclaimers have been driven to prison, and banished to the isles of the sea, but from these places of confinement, the gospel of "peace on earth and good will to men" rang out as the tiding of "great joy which should be to all people." Joseph was put in prison, but the visions of God lighted up the dark cells, and the gospel of coming victories gleamed through the darkness, unfolding the morning of peace and immortality.

Christ was taken from the prison to the cross, and from the summit of Calvary uttered those brave words: "Father forgive them; they know not what they do." Paul and Silas are thrust into the "inner prison," and in the midnight these noble men sing the songs of coming deliverance, the earthquake shook the prison wall., the doors are opened, the jailor draws his sword, and would have killed himself, but the voice rings out, "do thyself no harm, we are all here." In that night the gospel is preached, and that soul that was bound in sin, was made free in Christ.

Paul sends words of hope to the church, while a prisoner at Rome, He had fought a good fight, and kept the faith, and now writes of his hope and crown, which shall be given when the Lord appears from heaven. John is a prisoner on "Patmos' rocky isle," and from his place of banishment, he sends out the grandest messages the world has ever heard. The world's history is drawn on the map of prophecy, and the vision does not close until the church is safe beyond the plagues and death, in the city of God.

The gospel has been doing its work while wearing chains, while its heralds have been in poverty and obscurity; and the church has worn the sad, sad cross of sorrow and suffering. But its ultimate victory is assured. It is the "Word of God which liveth and abideth forever." The prison house of death cannot hold its army of holy dead, for its seal has been broken and the prisoners of hope shall come forth shouting victory amid the triumphs of him, who is death's conqueror, and from whose hands shall be given the crowns of immortality.

An Infidel's Return to Christianity.

The following from Joseph Barker, will be read with interest by those who love the Bible. Mr. Barker was formerly a clergyman, afterward he became a bold, defiant sceptic. He was the leading spirit and chairman, of the great anti-Bible convention, held at Hartford, Conn., in June, 1854. He fought christianity for many years, but afterward found that he had nothing to put in its place. Scepticism offers no hope; it rolls a stone into the door of the sepulcher of the dead, and denies the resurrection; it enforces no moral law with reference to a future world, denies our Lord. Let him who has tasted the bitter waters, refrain; and he who would leave his Bible and his God, take warning. But we will give place to Mr. Barker's

PERSONAL TESTIMONY.

Listen to the testimony of converted infidels. Listen to mine. I mourn, I bitterly mourn over the days I have spent under the influence of infidelity. I think of my labors in its behalf with shame and horror. The thought of the injustice I did to God and His works, to Christ and His gospel, to the church and its ministers, fill me with sadne[illegible] The only explanation I can give of my conduct is, that the spirit of infidelity is a spirit of madness. [illegible] pursuits, was [illegible] myself. Infidelity is the last extreme of mental and moral derangement; it is madness in its most pitiable and deplorable form. And what havoc men make of the comforts and hopes of their fellow creatures when under the power of this tremendous malady. O, my good God, forgive my great and grevious error, forgive my sin; pardon the mischief I did while led captive by the evil one, and help me while I live to do what service I can to the cause of truth and righteousness.

Ah, happy day that saw me turn my face again toward Christ and his people. I give my God ten thousand thanks that I was led at length to see the folly and wretchedness of unbelief, and the truth and blessedness of the religion of Christ. I do especially thank the great Giver of all good that he brought me back to Christ before my strength began to fail me, and that I have been permitted now for eleven years, to preach his blessed gospel. The one great error, the one appalling calamity of my life, was my departure from Christianity; and my return is life from the dead. I give to my God my all, my tongue, my pen, my life, my soul, my property, my all, are his, and his alone. To preach, to lecture, and to write, to pray, and, if God sees fit, to suffer and to die in his cause, is the sole desire of my soul. God help me. If it please thee, spare me a little that I may serve thy cause, and when I die, let my name and my story be a warning to all who may be tempted to harbor the spirit of unbelief, and an encouragement to every doubter to return to thee.

God is infinite in goodness, His mercy endureth forever. O the happiness he has permitted me to enjoy since my return to his service. And while he has blessed me so bountifully in my own soul, he has made me a blessing to others. Thousands of doubters he has brought, through my labors and my example, to the truth as it is in Jesus. And thousands more has he checked in their tendency to doubt, and kept them back from ruin. And to thousands more, I believe, will his mercy make me a blessing in days to come. I praise thee, O God; I acknowledge thee to be the Lord, and in thy hands I place myself in holy and humble trust, happy in thy forgiving love, and in thy merciful, loving kindness forevermore.

The heart knoweth his own bitterness, and a stranger doth not intermeddle with his joy.

"Save Yourselves from this Untoward Generation."

As we are living in a dispensation designed to take out a people from the Gentiles, to bear the Divine Name, and partake of the Divine Nature, it becomes a very important matter to present to our generation what they must do to be saved. There can be no question with us, who submit ourselves to the simple, plain statements of scripture, that many prophecies relative to Judah, Israel, and remnants of the nations, await their complete fulfillment in a future dispensation, after the coming of the Messiah.

Our present duty, unquestionably, demands us to labor for the salvation of dying men and women whose probationary career falls in the times of our present passing gospel age. To present the coming of the Lord in person to reign on David's throne,—the doctrine that immortality, or eternal life, is bestowed only through Christ at the resurrection,—and the absolute necessity of a personal conformity to the image of God's dear Son, are responsibilities that rest with solemn weight upon every proclaimer of the Gospel.

Doctrines that build up, unite, and comfort the church, are of paramount importance in these perilous times. While at the same time we should aim to impress the minds of those out of Christ, with the indispensible requirements of repentance toward God, faith in the Lord Jesus Christ, and submissive obedience to all the ordinances of the gospel, in order to salvation. If we anticipate sharing in the honors of the "church of the first born's," it becomes us to ascertain whether we have the spirit of Christ, pre-eminently the First Born of the eternal Father. In the economy of redemption God designs to elevate a portion of our fallen race to the dignity of a Heavenly Family—to make the heirs of a mortal nature equal to the angels in perfection and glory.

In rejoicing at the prospect of one day being possessed of immortality, incorruptibility, and other perfections pertaining to our becoming partakers of the Divine nature, we must not lose sight of the fact that the moral image of the Son of God must first be impressed on our moral constitution. We must be like Christ in all our tempers and dispositions, in order to be raised in the likeness of his glorious body, and wear a crown of glory that fadeth not away. There is a time when the glory of the Lord shall fill the whole earth. God promises an inheritance in his kingdom to all that suffer for Christ's sake here. This is enough to stimulate us to consecrate all our powers and faculties to the service of God—[illegible] word of life, follow the things that make for peace, and prepare to meet in peace at last, without spot and blameless.

Trine Immersion.

The advocates of trine immersion urge, as an argument for the practice of dipping the candidate three times three times under water, that, in the commission, the Greek participle is in the plural, and, therefore, the repeated performance of the act for each name, Father, Son, and Holy Spirit, is essential to the valid administration of the ordinance. This is to mistake entirely, the reason why the participle is in the plural number. We now give the rule of Greek syntax that applies to this and all similar cases.

"The participle represents the idea of the verb as an adjective idea, and is like the adjective, both in its form and in its attributive use; for it has three genders, and the same declension as the adjective, and cannot more than the adjective be used independently, but must depend upon a substantive, and hence agrees with it in gender, number, and case." Kuhner,s Greek Grammar, Sec. 309.

In John 1st, xxviii, 31, are two instances where this same participle refers to our Lord's forerunner, as its antecedent; as the substantive, upon which the participle depends, is singular, the participle is singular also. Matt. iii. 23, is precisely a similar instance. In the commission, Matt. xxviii. 19, the particle refers to our Lord's eleven disciples, and consequently is in the plural form by the rule. To make all plain to the English scholar, we say:—John is a noun in the singular number,—hence John is a baptiser. Disciples is a noun in the plural number,—hence the disciples are baptisers. The idea of plurality grows out of the fact that more agents than one were commissioned; not of a three-fold, or a four-fold administration of the ordinance.

Our Lord empowers his apostles to become missionaries. The word rendered "go ye" is a participle plural. As itinerants they were to instruct all the nations and make disciples; of these disciples they were commissioned to become the baptisers; and, lastly, to these obedient converts, they were enjoined to become the teachers of divine lessons. The three ideas of traveling, baptising, and teaching, are each expressed by participles in the plural number; all agreeing with disciples, the plural antecedent noun.*

Will examine the scriptural and historical arguments in our next.

Power of the Gospel.

Review the history of our religion See it on the day of Pentecost, "beginning at Jerusalem;" melting into penitence the bigoted and cruel multitude whose hands are yet reeking with its author's blood; spreading despite the power and malice of its enemies, through Judea and the surrounding provinces; gathering its trophies in the idolatrous cities of Asia; crossing into Greece; confuting the philosophy of Athens, invading Italy; ent ring the palaces of the Cesers; flying with the Roman eagles to the farthereat corners of the earth, and reforming the habits and moulding the policy of nations the most diverse in their origin, circumstances, and laws. See its influence on the character of individuals; how it turns the proud, unsocial Jew into the disinterested lover of mankind, the persecuting Saul into the affectionate apostle, the heathen of Antioch into Christian confessors; the scoffers of Athens—the Epicureans, Stoics, and the careless votaries of folly and amusement—into penitent believers; the voluptuaries of Corinth into self-denying disciples, the idolaters of Galatia, and Ephesus, and Phillippi, and Thessalonica, into saints and martyrs. See it pouring into the bosom of the Roman, the new sentiment of humility; abolishing polygamy, slavery and the parental power of life and death; mitigating the penal law; confining, within just limits, that of divorce; and bringing back to connubial life the blessedness of Eden, by raising woman to the companion-ship, the duties, and the confidence for which she was designed.

See it, in after ages, humanizing the ferocious Britian; softening the Vandal; and teaching mercy to the Goth. See it scattering throughout Europe the seeds of truth, and justice, and humanity, and social order, from which have sprung those various institutions which render christendom so superior in government, in knowledge, in the arts and charities of life, and in all the elements of individual, domestic and national happiness, to the most favored portions of the Mohammedan and Pagan world. See it from age to age, repeating its miricles of mercy, in the transformation and improvement of human character; changing the vulture to a dove, the tiger to a lamb; teaching the vengeful to forgive, and the miser to be liberal; purifying the hearts of the unclean, the hand of the fraudulent, and the lips of the profane; making the proud man humble, and chastening the disires of the ambitious; filling the bosoms of the poor, the friendless, and the afflicted, with resignation, [illegible] and hope; converting, oftentimes, the abandoned drunkard, and profligate debauchee—the [illegible] ments of society and benefactors of mankind.—Rev. B. F. Butler.

Take Fair Ground.

Do not suppose that every thing is objectionable to which objections can be raised. It requires very little ingenuity in a captious caviller to raise objections against the sun, the moon, and the stars, against the earth and the seas, against the winds and the clouds, against the mountains and the valleys, against any moral or immoral thing.

Do not accept any view or theory of the divine inspiration of the Bible which is not taught by the Bible itself. Endless mischief results from exaggerating Bible doctrines. "If you put the doctrine of Christian perfection too high, you drive it out of the world," said Wesley, and if you put the doctrine of Scripture inspiration too high, you make it impossible for the friends of the Bible to maintain or prove it by honest argument. Once ascertain what the true doctrine of Bible inspiration requires the book to be, and what it does not require it to be, and you will find the defense of the doctrine, and the answers to infidel objections, comparatively easy. Some advocates of Bible inspiration, paying more regard to human theories of scripture doctrines than to scripture doctrines themselves, take positions which it is impossible to maintain, and by their embarrassment, their resort to dishonorable tactics, and their final defeat, bring discredit on the Christian cause. Take sure ground—scriptural ground,—and you may defy the world.—Rev. Jos. Barker.

How to be Miserable.

Never extend to your fellow man, in the hour of need, a helping hand. Sit idly down and allow your thoughts to dwell upon "the might have been." When a friend offends you in word or deed, mope it out in mullish pout. To allow self and all its sensual gratifications to predominate over your better virtues, and mistrust all around you.

Now is this the way to live? Is this the way to pass away the life that has been bestowed on us by our beneficent Creator? Can we, leading such a life as this, prepare for the great beyond? The echo of my heart answers me back, "No, no!"

Then let us be up and doing; let not the golden hours pass unheedingly by. Dwell not too earnestly upon the past; for yesterday we were, to-day we are, and to-morrow we hope to be.—Sel.

The through New York Express train which left Washington at 9.15 P. M., Thursday night, when running at a rate of thirty-five miles an hour, collided, by the misplacement of a switch, with a freight train. The express and mail cars were burned. One of the mail agents was burned to death in the mail car. Another man in the express car was seriously injured. The dead mail agent's name is G. T. Fayman. The mail loss is exceedingly heavy—a whole day's Southern mail accumulation at Washington being burned, including a large number of registered letters. Millions of dollars were also in the express car, it containing eight or nine safes. It is wonderful and providential that considering the speed at which the train was running, a greater loss of life did not occur.

Burned to Death on an Altar.

HONESDALE, Pa., Jan. 14.—Crissy Hocker, a religious fanatic, burned herself to death at White's Valley, this county, yesterday. She was a young and accomplished woman, the daughter of William Hocker, a wealthy farmer of the above place. She had for five or six years labored under the hallucination that she had committed grevious sins against what she termed "her Immanuel," and was in the habit of building altars in her father's fields and sacrificing lambs as a burnt offering to appease the wrath of her offended deity.

Yesterday Mr. Hocker went to Carbondale after a load of coal. His daughter having manifested signs of a recurrence of her insanity, he left a hired man to look after her, her mother being dead. The man went away at noon, and did not return to the house.

Mr. Hocker came back at about 2 o'clock in the afternoon. Entering the kitchen of his house, he was horrified to find the body of his daughter lying on the coals and ashes of what had been one of her altars, and burned to a crisp. Her face and the upper part of her body alone had escaped. She had constructed the altar of pyre out of a set of quilting frames. She had torn up a portion of the carpet and laid it on the altar, and made a pillow for her head. She reclined on her right side, and her cheek was resting on her hand.

Notwithstanding the intense agony she must have endured, her face wore a calm and peaceful expression, and there was a smile on her lips.

In the family Bible, which was found lying on the parlor table, open at the book of Job, was the following note, addressed to her father:

DEAR FATHER: My Immanuel appeared to me to-day. He reveals to me that I have committed the Unpardonable Sin; which I can only obtain forgiveness for by passing through the cleansing of fire. I will intercede for you, my dear Father. You will find my purified body in the northeast corner of the house. I wish to have my ashes buried in my Immanuel's ground at the northwest corner of the House. Good-by. Meet me in the Eternal Ground. CRISSY.

Mr. Hocker went to the corner of the house indicated in the note as the spot where the remains were to be buried, and found that his daughter had staked out a space for her grave.

Martin Prentise, Justice of the Peace, summoned a jury and held an inquest on the remains. The jury returned a verdict in accordance with the facts.—Daily Paper.

The Editor.

In his "New Year's Greeting," Dr. Dexter, of "The Boston Congregationalist," says of the editor:

"He cannot—like the preacher who is cornered—fall back on an "old sermon;" but must deliver his tale of new bricks—straw, or no straw. Very rarely is he able to write with full deliberation. Not unfrequently he is driven to the formation and expression of judgments on the most important questions, on partial data, and in a haste that might prevent one not trained like himself from reaching any result at all; and so, under the pressure of the imminence of publication day, he rushes into the petrification of print—to be judged as rigorously, not to say mercilessly, as if he had had months in which to balance his judgments, and the resources of the British Museum at his back for reference."

After giving some further like particulars, he concludes by declaring it to be his "judgment, that perhaps of all workmen in this wide harvest field, the Christian editor makes the most urgent requisition upon the candor and the fraternal implorations of his fellow-toilers." Which is very true. Will our own readers bear it in mind?—Standard.

An antidote sure for our cares and our woes;
How refreshing the draught from its blossom-fringed
Giving beauty and strength that will ever abide. [tide,

Poor travelers we, on this desert plain,
Where comes but too seldom the plentiful rain,
Let us turn our weak steps to this river so clear;
And banish all doubt and each withering fear.

Blest River of God! by thy side I will stay
And hear thy dear music as life wears away;
I would join in thy song with a calm, trusting heart
Till I to the shore of the holy depart.

And there where it flowing it. River of Life,
Where come no sad thoughts, and no wearying strife,
I shall see the fond friends of my spirit once more
As they roam in the light of Eternity's shore.

Oh, theme most transporting! a heavenly home
Where earth's weary children shall, parted, [room,
Where a halo of bliss shall encircle each brow,
As before God's bright throne they adoringly bow.

The Christian Publishing Association.

A meeting of the Board of Directors of the Christian Publishing Association was held at the rooms of the Association in Plymouth, Indiana, Jan'y 18, 1875. An assessment of one-fourth of the capital stock of the Association having heretofore been made, the Board ordered the remainder to be forwarded to the Secretary of the Association at Plymouth, Indiana, as follows: One-fourth on or before Feb'y 15; one-fourth March 15, and the remainder April 15, 1875, receipts to be forwarded for all payments, and certificates of stock to be issued as soon as the stock subscribed is paid in full.

The material, consisting of type, stereotype plates, books, tracts, etc., and the good will of the office of the RESTITUTION was purchased by the Association for the sum of $2500.00. A portion of the type which was not needed in conducting the business of the Association, has been sold for $600.00. The Association has paid on the purchase $900 09, and executed its its note for $900.00. It has also assumed the payment of the Evangelist fund, amounting in round numbers to $500.00, which has been placed to the credit of the Association on purchase of the RESTITUTION. The remainder, $200.00 is subscribed, and is to be paid in stock. The indebtedness of the Association at the present time is about as follows:

Note on purchase	$900.00
Evangelist fund	500.00
	1,400.00

To pay this the Association hold note for Material sold	$600.00

Cash on hand	650.00
	1,250.00

Over two hundred subscribers to the RESTITUTION have been added since the organization of the Association, and it is believed that the daily receipts for subscriptions and tracts will meet current expenses for the present. The stock subscribed amounts to about $2,300.00 of which $850.00 has been paid in, leaving a balance yet unpaid of $1,450.00. In order that the Association may not become financially embarrassed it is earnestly desired that the balance of stock subscribed be paid in promptly.

One hundred and twenty-five dollars has been paid out of the Evangelist fund, and the remainder will be paid to those engaged in the work as their necessities may require.

The outlook of the Association is cheering, and with a united effort on the part of those interested its success is certain.

A Tribute of Respect to Wm. H. Hornaday.

DEAR RESTITUTION.—The writer wishes to speak through your columns of the Christian character of Brother Wm. H. Hornaday, who is now in the enemy's land. I became acquainted with him when he was about 18 years of age, soon after he had been adopted into the family of God.

Having since held an intimate acquaintance with him and his family, I am prepared to speak of him as a father, husband, brother, and also as a teacher of the good news. As a husband and father, he was kind and affectionate; and as a brother, he was very kind, zealous and loving brother in and out of church capacity, always willing to sacrifice more than his share for the cause of truth. His daily walk and conversation were such as showed great respect to God and his truth. Indeed, he was the life of the meeting. Some eight or nine years ago the writer said to him, "Brother Hornaday, you and I are of different political parties" and we might, in times of political extremes, say something that would wound the feelings of one of us, therefore we will agree never to cast another vote." To this proposition he readily agreed. He kept his promise to the end of his life, and is now free from temptation, and the writer is persuaded that nothing will induce him to violate his solemn pledge.

O, what an example Brother Hornaday has set, in overcoming evil. Let us also do likewise. He has gone to his last appointment; he has sung his last song, and preached his last discourse. His sweet voice we shall never hear again, it is hushed in death. I knew not of his sickness, or I would have been by his bedside. But I stood by his grave a few days ago, all alone, and mourned his loss. And now as I write, tears roll down my cheeks. But we do not mourn as those who have no hope, for he has fallen asleep in Jesus, to await the resurrection. Blessed hope! glorious thought. It dries up my tears. Soon, soon will Brother Hornaday come forth, clothed with immortal life and glory. Let both reader and writer be ready to meet him and share with him the glory of the kingdom.

JONAH PEIRCE.

The Resurrection.

Christian men should not be "Children of the mist." They should know what they are looking for, and be able to declare the ground of their confidence. That which is our greatest concern should be our greatest certainty. In relation to the future life, that certainty may be gained; for "in the fullness of time" there came One into the world who was able to say, "I am the resurrection and the life." This was as the sound of a trumpet in the night, which no mortal could have sounded; it was a voice full of authority and full of power. The words have gone down to the deepest foundations of human nature, and among the noblest of men are treasured as a life within the life.

Philosophers had long been discussing in vain the immortality of the soul. Their words were beautiful, but evanescent. Like palaces and castles in the western sky, they were imposing, but without endurance. They were but theories. Of all who had gone down into the sepulchre, not one had returned to speak of what lay beyond it.

God teaches by facts. The resurrection of Christ was a great fact. The narrative given in Scripture of that marvelous event carries with it all the severe simplicity of truth. Ages before a voice had gone forth through the prophet Isaiah, "O death, I will be thy plagues; O grave, I will be thy destruction"; and now the word was accomplished. He rose, and death was abolished. No tongues of men or of angels could have given reality to the future life. It was needful that immortality should be made visible in the glorious resurrection of "the second Adam, the Lord from heaven." Peter speaks of this as the sure ground of certainty,—"Blessed be the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, which hath begotten us again unto a living hope by the resurrection of Jesus Christ from the dead." It is as if he had said, "Our former hope we buried in the master's grave. But now we have one which cannot die, because it is grounded in life: it is a hope which will grow brighter until our inheritance be revealed.

We are not formed to be satisfied with the present. We have all prophetic impulses after a better order of things, serene and enduring. "Hope springs eternal in the human breast," and we still keep looking forward to a happier economy. This fact alone would seem to indicate the possible destinies of humanity.—Sunday Morning.

Remarkable Discoveries.

W. F. Putnam, Jr., of Salem, Mass., director of the Peabody Academy and a Vice-President of Essex Institute, has been making a scientific exploration of the Mammoth Cave of Kentucky. He took home with him several specimens of the eyeless fish which abound in the rivers of the cave, and a few fish hitherto unknown to exist there. These latter have eyes and are of a blackish color—the blind fish being nearly white. Microscopic examination of the blind fish showed, where the eyes should be, a number of delicate threads which would seem to float above their heads. These are nervous filaments by which the sense of touch is made to replace that of sight. The fish that have eyes swim close to the bottom of the water instead of near the surface, as the blind fish do. A correspondent of the New York Mail, who gives that paper an account of the discoveries, considers this fact a staggerer to the theory of Mr. Darwin. "If," he says, "as the Darwinians claim, the blind fish had lost the sense of sight from lack of need of it, and had been bleached out by the darkness in which they lived, these other fishes living still below, and, if possible, in a darker place than their eyeless brethren, should be quite as blind and even more colorless." Mr. Putnam found a strange variety of flora, which was pretty much all root. But the most remarkable discovery of all was that of human remains. Says the Mail correspondent: "Mr. Putnam has brought home several skeletons found imbedded in the soil miles within these other caves. Some few miles in, also, they noticed curious piles of stone, which had in the center a round hole, and seemed to be blackened by a charred substance. Further in they came upon bundles of fagots tied with ropes of grass, which were evidently the tapers set to burn in these cairn candlesticks. They also found moccasins of woven grass, here one and there another, in the soil, as though they had been cast off by their probably prehistoric owners; and in one place a pair tied up together by the same twine of woven grass. It is impossible at first sight to say whether these remains are hundreds or thousands of years old; but they are at any rate prehistoric, and there are indications to show that they reach far back to the antiquity of the Roman cave-dwellers. Implements and utensils are also found in abundance, such as have been discovered in European caves as well."

Earthly Bliss.

The pleasures of this world are so transitory and fleeting that it seems a crime for a man to pass his days in frivolous pursuits, or to stake, as many do, their whole mind upon what before to-morrow's sun shall go down will become as mist or vapor. The uncertainty of life; the dark veil which covers the future from the piercing eyes of man; the ignorance of what a day may bring forth, have a salutary influence upon the thoughtful, and wean them from a too great love of the world, its pleasures, or of themselves. Though there be a few who live to the age of three-score and ten, it is no guarantee that we shall live till then. Health and youth are not to be relied on, for the nipping frost often destroys in an hour the fairest flower, and the lightning from heaven often rends the sturdy oak, and the earnings of years are swept off in a day:

"The spider's most attenuated thread
Is cord, in cable to man's tender tie
On earthly bliss; it breaks at every breeze."

Is it not astonishing that the thought of "the end of these things" so seldom enters the minds of men busy with the world's cares? What merchant handling his ledger, what mechanic using his tools, what sailor looking at the passing wave, pauses to think that the book, and steel, and wave will outlast the feeble arm that now converts them to its uses; and when the brain that directs them is dust, the book will lie unopened, the steel will be in other hands, the wave will roll steadily from shore to shore?

It is conceded that no mechanism of art or of nature equals the structure of our bodies. It is granted that no skill of man has approached it in the remotest degree; and that it is as far above the finest devices of genius as those delicate constructions are above the worthless stones in the street. Yet the work of man's hands will last a thousand years, and man will not outlast the first century.

It would appear that no man looking on the strength of the ordinary brute matter, or on the imperishability of man's thoughts, could fail to ask himself if death is the end of all.—Hebrew Leader.

Mount Shasta.

Although Yosemite is reckoned the most wonderful natural phenomena in California, it is surpassed in many respects by Mount Shasta, which stands at the head of the Sacramento valley. Shasta has an elevation of 14,443 feet; that of Mount Blanc is but 15,789 feet. Mount Shasta once contained an active volcano; the crater is still visible. The view from the summit takes in the whole of California between the Coast and Sierra Nevada ranges of mountains, and from away beyond the Oregon boundary to the Bay of San Francisco, a distance of 460 miles. As a vast and magnificent panorama it is doubtful if this view is surpassed in the whole world. The whole country is frequently filled with great masses of fleecy clouds which hides all but the tips of the Coast Range and Sierra Nevada mountains. The view from the summit under such circumstances is grand and weird beyond description. The great Sacramento valley seems buried in piled up drifts of fleecy snow. These drifts under the sun's rays shine with an intense glitter. One of the largest living glaciers on the Pacific coast is found on the summit of Shasta.—Trinity Journal.

Heaven's Sympathy with Earth

"When Adam and Eve left the retiring splendor of Eden and entered into the cold shadow of a dismantled world, God did not insulate or abandon them. He left open a way of intercourse between the condition they forfeited and lost, and the condition of sorrow and sin and suffering they had too justly earned. From heaven the gospel sounded down in their hearing, and in these evangelic words: 'The woman's seed shall bruise the serpent's head.' This was the first creed of Christendom. A ray from heaven subsequently lighted on Abel's altar and consumed his sacrifice. God afterward came down and walked with Enoch and with Noah. Abraham gave hospitality to visitants from heaven. Lot entertained angels. When Jacob slept in the desert, resting his aching head on a pillow of stone, the patriarch saw a communication between heaven and earth, and the angels of God descending and ascending by it. He fell asleep in the desert, and awoke at the gates of heaven."—Dr. Cummings.

—Strong resolutions are needful to repel the force of temptations.

A Cheerful Home.

A single bitter word may disquiet an entire family for a whole day. One surly glance casts a gloom over the household, while a smile, like a gleam of sunshine, may light up the darkest and weariest hours. Like unsuspected flowers, which spring up along our path, full of freshness, fragrance, and beauty, so do kind words, and gentle acts, and sweet dispositions, make glad the home where peace and blessing dwell. No matter how humble the abode, if it be thus garnished with grace and sweetened with kindness and smiles, the heart will turn longingly toward it from all tumults of the world, and home, if it be ever so homely, will be the dearest spot beneath the circuit of the sun.

And the influences of home perpetuate themselves. The gentle grace of the mother lives in the daughter long after her head is pillowed in the dust of death, and fatherly kindness finds its echo in the nobility and courtesy of sons who come to wear his mantle and to fill his place; while, on the other hand, from an unhappy, misgoverned and disordered home, go forth persons who shall make other homes miserable, and perpetuate the sourness and sadness, the contentions, and strifes, and railings which have made their own early lives so wretched and distorted.

Toward the cheerful home the children gather "as clouds and as doves to their windows;" while from the home which is the abode of discontent and strife and trouble, they fly forth as vultures to rend their prey.

The class of men that disturb and disorder and distress the world are not those born and nurtured amid the hallowed influences of Christian homes; but rather those whose early life has been a scene of trouble and vexation—who have started wrong in the pilgrimage, and whose course is one of disaster to themselves, and trouble to those around them.—Friend's Intelligencer.

True Solace.

"Come unto me all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest."

Ah, ye weary ones, who have been toiling all the night without success, who have been born down by opposition, oppression, scorn and derision—ready to fall down and exclaim, "Lord, my punishment is greater than I can bear," take comfort at these words. However erring, however far your feet have strayed, your elder brother's gentle voice is always calling "come." How kind, how thoughtful, to leave such loving words behind to comfort His "little ones," while He has gone to "prepare a place for them." None know better than He to what temptations you would be subjected. Himself a man of sorrows—acquainted with grief. He knew the comfort of praying to His Father, and desired that you should know the same. Then do not give up, though the waters be oh! so heavy, and the wind contrary. Stick to your oars, ever praying, "Strengthen me, O my Lord," and you will master the tide. Jesus himself will guide you into the everlasting harbor. Cheer up Christine, howsoever old, or new, or sorrowful, God has said, "I will give you rest." Heavenly promise.

Trouble.

Trouble is more frequently made than sent. If every person would take the world as it is—its joys and sorrows—and yield at once an humble reconciliation to what is unavoidable, there would be far more happiness, and infinitely less misery than there is. Six thousand years' experience ought to convince mankind that there are clouds here as well as sunshine, and the man who starts life with the expectation that everything before him will be smooth and uninterrupted, is a dreamer who knows nothing of the world's realities. Wealth cannot shield us from disappointment and affliction, and poverty is not as heavy on the heart as the cares brought on by the possession of uncounted riches.

We cannot keep death away from our door, no matter how faithful we may guard its portal; nor can we so control the mind and disposition of others that the most tender ties and associations are not at times snapped asunder. Let us take matters as they come, and try to be content. If we are prosperous, we should rejoice and give God the praise. If we fail in our enterprise and find our plans of business dwarfed and thwarted, let us submit coolly to the visitation, and try again, with renewed hope and effort. There is no use lamenting, when lamentations will do no good—or shedding tears, when they only tend to heighten our sorrows. The grave will soon cover our troubles, and there is a happy life beyond, which we can make our own, no matter how the world treats us.—N. C. Times.

Down the Hill.

The evening of every man's life is coming apace. The day of life will soon be spent. The sun, though it may be up in mid-heaven, will pass swiftly down the western sky, and disappear. What shall light up man's path when the sun of life is gone down? He must travel on to the next world; but what shall illuminate his footsteps after the nightfall of his journey? What question is more important, more practical, more solemn, for each reader of our journal to ask himself? That is a long journey to travel without a friend. Yet every man must perform it. The time is not far distant when all men will begin the journey. There is an evening star in the natural world. Its radiance is bright and beautiful, and cheering to the benighted traveler. But life's evening star is good hope. Its beauty and brilliancy are reflected from the Sun of Righteousness, whose bright rays light up the evening of life, and throw their radiance quite across the darkness of the grave into Immanuel's land. It has illuminated the footsteps of many a traveler to eternity. It is of priceless value. A thousand worlds cannot purchase it; yet it is offered without money and without price, to him who will penitently and thankfully receive it.—Exchange.

Education is a companion which no misfortune can depress, no crime can destroy, no enemy can alienate, no despotism enslave; at home, a friend; abroad, an introduction; in solitude, a solace; and in society, an ornament. It chastens vice, it guides virtue. It gives at once, grace and government to genius; without it, what is man? A splendid slave, a reasoning savage.

THE RESTITUTION

"EVEN THOUGH IT BE A CROSS."

An earthly "cross" in patient meekness bearing,
The while we wander in this pilgrim land;
A heavenly crown of matchless glory wearing,
Placed on each head by God the Father's hand.

The heavy "cross" on earth—the crown in heaven;
The sorrow here—beyond the mighty joy;
The rapture of a soul with all forgiven;
A thirst eternity without alloy.

It may be that the "cross" we have to carry
May bow our every mouth to earth with grief,
And darkly round our path wild clouds may gather,
While anxiously our spirits seek relief.

Yet when the gloom is deepest, and the heaviest Seemeth to us the cross we have to bear,
Faith in our Father's love can rise triumphant,
And show the "crown" of joy that we shall wear.

It may be that the "cross" of suffering
Is one known only to ourselves and God;
When strongest love is powerless to aid us,
Or ease the stress of the crushing load.

Yet even then one thought may bring us comfort—
He knows our grief, for he has felt the same;
His spirit has been bowed in deepest anguish,
Who claimed the "Man of sorrows" for his name.

Then let the gloom around our spirits gather,
Let every earthly joy and comfort flee;
Blest be the "cross," though heavy, that shall bring me
Nearer to thee, my God, nearer to thee.

THE EXPOSITOR.

[Under this head we shall give important criticisms, from the ablest scholars and critics, and also insert valuable historical extracts, on such subjects as will more fully illustrate Bible truth.]

PAUL'S EARTHLY HOUSE.

The following exposition of 2 Cor. v. 1–6, we take from Thomas Belsham's Notes on the Epistles of Paul. Mr. Belsham was a very able scholar, and has given, in four volumes, the most valuable commentary upon the writings of the Apostle, that we have ever seen. His translation is rather liberal, but he aims to bring the Greek into plain English. Mr. B. held to the doctrine of the sleep of the dead, and to the literal personal coming of our Lord. His Commentary was printed in 1822. The following is the translation, with the paraphrase on the same, alluded to above.

For we know that if this tabernacle wherein we dwell, which is fixed on the ground, be taken to pieces, we have a building from God, a house not made with hands, eternal, in the heavens.

The Apostle here appears to be speaking not as he is generally understood of the human body, but of the state of man in the present life which he contrasts with the state which will take place after the resurrection. The present state of man he compares to a residence in a low and crazy tabernacle, which is fixed upon the ground, and will be shortly taken to pieces. The state of man in a future life he compares to a residence in a magnificent building, such as no human hands can form, and which will last for ever without being liable to ruin or decay, a building of which God is the architect, and which He reserves at present in heaven, from whence, at the proper season, He will let it down into this world. And here it is proper to observe, that the Apostle does not affirm that the virtuous in a future life will dwell in heaven, but only that the house, which is hereafter intended for them, is now in heaven, and will at the proper time descend into this world, which he more explicitly asserts in the next verse. The meaning, therefore, of the Apostle's declaration, stripped of its metaphorical dress, is this: We know that when the present frail and mortal state is passed, it will be succeeded by a state of everlasting glory and felicity, which God has prepared for all his faithful servants.

In the mean time, under the pressure of present sufferings, they look with earnest desire, not after an extinction of being, but after this happy change of state. Verses 2–4.

For truly in this tabernacle we groan, earnestly desiring to be covered with our habitation which is to come from heaven.

Under the labors and sufferings of the present life, we cannot but look and sigh for that glorious and happy state which God has prepared for us, and into which He will in due time introduce us.

Seeing that though unclothed, we shall not be found naked.

Our desires, however, are founded upon the expectation and hope that when we are removed from the present state, we shall immediately, or at least in a very short time, enter upon our new habitation; for it is not at all our wish to be excluded both from the state of trial and that of recompense, and to lie as it were unsheltered and without a name, in the silence and inactivity of the tomb.

And, indeed, we who are in this tabernacle groan, being burdened; for which reason we are desirous, not to be unclothed, but to be clothed upon, that mortality may be swallowed up of life.

In this state of frailty and suffering, we who are the heirs of the promised inheritance often groan under the pressure of affliction, fatigue, and persecution, and earnestly desire to be released from the burden. Not indeed that we desire death for its own sake, and much less do we covet that state of insensibility to which death for a time reduces us; the object of our desire is, to enter upon a new and happy state of existence, and, if possible, to escape the pains of dying, and the disgrace of the tomb, so that this frail mortal condition might be immediately and at once absorbed and lost in a state of immortality and blessedness.

Of this desire of immortality, God is the author, and the gift of the Holy Spirit is a pledge of his design to gratify it in due season. Verse 5.

Now he who hath wrought us to this very state is God, who hath also given us the spirit as the earnest of it.

It is God Himself who has excited in our breasts these holy and ardent breathings after immortality; it is God that has so clearly revealed, and so explicitly promised eternal rewards to virtue in the Gospel of his Son; and as a further proof of his merciful design, He has communicated the gifts of the Spirit to this Apostles, and through them to others, as a pledge of our adoption into his family, and of our title to the heavenly inheritance.

Desirous, as they might be, to enter upon a better and happier state, in which they should dwell with their beloved Master, they were still more solicitous to approve their fidelity to Him, whether living or dying. Verses 6–9.

Therefore, we are always of good courage, knowing, that while we are present in the body, we are absent from the Lord. For we walk by faith, not by sight. We are, I say, of good courage, and are better pleased to be absent from the body, and present with the Lord. So then we are ambitious, whether present in or absent from the body, to be well pleasing to him.

Animated by the prospect of immortality, we keep up our spirits, and persevere in our labors with undaunted fortitude and resolution. While we dwell in the present state, we cannot indeed enjoy the society of the Master whom we serve and love. Our conduct in life, and in the discharge of our ministry, must be governed by faith in the great truths of the Gospel revelation, and not by an actual perception of those glorious scenes, to the participation of which we shall hereafter be admitted. Nevertheless, although we derive so much satisfaction from the exercise of faith, we cannot but earnestly desire to be actually in the presence of Him, whom, though unseen we love, and to share in his glory and felicity. But the desire that lies nearest our heart, and which has the greatest and most habitual influence upon our conduct, the object of our best and highest ambition, is, that whether living or dying, we may approve ourselves his faithful servants, and may obtain his approbation.

The Morning Star.

Rev. xxii. 16. "I am the bright and morning Star"

This is one of the most beautiful metaphors of the Bible. It seems a happy thought that Jesus Christ, that great Shepherd of the sheep, that glorious beacon light of joy and hope to lost humanity, should in the last utterances of the book of God be styled the bright and morning Star. Among the many symbols and figures by which Christ is represented in the Scriptures, I think none is more suggestive and comforting than this.

A welcome guest after a weary night of watching is the star of day. It is the glad messenger of light and and joy. Night is a cover for all that is loathsome and diabolical. Murders, premeditated and in cold blood are not usually enacted in the light of the sun. The stillness and darkness of the midnight hour are more congenial to this dreadful business than the brilliant light of the noonday sun. Deep laid and complicated plans of treachery, theft and incendiarism, generally culminate under shadow of night.

The day star betokens deliverance from all this. It ushers in the day when doors are unlocked and left open, when special guards are released from their duty, and the world wears a happy appearance of peace and safety. A dark night of sin and moral turpitude has settled down upon our earth and its inhabitants. But the night has an end and the morning cometh.

Jesus Christ, of Nazareth, is the glorious morning star of the moral universe. He is such to individuals. Who can explain the horrors of personal guilt before God? The dark shadows of sin as they cast their blighting power into the soul of man may be realized and wept for, but can never be described nor analyzed. Sin in its generalities is not a question of much moment. But in its personal and individual character, it is a mighty problem. So long as men look upon sin only as a common and universal thing to which all alike are heir, and as a sort of arrangement of fate from which we cannot flee, so long they will not fear it, or loathe it, or seek to avoid it. But when it is brought home as a personal, individual matter, with all its crushing weight of responsibility and condemnation, then it is that we need a Savior. Then it is we need a Star of Bethlehem—a hope inspiring joy, imparting light to shine into our hearts. To all such, Jesus is not only a star heralding a day of effulgent light and glory, but also a sun, bringing the day, and with light all divine, dispersing the night, driving out every shadow, and filling all the avenues of life with joy and peace.

Jesus is a morning Star to the nations and the ages.

The wise men followed a star which pointed out the way to Bethlehem, but that was only a meteor, and led them to a shining star, whose lustre was destined to grow brighter and still brighter with the passing ages. Long ages after the meteor which led them should have faded and been lost to sight and memory, the Star of hope to which it led them will be shining in his accustomed orb with only increasing and growing brilliancy.

Jesus taught the lawyers in the temple at twelve years of age, and they marvelled at his wisdom. And when he spoke to the people, they pronounced him a prophet such as had never been before. But the past is only a hint of what is to come. His wisdom and power of knowledge thus far exhibited, is only the merest index of what is yet to come. Only a few Jews heard him and wondered—all nations are to hear him and be astonished. All people are to know him; and his doctrine is to distill like the dew, which is universal in its work.

The light that shone on Mt. Tabor at the transfiguration of Christ, was only a slight intimation of the glory that is to follow. The earth is to be filled with his knowledge, and his glory, and the peace of his reign.

Some stars that give great promise and hope, become bedimmed by thick clouds, and finally are lost entirely to sight. Not so with the morning Star of our religion. He is the bright and morning star. He passed under a dark shadow at Golgotha, but it obscured his brightness only for a time. He emerged from its gloom when the angel rolled away the stone from the door of his sepulcher. No other shadow has ever darkened his light or dimmed his brightness.

Stars set when the sun rises; so when Jesus becomes the sun of day, he will no longer be needed as the star of hope to his people.

Balaam in his wonderful prophecy of Christ, said "There shall come a star out of Jacob." But Malachi said in his still more wonderful prophecy, "To you who fear his name shall the sun of righteousness arise with healing in his wings." To the trembling and inquiring penitent Jesus appears as the Star of promise. But to the believing and trusting saint, he appears as the all-glorious sun.

In the present age of sin and moral darkness, Jesus is to the world and nations, simply a star; but as such, he is full of promise and hope to those who trust him. But in the fullness of time he will be the light of the world. His glory will cover the hills, and fill the valleys and permeate all hearts. He will then be the sun.

There is still another analogy which we may profitably trace on this subject.

The first coming of Christ as compared with his second, is as a star compared with the sun in glory. Glorious as was his first coming in its object and work, yet it was mingled with dark shadows. Great as were his moral victories, yet his life was a continual record of sorrow, trial and suffering. His life was a standing miracle, sustained at every point by the providence of heaven, and yet he was obliged to flee from the edict of a wicked king, and take refuge in a heathen land; and through the whole of his history, he was a pilgrim, homeless, and almost friendless. And finally he closed his career by the ignominy of the cross. All the allusions of the prophets to this coming of Christ are shrouded in gloom. Their pictures are all on dark backgrounds. Heavy shadows fall across the canvass, upon which the scenes of his earth life are described by the prophetic pen.

Not so, however, in regard to his future and second coming. There are no shades of sadness found in any inspired description of this grand event. He will come the conqueror and not the conquered. He will come to reign and not to suffer. He will come in judgment and not to be judged. No king's edict will then intimidate him, for the nations will become his willing subjects. No crown of rude thorns will bedeck his brow, for he has been crowned king of kings. He will no longer be subject to Satan's will, and led of the spirit into the wilderness to be tempted, for he has stood the trial and has been proven worthy of a crown and a kingdom. He will come, not in humiliation, but in glory. His friends are no longer illiterate fishermen and obscure tax gatherers, but they are the shining angels, and his worshippers the redeemed hosts. He weeps no more over Jerusalem's fallen walls and wicked children. The night of weeping is past, the morning of joy has come. To the worthy scattered flock, he is the star of morning. To the redeemed and saved Bride, he will be the "Sun of Righteousness."

C. C. MARSTON.

The Age of Indifference.

This is our age. It is a marked and growing feature of our times. Not of name, or fame, or power, or lust; but of God, of the Bible, of Christ, of religion: religion of any kind, Catholic or Protestant, Jewish, Christian or Pagan; its all one to the men of this age. They don't care a straw which of the many issues current in the work is right. There is about one only thing they do care about—money—and they don't want to be disturbed in their race for it. They can't spend the time from business, alias money, to mentally decide upon the merits of any religious question whatever. The most of them are yet willing to pay for the maintainance of religious matters in statu quo. If accident or wife, or other circumstances have conspired to bring them into a certain church, they go there without a question, and remain there without intelligence. Or into any other of the established bodies the same. Their presence there don't argue interest in religion by any means; they want to be respectable, and religion is still a badge of respectability. Besides they want a place to show their finery, and their wives' finery, of a Sunday, and so they pay roundly to keep matters going. Why they are Universalists, or Methodists, or Congregationalists, they can't for the life of them tell. They do not understand, and do not care about the real merits of any theological or religious question whatever. The days of religious controversy are over, and it is next to impossible to get men interested in the answer to Pilates' question, "What is Truth?" If an earnest man lays bare their absurdities with a keen blade, they spasmodically open their eyes, get a glimpse of that troublesome thing—the Truth, and lazily close them again and sleep sounder than ever.

Offer them a book, however clear and logical, and attractive in style, if it attacks their absurd notions which they dignify by the name of religion, they will not read it, or enter at all into the merits of the question, but lazily put it aside to be handed to you on your return. They go, if a church member, to meeting from Sunday to Sunday, and doze and nod over the stale platitudes of an indifferent declaimer or reader, whom they style "Our Minister, the Rev. Blank." But he might as well talk to them in an unknown tongue, for all they care about what he is saying to them; and for that matter, for aught he cares. Supreme indifference has taken possession of preachers and people on the subject of religion.

To maintain the popular respectable religious institution as a badge of their own respectability, and as a sugar plum thrown to an occasionally awakened conscience, is the care of the people; to get an easy and respectable living the care of the preacher; and this is about the sum of the present religious interest. Spasmodic revivals sometimes take place under the pressure of an overburdened conscience, and then everybody seems to be making up lost time; Satan himself can not outdo them in zeal. They are like an idler who has wasted a day, with the burden of an unfinished task on his mind; about sunset, they set about their work with an astonishing zeal, and reluctantly leave it with the last rays of light, but the morrow's noonday sun finds them in the bed all the same.

There are people who talk of an impending religious war; it is possible and perhaps probable; but it will never happen, because all parties to it care not a straw for true religion. But because the priesthood of the Roman Abomination are not willing to give up the loaves and fishes.

She will not give up the place and power, the power and profit of her position on the neck of prostrate humanity, without a bloody struggle, if she can find imbecile kings and superstitious subjects enough to support her in her pretentions.

People who heartily love Christ and are deeply interested in the religious welfare of their fellows, are not the ones to take part in such a struggle; but the indifferent ones are the very class from which are to be recruited the zealous and bloody defenders of "religious (?) liberty." They will awake at the last moment to fight manfully for a religion for which they never cared a straw. Their religious indifference will then prove their ruin. Zeal is a good thing, indifference a damnable thing in a worthy cause. The hearty and zealous will be rewarded and applauded; the supine and indifferent will be cut off. Now if our cause is good, where is our commendable zeal? Where our spirit of sacrifice, our devotion, our fire? Let us not shame others for crimes that lay at our own doors, nor deceive ourselves with vain imaginations. This utter lack of zeal, is no more noticeable than with us. With a few noble exceptions we are asleep. Christ said, "Occupy till I come," and we are occupying the easy chair, the lounge and the bed. In the parlor lounging, instead of out in the fields at work, bearing the burden and heat of the day. If the Master was here to-day, he would use once more his scourge of small cords and say to us, "get these things hence. My Father's house is called a house of prayer, but ye have made it a den of thieves." Now brethern there is but one word for us all. If Christ is to remain our guide, the world must be driven out. His hand is on the latch, his foot on the threshold, weeping he implores to remain; but not with the love of the world, his enemy and ours. Which shall it be, Christ or the world? Decide now, quick, or the heavenly guest departs never to return. More zeal, more love, more faithfulness, more self-sacrifice, or all is lost.

I Go a Fishing.

Simon Peter saith unto them, I go a fishing. They say unto him, we also go with thee. They went forth, and entered into a ship immediately; and that night they caught nothing." John xxi. 3.

The disciples of our blessed Lord made a grave mistake when they decided to accompany Peter on a fishing voyage or occasion, in a dark night, on the sea of Tiberias. Our Lord had selected and chosen them to be his disciples, his companions, his confidential friends, to whom he made known the mysteries of the kingdom of God. Fishing was their occupation; when they forsook their nets to follow him, he told them they should become fishers of men. What a mighty stride from the low, obscure position of tax gatherers and fishermen, to become the companions and co-laborers with the Son of God, in the new dispensation, the gospel age, to both Jews and Gentiles. They had been with the Son of God for three years, traveling through the cities of Judea; they had seen the mighty power of God, with which he was endowed and the stupendous miricles he wrought. He had delegated to them a portion of the same power and sent them out to heal the sick, cleanse the lepers, cast out devils and last but not least, to preach of the kingdom of God.

Peter, James, and John were highly favored by accompanying him upon the mount of transfiguration, where was seen in a vision a minature form of the kingdom of God, as it will be in reality when set up in the immediate future age; he enjoined it upon them, "See thou tell the vision to no man, till the Son of Man be arisen from the dead;" He had told them of his suffering and death, and of his rising from the dead. We ask, can it be possible that men that had been in the school of the Great Teacher for over three years, and had been eye witnesses of the mighty power of the Deity invested in their Lord and Master, should have so soon forgotten such an array of positive testimony in favor of his true Messiahship, and turned back to their old occupation, and said, "We trusted that it had been he which should have redeemed Israel." We will not follow the narrative further, although it is full of deep and profound interest. We wish very briefly to compare the closing intereats of the present age with their beginning. We have seen from the foregoing, what a mighty work was intrusted to the introducers of the gospel age; what vast responsibilities were placed upon men of like passions, bone of our bone, and flesh of our flesh. Were their responsibilities greater than ours? Can we leave the Master's vineyard and cease to proclaim the coming and kingdom of our Lord Jesus Christ, without incurring a more fearful responsibility; they have the prophetic scriptures, which told them of the first advent of God's Messiah, of the Child born and the Son given, and all the minutia of his coming, as the man of sorrows and the one acquainted with grief. The religionists of this age dwell long and loud on the blindness and stupidity of the Scribes Pharisees, in their rejection of Jesus of Nazareth. Did they not make as fearful a mistake as the sects and denominations have now made in rejecting the second coming of the glorified Son of God in person, to assume the reins of universal empire and rule the world in righteousness, restore all things spoken by God's holy prophets since the world began.

Once more. Can the proclaimers of the good news of the immaculate coming of him, who is to judge the quick and dead, lay down their armor and go a fishing, without incurring a more fearful responsibility than did the disciples of our Lord? I trow not. While I am writing, the names of several come to mind, who many years ago, began the investigations of the scriptures with the writer, to find out the old paths, the ground upon which the apostles made disciples and planted churches. Now dear beloved in the Lord, if I call your names, it is from the purest of motives: Brother B. Wilson, it has been quite a while since anything has appeared in the RESTITUTION over you signature. I hope you are not sick and unable to write. Brother Mark Allen's "Messenger" comes no more, nor any word from him. He used to write words of good cheer. Brother T. J. Newman, a true yoke-fellow, we fought several hard battles side by side; I hope he has not grown weary in well doing. Brother Berrick, I hope he has not gone a fishing. Brother J. F. Wilcox, I have looked over the RESTITUTION, but his signature is not attached to any of its communications for quite a while. There are others, but I will forbear. Suffer a word of exhortation from one who is your senior by many years, bowed down by the infirmities of almost four score years; the night, not only of human life, but of Gentile times, is almost spent; we certainly are in the morning watch, is not the Master standing upon the shore, saying, "Cast the net upon the right side of the ship." This subject was presented very forcibly to my mind in reading Brother J. M. Stephenson's letter, from Oregon, where he had been fishing all night, and caught nothing.

NEWELL BOND.

The Bride, the Lamb's Wife.

"Let us be glad and rejoice and give honor to him, for the marriage of the Lamb is come, and his wife hath made herself ready. Rev. 19:7.

There is a meaning in these words, which the mass of the religious world does not seem to understand. The mistaken idea of the various sects concerning the character and office of the Lamb's wife, has met with such a popular reception, that it is thought to be folly in any person who may have the courage to oppose it. Each party claiming to be only a fraction of the "one body" of Christ, and to have already entered upon the duties of the office of "the Bride," by sounding out the word, and persuading sinners to obedience. If the Church is now filling that important office, when was the marriage celebrated? And what does the above text mean? We learn from Paul's lesson, in Eph. 5, that there is a relation existing between Christ and the church, that is analagous to the marriage relation. Now it would be useless to point out to any intelligent mind the true character of a wife. For the Lord God has told us in the beginning, when he proposed giving Adam a companion, in the Garden of Eden, that He would "make an helpmeet for him." Gen. 2, 18. Now if there is any analogy between the two relations, and surely there is, from Paul's argument; then there will be a grand and glorious work accomplished by the union of this immortal pair. But tell me, are these bodies preparing themselves for any business in the coming age? And are they waiting in joyful anticipation for the happy era that is to be ushered in upon this now sin cursed earth; when the church shall have taken upon herself the nature of her beloved Spouse? O! no; they say that he is not coming in person, and all these beautiful things foretold by the apostles and prophets, are spiritual and have no literal meaning. But let them "not be deceived, God is not mocked, for whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he also reap."

Surely there is danger of being left out. For as sure as those holy men spoke the truth, so sure will they realize that "blessed hope at the appearing of the great God and our Savior Jesus Christ, who gave himself for us that he might redeem us from all iniquity and purify unto himself a peculiar people, jealous of good works. Titus 2: 13, 14. Then there is a certain body, whom he has chosen and set apart by the Gospel, to be "presented to himself," without a spot or wrinkle, or any such thing." This one body is his church, his betrothed, and not six hundred and sixty-six different bodies, all varying in character and dress. Of what a thought! Is there a husband in christendom that would sanction such an unnatural thing? No, they will say, to have a plurality of wives is polygamy, and there is no law that will protect it. Yet they think of palming of just such an absurdity upon the King of Kings. But he knows his waiting bride, "She is fairest among ten thousand and altogether lovely." but she must first pass through the refiner's fire, and "array herself in fine linen, clean and white;" not until she has made herself ready, and comes forth clad with an immortal nature like her living nature, like her living head, will she receive the title and office of wife. Think not that her term of duty has then expired; no, she has just entered with her Kingly Spouse, into the great work of restitution. With him she sits upon a royal throne "that the residue of men may seek after the Lord," and, to bless the nations with a righteous form of government. Now of friends who differ with us, I ask, will not this be glorious time? Do not think for a moment that there is no reality in all this. Unless you are one of that select number, rest assured the door will be shut against you. O, Church of God, arise from thy lethargy; put on thy beautiful garments; deck thyself in thy wedding robe; and prepare to meet the Bridegroom.

The Throne of David.

BY GEORGE, DUKE OF MANCHESTER.

I shall now consider the promise to the Virgin: "The Lord God shall give unto Him the throne of his Father David." To sit upon the throne of any one, in its fullest sense, perhaps embraces the idea, not only of reigning over the particular geographical division; (as it might be said that Ahasuerus of the seed of the Medes was made king over the realm of the Chaldeans); but it would also include being the legitimate descendant; for which reason it could not be said that Solomon sat upon the throne of Saul, it being another dynasty. And thirdly, reigning over the same people is included; for example, when the Israelites were removed from their land, and the other nations brought up by a Assnapper, then it ceased to be the throne of Israel. In this passage, however, as if to prevent the possibility of any mistake, these points are all expressed:

1. The Throne "of David."

2. The Dynasty, "his Father David."

3. The people, "He shall reign over the House of Jacob;" i. e. the twelve tribes.....

The promise having been given to Mary, it must be made good. But Christ did not sit upon David's throne in the days of his flesh, for then he would have continued to sit there; because he is to reign "forever," and just before the ascension of the Lord, the Apostles looked forward to the restoration of the kingdom as an event still future. Nor in Christ sitting on the throne of David whilst he is in heaven; for he is sitting on the throne of God; and we must not confound the throne of God with the throne of a creature. The promise, then, remains yet to be fulfilled; which I shall further attempt to establish from the first chapter of Acts.

Our Lord, for forty days after his passion, discoursed with his apostles "of the things pertaining to the kingdom of God." This did not hinder them from asking him before his departure whether he would at that time restore the kingdom again to Israel. We must, then, conclude that our Lord's discourses for those forty days respecting the kingdom, were not inconsistent with the views involved in this question. But, on the contrary, the "therefore," shows that the question of the disciples sprang from their previous conversation with Christ about his kingdom; "being seen of them forty days, and speaking of the things pertaining to the kingdom of God; when they, therefore, were come together, they asked of him, saying, Lord, wilt thou at this time restore again the kingdom to Israel?" for we have already seen that the kingdom of God, and Christ's reign over the tribes of Israel are identical.

Be it observed, moreover, that the Apostles did not seek knowledge as to the fact that the kingdom should exist, nor as to the nature of that kingdom;—we have already seen that they had by the transfiguration been informed on this subject—they simply inquired as to the time when it should be; hence, as we have seen that they knew about what they were talking, their question takes for granted and establishes two points:

1. That the kingdom was to be restored to Israel.

2. That up to that time the kingdom had not been restored.

The restoration of the kingdom to Israel is synonymous with re-establishing "the throne of David," which was to be not only by the power of the Lord, but in the person of Jesus; for when the Lord shall give unto him the throne of his father David, then will he reign over the house of Jacob, that is, over the twelve tribes of Israel.

Our Lord, in his answer, denying explicit information respecting the time when the kingdom shall be restored, implicitly but clearly confirms the fact of its restoration.

The Apostle shortly before had asked him, "What shall be the sign of thy coming, and of the end of the world?" He answered, "This Gospel of the kingdom shall be preached in all the world for a witness unto all nations, and then shall the end come." So referring to the information already given, he says to this effect: "Though the kingdom will not be established when you receive the promise of the father, yet you shall then be qualified to proclaim the glad tidings of the kingdom, witnessing unto me both in Jerusalem, and in Samaria, and unto the utmost parts of the earth."* Hence, upon the outpouring of the Spirit at Pentecost, Peter declares the commencement of the dispensation of the last days, which will continue until the great and notable day of the Lord come.

Many seem to suppose that Peter quotes the prophecy of Joel ii. 28, 32, as if it were completely fulfilled and exhausted on the day of Pentecost, so as to be no longer applicable to any future period, but I think they mistake the intent of the quotation. The Holy Ghost had been poured out, and some visible effects of his miraculous powers had ensued. Upon this Peter urges the promise that in the last days there should be an effusion of the Spirit, mentioning the miraculous effects there detailed; but it is remarkable that the identicle gifts of language, which marks the ushering in of the dispensation of the Spirit, is one of the very few gifts of the Spirit not mentioned in the prediction; hence the accomplishment of Joel could not terminate in the gift of languages. The application of the prophecy, indeed, refers not to the detail of the effects, but to the fact of the presence of the Spirit in the church; very little of the detail in Joel having been accomplished on the day of Pentecost. The turning of the sun into darkness and the moon into blood, prior to the coming of "the great and notable day of the Lord," is as yet wholly unfulfilled. . . . .

The Apostle proceeds to show that this gift of the Spirit flows from the risen Lord:

"Jesus, the Nazarene, a man approved of God among you, by miracles and wonders, and signs, which God did by him in the midst of you, as ye yourselves also know; him being delivered by the terminate counsel and fore-knowledge of God, ye have taken, and by wicked hands have crucified and slain."—Acts ii. 22, 23.

The miracles of Christ, and the fact of his crucifixion, were undeniable. But the next proposition was the great point to be proved.

"Whom God hath raised up, having loosed the pains of death; because it was not possible that he should be holden of it.

I do not understand the Apostle in this verse to assign as a reason why God raised him up, that it was not possible he should be holden of death; this would be no argument with a Jew not willing to be convinced. Had it not been possible, physically considered, for death to hold him, it had been unnecessary for God to exert His power in raising him up. But it was not possible, in accordance with the truth of God, that he should be holden of death, because the Psalmist when under inspiration had predicted otherwise: "For David speaketh concerning him. . . . 'My flesh shall rest in hope; because thou wilt not leave my soul in hell; neither wilt thou suffer thine Holy one to see corruption."

This is Peter's next assertion; that David by the Spirit of prophecy did speak in Psalm xvi; concerning the resurrection of Jesus. Several propositions are involved in this assertion:

1. God had promised to David that the Messiah should descend from him. (ver. 30.) 2. That the Messiah should be raised up (i. e. from the dead) to sit upon his throne. (ver. 30.) 3. That Psalm xvi. did speak concerning the resurrection of some one from the dead, without his seeing corruption. (ver. 31 with 27.) 4. That the individual was not David himself. (ver. 29.) 5. That this individual should be Christ. (ver. 30.) 6. That Jesus was raised up; i. e. from the dead. (ver 32.)

It will be seen that all the points advanced by the apostles are supported by Psalm xvi. except the matter of identity, the evidence concerning which is partly negative and partly positive; that David had not been raised up, was a matter of general notoriety; hence David had not been speaking of himself.

"Therefore, being a prophet, and knowing that God had sworn to him, with an oath, that of the fruit of his loins, according to the flesh, he would raise up Christ to sit upon his throne; he seeing this before, spoke of the resurrection of Christ."—Acts ii. 30, 31. . . . .

The oath of God is admitted to be that mentioned in 2d Sam. vii. 12, 13, upon the interpretation of which I need not enter, the point of importance in our present inquiry being the promise that God "would raise up the Christ to sit upon his throne," it is here introduced to justify and strengthen that which David said in Psalm xvi. concerning one to be raised from the dead; for so Peter applies it. "He seeing this before," that is, David previously to writing the Psalm, understanding God's promise to refer to the resurrection, he therefore in that psalm "Spake of the resurrection of Christ." . . . .

"Therefore being by the right hand of God exalted; and having received of the father the promise of the Holy Ghost, he has shed forth this which ye see and hear."

The Apostle appears in this verse to advance two more propositions.

1. That Jesus is at the right hand of God exalted:

2. That Jesus has received of the Father the promise of the Holy Ghost; from which he deduces that Jesus has shed forth that which they saw and heard. The whole proof is taken from the first verse of Psalm cx. which records that He who, according to Psalm xvii. should ascend into the presence of God, was in relation of Lord to David; and secondly, that this Lord of David should sit at God's right hand. But in order to bear the weight of the Apostle's conclusion, this last proposition must take for granted two more important truths:

1. That this Lord of David is the Christ.

1. That the session at God's right hand involves the fact of all power and authority having been transferred by the Father to the Messiah.

That the Jews acknowledged David's Lord to be the Christ, is evident by Jesus silencing them by this very question,—"How, then, does David in spirit call him (the Christ) Lord?" Matt. xxii. 43. . . . . .

The inferences which I shall draw from this passage are:—

1. That the throne of David is the throne of the Annointed, or Christ.

2. That the reign of Christ upon the throne of David was to be after his resurrection; this accounts for the Apostle's, (when Jesus had risen), asking, "Lord, wilt thou at this time restore again the kingdom to Israel?"

3. The reign of Christ upon the throne of David was to be after the dispensation of the Spirit. Christ did not sit on David's throne, when he ascended into heaven; for then he sat on God the Father's throne, not as David's Son, but as David's Lord, when even the Holy Spirit himself was subordinate to, and dispensed by Him.

The descent of the Spirit marked the commencement of the dispensation of the last days, during which "whosoever shall call upon the name of the Lord shall be saved;" the close of the dispensation will be defined by the coming of "the great and dreadful day of the Lord;" after which will follow the reign of Christ upon the throne of David.

*As the Apostle did not learn until after this that the call extended to the Gentiles, (Acts x. 45.) they probably understood the witnessing to the uttermost parts of the earth, to be limited to the Jews who were in "every nation under heaven." (Acts ii. 5.)

The Christian's Hope.

When weary and worn with toils and cares incident to this life, how sweet is the hope of being made free from the many things "that wear out pleasure" here. We meet with so many discouragements, when we are trying our best to do what we think is right, but we may expect all this until the time comes "when Christ who is our life shall appear," to remove the curse from the earth, and restore it once more to its Eden beauty. Then all our pains, troubles, cares and fears will be in the past; no more to be remembered. Then we shall realize the hope that is so dear to us now, that gives us peace when prostrated by disease, and brought to the verge of the dark and dreary tomb, for there, even amidst the darkness gleams the glorious promise of the resurrection, to a life that shall never end. Here we are pained to see our loved friends and neighbors so careless and unconcerned about the blessed truths and promises our Lord has left for all those that love his word, to see them living as though this life was all we are to have. Let us who profess to have this "blessed hope" strive each day to live nearer to our God, that "they seeing our good works may be constrained to glorify our Father who is in Heaven."

EDNA.

The Walk of Faith.

Were I going along a path of difficulty and danger, with an invisible arm extended towards me for me to lean upon, yet now and then stumbling and falling—how very different a reflection would it be that I fell because this arm was withdrawn for a moment, or had been unable to bear my weight, from the knowledge that I had fallen just because for a moment I had ceased to lean, and trusted to my own strength. In the former case, distrust in the arm would be the result of my reflections on my fall, and I would be afraid to lean on it again; in the latter, the only natural determination would be to lean upon it again more entirely, and to watch that I ceased not my dependence upon it.

So then, in my walk with God as my Father, in that holy path in which his arm sustains me, I rejoice to know that his arm is never wearied, and that neither is it ever withdrawn; and that when I fall, I only learn that I had ceased to depend, not that He had ceased to extend the support which I needed. Knowing this, my falls never can have any other effect than to increase my childliness, and cherish dependence, and initiate me more and more into that blessed knowledge, that through Christ strengthening me I can do all things, yea, all things. There is provision in Christ so abundant, in respect of all things pertaining to life and godliness, that were we living up to it we would be as Christ was, not of the world. "As the living Father hath sent me, and I live by the Father, so he that eateth me, even he shall live by me. So, were all our acts the results of a perfect faith in Christ, and were we so dwelt in by the Holy Spirit, proceeding to us from Christ, that we thought not our thoughts and spoke not our own words, and that in short we did nothing of ourselves, but that Christ did all in us, then we would be continually more than conquerors. And for this I say there is provision, and less than this we are, only because we are not living up to that provision. Most humbling, most invigorating thought! Most humbling, because it so reproaches our unfaithfulness; most invigorating, because it reminds us of our unproved strength, our unapplied wealth, that is for us, in Him in whom dwelleth the fullness of the Godhead for us. And what is that fullness? What is this our wealth—our little enjoyed wealth? It is the mind of God revealed in the work of Christ; and the Spirit of God in Christ to enable us to enter into and sympathize in that mind of God, by taking of the things of Christ and showing them to us. Truly we have provision made for that high calling wherewith we are called, even that we should praise the Lord in the beauty of holiness; for this calling we have provision when we have redeeming love for our theme, and the Holy Spirit for our teacher.

Cease, I pray you, to dishonor God's great love by doubting it; but at once give glory to God, the Most High, by joyfully trusting it.—F. Mc Leod Campbell.

Cedars of Lebanon.

Dr. Coleman, in his admirable Biblical Geography, thus describes these historical trees:

"Lebanon, that 'goodly mountain,' and the cedars thereof, the pride of its forests, are so often mentioned in the history of Solomon as to deserve a passing notice.

"The cedars are about 40 miles northeast from Beirut, nearly 7,000 feet above the level of the sea, and 1,000 feet below the summits of Lebanon, which stand around to shelter and protect them on the north, the east, and the south. The little dell occupied by the cedars is not far from 210 yards diameter. They are about 400 in number, and are from 1 foot to 3, 4 and 5 feet in diameter; several are from 6 to 10, and one is 40 feet in circumference a short distance above the ground, where it soon sends off 6 immense branches, each from 3 to 5 feet in diameter, which shoot up almost perpendicularly, thus, in reality, constituting 6 trees of immense size. Many of the cedars are dual, a few triple and quadruple, slightly diverging a short distance above the ground, and forming independent trunks, straight and beautiful.

"No certain estimate can be formed of the age of these trees; but if we may rely on the circular grains as chronicling their ages, those of 6 feet in diameter may be probably some 2,000 years old. At this rate the giant trees above mentioned may have braved the tempests of 4,000 winters. Its mighty boughs spread abroad its branches before the days of Abraham, and carried even Noah himself to recline beneath its shade. The largest and oldest of the cedars (12 in number) retain little symmetry or beauty. Their majesty is now their greatest charm. None of the works of man, not even those of Karnac and Baelbec, so impress and awe the mind. They are the works not of man, but of God—'the cedars of Lebanon which he hath planted.' One aged tree, having a defect in its trunk near the ground, has thrown out a large, strong arm to another 12 feet distant, which perfectly unites itself with this arm, sustains and supports its venerable, but infirm companion."

Endure Hardness.

The soldier's life is full of toil. Absent from home, deprived of the luxuries, and even the comforts of life, he must endure what he cannot avoid, and seek to accomplish the work desired by him who has called him to be a soldier.

But the hardships of the Christian warrior's lot are far more desirable than the more coveted pleasures and indulgences which the world affords. There is safety in enduring hardness, weariness; poverty, privation, and toil. Uriah in the camp of Israel was safer than king David was at home, where, idling his time away on the house-top, he was led into sins and sorrows untold.

Many a man exalted, honored, petted, caressed, adored, and envied too by those who walked in lowliness around him, has been ensnared, dishonored and degraded, until in his secret heart he would gladly have changed places with the peasant at his toil, with the beggar on the dunghill, with the poorest, meanest, lowliest child of God, so he might have the comfort of a quiet conscience, and the silence of a forgotten grave.

Man of God, endure hardness! The bowers of pleasure are not for you. Hard, busy, earnest, honest work, is your best safeguard against sin and the sorrow it brings. Delilah's lap may be a quiet place to lay a weary head, but poor blind Sampson, shorn of his strength, mocked by his foes, clanking his fetters of brass, and turning the mill-stone in the Philistine dungeon, could tell you a tale which would spoil the pleasure of such gentle dalliance.

Endure hardness. Get acquainted with economy, hardship, poverty and toil. Lay out your strength in good, honest labor. Spurn the baits, the luxuries, the phantoms, and the snares, that are set before you for your ruin. Fast, pray, crucify the flesh, keep the body under, be temperate in all things, and be sure that the sweet sleep of the laboring man, and the hunger by which every bitter thing seems sweet, are better adapted to your temporal and eternal good, than all the pleasure, luxury, and lazy leisure which you so often envy in those that have their portion in this world. The prophets were poor, the apostles were poor, the saints have been poor, and the Son of God was poorest of them all. Be content to share their lot. If the bed be hard you will rise the earlier; if the bread be coarse, the appetite will be the keener; and if the fare is scant, then you escape the dangers of gluttony, dyspepsia and apoplexy, not to mention the hot lusts of the flesh, that "fulness of bread and abundance of idleness" have ever inflamed and fostered, from the days of Sodom down.

Endure hardness, and be strong in the grace of Jesus Christ. Count crosses, trials, and distresses as a joy and a rejoicing to your soul. And remember that poverty, bereavement, hunger, thirst, cold, and nakedness, are all easier to bear than the secret guilt or open shame, which sooner or later comes on all who, debased and enfeebled by luxury and indulgence, yield to sin and are led away into forbidden paths. Well may we endure hardness, rejoice in trials, and suffer all sorrow, pain, and even death itself, rather than be led astray from God, and thus bring reproach upon Christ's cause, and guilt and sorrow on our souls.—The Christian.

The Safety of Youth.

That picture in which Satan is represented as playing a game of chess with a young man for his soul—the enemy wary and furtive, the youth careless and gay, trying to save him—is graphic and to the life, in its description of the season of youth, and its decisions and perils. And the worst of it is, that the trial of it comes to the very youngliest; so that the most important decisions, and arrangements to business and family relations, in companionships, habits, residence, are often made upon one in pulse, or with little reflection.

Many a person, late in life, will say: If I made a good choice then, there was not much wisdom of my own in it; God must have guided me. The great security of the young, when passing through the sifting season, is in crying out, "My Father, thou art the guide of my youth," and in having the Savior's protection and prayers, as Peter did. Let them seek them earnestly, and they will know not hopeless fall. A wrong road taken at their age is usually a long one, without a turning. Let them look at cases coming within their own observation, and see in how many of them the character remained for life pretty much according to the turn it took in youth, and they will feel that that is indeed a sifting season. A young man's face streaked with dissipation, will be apt to show its deepened lines and hues in old age. How many a parent has seen the pleasant child unfolding sadly into the godless youth, like a sun arising in brightness, but going into a cloud; and that followed by a deepening gloom, till evening and night set in, with tempest and utter darkness! No doubt the merciful Lord would say to the young, in his emphatic words of warning, "Satan hath especially desired to have you, that he may sift you as wheat." Let their heart-cry be: Lord, pray for me, that I fail not.

Waiting.

Most people are in a hurry. Men make haste to be rich; make haste through all the business of life; hasten on to the common bourne—the silent grave. If you wish to bring some matter to the attention of a business man, the probabilities are that he hasn't "time just now;" or, he will attend to you when he isn't in "quite so much of a hurry." We travel by steam and converse by lightning, and in almost every sphere of activity there is a proportionate rush, and tear, and tension, until at last nature succumbs to the terrible strain, and paralysis, softening of the brain, or some other form of physical or nervous prostration follows.

This feverish haste in things temporal, is also seen in things spiritual. Now, while "the King's business" may require haste, and whilst an earnest devotion to His service is necessary, yet there may be zeal which is not according to knowledge; there may be a bustling activity which is of the flesh rather than of the spirit. Truly hath the prophet said, "He that believeth shall not make haste."

While everything around him is involved in the rush and whirl of this busy life, the Christian involuntarily catches the same spirit, and is drawn into the same haste, and becomes impatient of the delays of divine providence, like those of whom it is written, "Woe to them that say, let Him make speed, and hasten his work, that we may see it; and let the counsel of the Holy One of Israel draw nigh and come, that we may know it." Isa. v: 19.

When rebellious Israel departed from God they took counsel, but not of him; they sought strength, but not at his hand; and while they were assured that the help they sought should be "in vain and to no purpose," a solemn voice cried, "Their strength is to sit still," and "In returning and rest shall ye be saved; quietness and confidence shall be your strength;" and it was also declared, "The Lord is a God of judgment: blessed are all they that wait for him." Isa. xxx.

Waiting is sometimes the hardest kind of service, but it may also be the most acceptable. The Lord's time is also the best time; his way the best way. In our restlessness and haste we might go too fast, and so bring confusion and disaster. It is the part of a faithful messenger to go when he is sent, not before. Until the word comes to us, our strength is to "sit still." Obedience is better than sacrifice, and while we are kept waiting we may be learning such lessons of faith and hope, we may be gathering such a store of wisdom and experience, as we could gain by no other means;—such a store as we may greatly need in the work which awaits us in the Master's own good time. The soldier who silently stands on guard is as really doing service as the one who is in all the din and tumult of the battle. So those humble ones who are called to quiet and obscure service for Christ, are as really doing his will as those in more public or more exalted stations. And those who have learned in faithfulness to do the humble work, or in patience to "wait" for the Lord, may reasonably expect when their faithfulness and patience shall have been sufficiently tried and perfected, to be called to higher and more important duties; for he who has approved himself in that which is least, is judged to be faithful also in much: and for such at last the word will be, "Well done."—*W. EDITORIAL DEPARTMENT.

Personal Items.

Brother J. F. Wilcox is to spend a part of the month of February in Grand Rapids, Mich., and from there he goes to Dixon, Ill.

Brother J. M. Stephenson is to speak in Buchanan, Mich., Sunday, Jan'y 31. From there he goes to Canada to remain a few weeks.

Elder D. R. and Mrs. M. S. Mansfield, formerly of Buchanan, Mich., but now of Minnicepolis, Minn., have joined the Methodists. 'Tis well.

☞ We just returned from Goodland, where we spent Sunday last, preaching three times, to interested audiences. Goodland is an active, enterprising town, located on the Toledo, Peoria & Warsaw Railway. The people are intelligent and industrious, and have shown much interest in hearing the good news of the kingdom of God. A goodly number have expressed their intentions to become identified with the Hope of the Gospel. We expect to visit them again in four weeks, and proclaim the good message of life and immortality through Christ the great Teacher.

Since our visit to Goodland in October, Sister Sarah I. Dyke has fallen asleep in Jesus. She was a most estimable woman, having the respect of all who knew her. She was baptized by the writer during his labors there last October. Her faith in the coming reign of our Lord, and that He was the Life-giver, was strong and clear. She died in the full hope of having a part in the first resurrection, and a crown of glory that fadeth not away. May we all strive for that blessed home where death comes not, and where partings cease.

The Veil was Rent.

"And the veil of the temple was rent in twain."

These are the words thrown in by our Lord's biographer, to give emphasis to the awful scenes of the crucifixion. The veil of the temple was of crimson and gold, and hung between the holy and the most holy places of the Lord's house. Beyond the second veil no one was permitted to enter but the great High Priest, who there held communion with the Invisible.

The veil has always been used as a covering. Under the law it was used as a symbol to keep from view the glory of God. Moses, when he came down from the mountain, with the two tables of stone, placed a veil over his face, because of the glory of Jehovah. When the tabernacle was reared in the wilderness, the most holy was made invisible to the hosts of Israel, by means of the veil. The temple of Solomon had the wonderful curtain of crimson which kept from mortal gaze the cherubim, the mercy-seat, and the ark of the covenant. The flaming sword at the gates of Paradise performed the sacred office of guarding the entrance to the tree of life.

Christ, the great Antitype of Moses, appeared among men as a messenger of immortal honors, bearing tidings of peace and love to the fallen of earth. The glory of God was to be manifested in greater splendor than ever before, and mighty events were crowded into the life of Jesus. Heaven's love and brightness were to shine on earth. The veil was provided. The old veil was rent in twain, the rocks were rent, the earthquake shook the ground, the sun was veiled in sackcloth, and darkness brooded over earth and sky. These were the death throes of the old dispensation. Divine glory had been shining out through the Sun of Righteousness, but its splendor was veiled in flesh. The ineffable brightness of the Invisible one was shrouded in the earth life of Jesus. As the Israelites could not behold the glory of Moses, and the veil became a necessity, so the Word was made flesh and dwelt among men, and they beheld through this veil the glory of the only begotten Son of God. A new and a living way has been provided. The glory of Moses, with the ministration of death, written on tables of stone, is done away. The veil which rendered the ark of the covenant invisible, was rent in twain. The law is dead, but the Gospel lives. The blessed message of life is now to be written on the fleshly tables of the heart, as we are under the ministration of the Spirit, and not the letter. But the veil yet remains on the hearts of many who read Moses, which veil was done away in Christ! 2 Cor. iii. "Nevertheless," says Paul, "The veil shall be taken away" when "they turn to the Lord." "Having therefore, brethren, boldness to enter into the holiest by the blood of Christ; by a new and living way, which he hath consecrated for us through the veil, that is to say, his flesh." Christ then has passed beyond this veil of flesh, into the immortal life, and although once known in the flesh He has passed beyond its temptations and its sufferings. He is our forerunner, and we, even in this mortal state, can have that hope which is as an "anchor of the soul, both sure and steadfast, and which entereth into that within the veil."

The hope reaches over death and beyond all sufferings, and anchors in the blessed promises of a kingdom and eternal life. Our hope is to follow Christ, and as He has passed beyond the veil of his flesh—or mortal life, so may our hope follow Him into that within the veil of the immortal and endless blessings which pertain to his new life.

Then all obscurity shall cease, no veil shall hide from view the splendors of his kingdom and we shall see face to face, and behold as in "a glass the glory of the Lord," and shall be "changed into the same image from glory to glory, even as by the Spirit of the Lord." 2 Cor. iii. 18.

The old veil, then was rent, the glory of Moses is at end, the tables of stone and the ministration of death have ceased. The new and living way, and the new covenant belong to the "ministration of the spirit which exceeds in glory." Having then these assurances let us hold fast, firm unto the end. Our hope reaches beyond the flesh, and is anchored within the holiest of all. When that blessed state shall arrive, and the tabernacle of God shall be with men He will destroy the veil of the covering, cast over all nations, and the rebuke of his people shall He take away from off all the earth. Then will come the day of unclouded vision, and the mysteries of life shall be solved, and all those who shall be found in the living way, will behold the glory of God, beyond the veil of all things temporal, and share the things eternal.

Trine Immersion.

Another argument for trine immersion is supposed to be deduced from the trinal formula contained in the commission. Matt. xxviii. 19, 20. It is claimed that a seperate immersion into each name is required instead of one immersion into the conjoined name of the Father, Son, and Holy Spirit. That we may understand the leading idea of the commission, we must refer to other Scriptures to ascertain what relation obtains between God and his people who obey his requirements. God commissioned Moses, when he sent him into Egypt to the children of Israel, to say:—"And I will take you unto me for a people, and I will be to you a God." Ex. vi. 7. At Sinai he entered into a solemn covenant with them to make them "a peculiar treasure above all people,"—"a kingdom of priests and a holy nation,"—on condition of obedience. This covenant was subsequently confirmed in the manner narrated. Ex. xxiv.

This was all preparatory to an arrangement of prescribed forms by which the children of Israel might become the consecrated and acknowledged people of God, upon whom he would bestow the honor of bearing his name. After the tabernacle had been set up, and everything necessary to its sacred ministrations had been placed therein, after the shekinal glory of the Lord had filled its holy courts, God directed Moses to consecrate Aaron and his sons to the office of the priesthood. After sprinkling the blood and holy oil of consecration upon them, and enjoining upon them to remain within the tabernacle for seven days, they were commanded to perform certain atoning ceremonies for themselves and for the people who were gathered in one vast assembly before the tabernacle.

When the atoning sacrifices were all offered, and the ministrations of the day were all duly performed, it was the closing act of the solemn performance, for the High Priest to come to the door of the tabernacle, and, with hands reverently uplifted, bless the congregated people. Compare Ex. xl. and Lev. viii, ix. Now this act of blessing was for the specific purpose of placing the Divine Name upon them. Let us figure to ourselves the magnificent spectacle; the beautiful tabernacle with "the cloud of the Lord" brooding in glory over it; the *waiting thousands standing in awe-*struck admiration "under the very shadow of the Almighty;" the fearfully significant ritual services within the Holy Courts; and finally, in the moment of intensest expectation, the magnificent appearance of the High Priest, arrayed in his robes of glory and beauty, wearing the mitre and the holy crown, standing majestically before them, and with hands devoutly raised toward heaven, repeat the trinal formulary that put the name of the Most Holy upon the consecrated tribes.

"The Lord bless thee, and keep thee. The Lord make his face shine upon thee, and be gracious unto thee. The Lord lift up his countenance upon thee, and give thee peace."

By this trine invocation in one grandly, glorious ceremonial the chosen nation was formally inducted into the name of their Sovereign God.

"And they shall put my name upon the children of Israel; and I will bless them." Subsequently this privilege was held in the highest regard. "And all people of the earth shall see that thou art called by the name of the Lord; and they shall be afraid of thee." Deut. xxviii. 10. "We are thine; thou never barest rule over them; they were never called by thy name" is the language used when speaking of Gentile nations. Isa. lxiii. 19.

This privilege, that was once exclusively Israel's has been extended to the Gentiles by the promises of the Gospel. At the council of the apostles and elders convened at Jerusalem, James announces the purpose of God in these words; "Simeon hath declared how God at the first did visit the Gentiles, to take out of them a people for his name."—Acts xv, 14.

Of the Father of our Lord Jesus Christ "The whole family in heaven and earth is named."—Eph. iii, 15.

The apostles were commissioned to enter upon the work of evangelizing the world to bring believing, obedient Gentiles into the family of God—the "house of God," where they are "no more strangers and foreigners, but fellow-citizens with the saints, and of the household of God."—Eph. ii, 19. God has "predestined us unto the adoption of children by Jesus Christ, to himself according to the good pleasure of his will, to the praise of the glory of his grace, wherein he hath made us accepte! in the beloved." —Eph. i, 5, 6. Here it is distinctly stated that we are acknowledged as children only as we are "in the beloved." In order then to become the children of God, and attain the honor of wearing the Divine name, we must be "In Christ." We get into Christ by faith and baptism; "For ye are all the children of God by faith in Christ Jesus. For as many of you as have been baptized into Christ, have put on Christ."—Gal. iii, 26, 27.) Baptism brings us into Christ; in Christ we become the children of God; becoming children, we become rightfully entitled to the Father's name, and the Divine name belonging, alik to Father Son, and Holy Spirit, is formally bestowed by a solemn invocation of each name in the ordinance of baptism.

As it was by a trinal formula that the Divine name was placed upon Israel, so it is by a trinal formula that the name of the Eternal Father is placed upon obedient Gentiles. Neither under the law, nor under the Gospel, is the induction into three names, but into the one Divine name, belonging alike to Father, Son, and Spirit. The best critics are agreed that the preposition should be rendered "into" here, (Matt. xxviii. 19,) as it is in other places, when we are said to be baptized "into death," "into one body," and "into Christ." It does not require three distinct acts to come into the filial relation, but one act, though the formula of induction be of a threefold character. We illustrate this by a reference to Luke ix. 26, where the coming of the Son of Man is the subject of discourse: "For whosoever shall be ashamed of me and of my words, of him shall the Son of Man be ashamed, when he shall come in his own glory, and in the Father's, and of the holy angels." Literally this reads, "In the glory of himself, and of the Father, and of the holy angels." Now we ask, does it require three comings, one in each of the three glories here spoken of, in order to fulfill this declaration? No indeed, He comes once in the glory of Father, Son, and angels, as we are baptized once into the name of Father, Son, and Holy Spirit.

We will examine the "one baptism" more fully in our next. Note. Some typographical errors occurred in our last. The references to John the Baptist should read John i. 25, 31, and chapter iii. 23, instead of the way they read in the third paragraph.

Those words will not thaw the hearer's heart, that freeze on the preacher's lips.

Those that are the most humble and most serviceable, are really the most honorable.

Though God has made us greater than the beasts, many degrade themselves below them.

The Place of the Christian's Reward.

"Thy will be done in earth as it is in heaven." Matt. 6, 10.

It is not my object to write on the subject of prayer, or the kingdom, or how, or when the prayer in my text will be fulfilled, or to dwell on the blessed condition when the will of God is done as it is in heaven. There is no better condition of things promised in the Bible than the fulfillment of this petition. It seems to be the consummation of all the promises. We can have no higher conception of blessedness than what we conceive to be done in heaven. Therefore in this prayer is concentrated the whole of God's final purpose concerning this world.

But my object at this time is to show one single point.

THE PLACE

where all the promises in the Bible will be fulfilled. To learn this one fact unmistkably, will be a good beginning in our understanding of the Bible. When we have learned the place where the scriptures are to be fulfilled, we have learned one of the essential things to be understood in order to understand them. I will call attention to a few passages of scripture to prove this one fact, that

IT IS IN THE EARTH.

"Now the Lord had said unto Abram, get thee out of thy country, and from thy kindred, and from thy father's house, unto a land that I will shew thee, and I will make of thee a great nation, and I will bless thee, and make thy name great, and thou shalt be a blessing: and I will bless them that bless thee, and curse him that curseth thee; and in thee shall all families of the earth be blessed." Gen. xii. 1, 3. The things mentioned in this promise are to be fulfilled in the land which God showed to Abram, and in all the earth. "And the Lord said unto Abram, after that Lot was separated from him, lift up now thine eyes, and look from the place where thou art northward, and southward, and eastward, and westward; for all the land which thou seest, to thee will I give it, and to thy seed forever. And I will make thy seed as the dust of the earth; so that if a man can number the dust of the earth, then shall thy seed also be numbered." Gen. xiii. 14, 16. All of this land will be given to Abram and his seed forever, and the multiplication of his seed will take place in the land.

"And I will establish my covenant between me and thee and thy seed after thee in thy generation, for an everlasting covenant, to be a God unto thee and to thy seed after thee, and I will give unto thee, and to thy seed after thee, the land of Canaan for an everlasting possession, and I will be their God." Gen. xvii. 7, 8. "And thy seed shall possess the gate of his enemies. And in thy seed shall all the nations of the earth be blessed." Gen. xxii. 18. This covenant with Abraham concerning his seed, and concerning the nations, will be fulfilled in the land promised to him, and in all the earth. This promise to Abraham is the basis of all the promises in the Bible, and there is no intimation of any other place for its fulfillment than the earth. The earth is to be his everlasting possession.

When Moses was in trouble in the wilderness on account of the murmurings of the children of Israel, the Lord said unto him: "As truly as I live, all the earth shall be filled with the glory of the Lord." Num. xiv. 21. Whatever there is in this promise that is desirable and assuring to the people of God, is to be fulfilled in the earth.

To David the Lord said: Thy seed will I establish forever, and build up thy throne to all generations. Psa. lxxix. 3, 4. His dominion shall be from sea to sea, and from the river to the ends of the earth. In his days shall the righteous flourish, and abundance of peace. So long as the moon endureth, all nations shall call him blessed. And blessed be his glorious name forever, and let the whole earth be filled with his glory. Psa. lxxxii. 7, 8, 17, 19. These exceeding great and precious blessings are to take place in the earth, and to remain in the earth forever, as long as the sun and moon endure.

"Behold, the righteous shall be recompensed in the earth." Prov. xi. 31. The whole and the everlasting recompense of the righteous will be in the earth. "The righteous shall inherit the land and dwell therein forever." Psa. xxxvii. 29. The righteous shall never be removed from the earth. Prov. x. 30. All the promises concerning the righteous then, must be fulfilled in the earth.

"For unto us a child is born, unto us a son is given, and the government shall be upon his shoulder. Of the increase of his government and peace there shall be no end, upon the throne of David, and upon his kingdom, to order it, and to establish it with judgment and with justice from hence*forth even forever.*" Isiah ix. 6, 7. The throne of David will be in Mount Zion in Jerusalem, and therefore in the earth, under the influence of this government, "The knowledge of the Lord shall fill the earth as the waters cover the sea." Isaiah xi. 9. "The twelve tribes of Israel shall dwell in the land in which their fathers have dwelt, they and their children and their children's children forever." Ezk. xxxvii. This land is in the earth.

"And the kingdom and dominion, and the greatness of the kingdom under the whole heaven, shall be given to the people of the saints of the Most High, whose kingdom is an everlasting kingdom, and all dominions shall serve and obey him." Dan. vii. 27. This kingdom is over all the earth.

After the Lord comes and all the saints with him, and his feet stand upon the Mount of Olives, He shall be king over all the earth. Zech. xiv. 9. Whatever is meant by his reign, it will be over all the earth.

"The Son of man shall send forth his angels, and they shall gather out of his kingdom all things that offend and them that do iniquity.—Matt. xiii 41. This kingdom will be on the earth where the wheat and tares grow. Then shall the king say unto them on his right hand, come, blessed of my Father, inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world."—Matt. xxv, 34. This kingdom where these nations dwell, is the kingdom which was prepared when the world was made. "There shall be weeping and gnashing of teeth, when ye shall see Abraham, and Isaac, and Jacob, and all the prophets, in the kingdom of God, and you yourselves thrust out. And they shall come from the east, and from the west, and from the north, and from the south, and shall sit down in the kingdom of God."—Luke xiii, 28, 29. This kingdom is in the land promised to Abraham and his seed, for an everlasting possession.

"For thou wast slain, and hast redeemed us to God by thy blood out of every kindred, and tongue, and people, and nation; and hast made us unto our God kings and priests; and we shall reign on the earth."—Rev. v, 10. After the saints have redeemed to God by the blood of Christ, their reign will be on the earth.

"The kingdoms of this world will become the kingdom of our Lord, and his Christ; and he shall reign for ever and ever."—Rev. xi, 14. These kingdoms are in the earth. The Lord will then become King over all the earth. "And he showed me a pure river of water of life, clear as crystal, proceeding out of the throne of God and the Lamb. In the midst of the street of it, and on either side of the river, was there the tree of life, which bare twelve manner of fruits, and yielded her fruit every month; and the leaves of the tree were for the healing of the nations. And there shall be no more curse, but the throne of God and the Lamb shall be in it, and his servants shall serve him and they shall reign for ever and ever.—Rev. xxii, 1-5.

This is after the made to Abraham has been fulfilled, so there is no more curse. This is in the land promised to Abraham for an everlasting possession. All the promises in the Bible will have their fulfillment in this great, and grand, and glorious consummation, when the will of God will be done in earth as it is done in heaven, and for ever and ever beyond.

THE SUMMING UP.

If Abraham and his seed are to have an everlasting possession, it will be in the earth.

If all the nations of the earth are to be blessed, and to serve the Lord as long as the sun and moon endure, it will be done on this globe. If the Lord wants to assure his people against all discouragements, He says: "As truly as I live, the whole earth shall be filled with my glory." The righteous shall be recompensed in the earth, they shall inherit the land and dwell therein forever.

The earth shall be full of the knowledge of the Lord as the waters cover the sea.

If the Lord is to be king, his kingdom will be over all the earth, where all people, nations, and languages dwell, that they may serve him for ever.

If there is a kingdom promised to the saints, it is the greatness of the kingdom under the whole heaven, that all dominions may serve and obey him.

If Abraham, and Isaac, and Jacob, and all the prophets sit down in the kingdom of God, it is in the place where the wicked have dwelt, the land promised to Abraham.

When Christ returns after receiving the kingdom, he will give to one ten cities, to another four cities, &c. These cities are in the earth.

And when all the promises in the Bible shall be fulfilled, Christ and the saints will occupy the throne of David, and have power over the nations, and the will of God will then be done in the earth as it is done in heaven, and of this kingdom there will be no end.

Are there any promises in the Bible which designate any other place of reward for the people of God.

JOEL A. SIMONDS.

Grand Rapids Mich., Jan. 1876.

Are You Looking for Him?

I do not ask if you know the day or the year when He is coming—whether you understand all of Daniel or all of the Revelation, or all of any of the prophets; but are you looking for Him? He who was "the coming One" for four thousand years, bids us look for him again. He is still "the coming One," and bids us now, as he has bidden his church since he went away, "watch." to "be ready," to "look for" "his appearing." He pronounces a blessing on those whom he shall find thus watching and waiting, and a woe upon those who say, "My Lord delayeth his coming."

It is not enough to say he is coming to some one or other all the time—that he comes to all at death, that the promise of his coming is figurative, and all that. He went to heaven in a bodily shape, and the words are, "He shall so come in like manner." Acts i, 11. He shall come with all the glory of his Father, and with hosts of angels; he shall come with the sound of a great trump which shall arouse the dead, "and every eye shall see him." For his coming we are bidden to look. Some think that just now there is peculiar force in the injunction—that the time is close at hand, but whether it is or not, the duty is clear to be looking for the time, and to consider well the admonition, "Take heed to yourselves, lest at any time your hearts be overcharged with surfeiting and drunkenness, and cares of this life, and that day come upon you unawares;" for those who are thus taken unawares will find the door shut, into which the bride and bridegroom have gone to the marriage feast, and if they apply for entrance they will hear a voice from within saying, "I never knew you." Is it not well to be looking?

Repentance.

FRIEND RESTITUTION:—

On first page about midway of the fourth column, in this your five hundred and fifty-ninth appearance among the people, you ask: "What is repentance?" You answer, "A turning away from that which we know to be wrong."

Then you give Scripture illustration. Matt. xxi. 28, 29. "A certain man had two sons; and he came to the first, and said, Son, go work today in my vineyard. He answered and said, I will not; but afterward repented and went."

Now my friend, I do not think repentance is a turning away from that which is wrong or "that which we know to be wrong." If it did, it would have been unnecessary to add that "he went," saying that he "repented" would have been all that was necessary, as it would then have been a complete explanation of what took place.

Repentance is SORROW OR REGRET for that which we have done, that we know is not acceptable unto God, or in accordance with his laws. It may extend to the wishes, demands, and requirements of our fellowmen as well. We can turn away from that which is wrong, that is, we can quit doing what "we know to be wrong," and still not repent. A giving up is not repentance. We have never been asked to repent of our future, but of our past.

The selection says: "He answered and said, I will; but afterward repented." That is, he reflected, he thought of what he had done, had said,—he was sorry for it, regretted it, and, as a consequence of that regret, sorrow, thought, and reflection, "he went," showing by that, that he did repent, but the turning and going was not the repentance that took place before "he went."

The Happy Man.

All people want to be happy. But remember my words this day. The true Christian, the believer in Christ, the converted man, he is the only happy man. Such an one is in an ark. When the last fiery deluge is sweeping over all things on the surface of the earth, it shall not come nigh him. He shall be caught up, and borne securely above it all. He is in christ. Such a one is in a hiding place. When God arises to shake terribly the earth, and men are calling to rocks and mountains to fall upon them and cover them, the everlasting arms shall be thrown around him, and the storm shall pass over his head. He shall abide under the shadow of the Almighty. He is in Christ.

Such a one is rich. He has treasures in heaven which cannot be affected by worldly changes. He need not envy the richest merchants and bankers. He has a portion that will endure when bank-notes and sovereigns are worthless things. He has Christ. Such a one is insured. He is ready for anything that may happen. Nothing can harm him. Banks may break, and governments may be overturned. Famine and pestilence may rage around him. Sickness and sorrow may visit his own fireside. But still he is ready for all, ready for health, ready for disease, ready for tears, ready for joy, ready for poverty, ready for plenty, ready for life, ready for death. He has Christ.—J. C. Hyle,

When we deal with God, we must deal on trust.

THOU SHALT DIE.

"Set thine house in order, for thou shalt die and not live."—Isa. xxxviii. 1.

"Thou year thou shalt die."—Jer. xxxii. 16.

With equal foot death strikes the door
Of royal halls and hovels poor;
Calls rifled prince and fettered slave
To equal rank in common grave.

Some eyes that read my measured lines,
Ere the bright sun of new year shines,
'Neath dewdrops sparkling o'er their bomb,
Will sightless close in joyless gloom.

Some father kind, that smooths the hair
Of prattling childhood at his chair,
Will leave that child the orphan's fate,
And wife to mourn her widowed mate.

The sunshine of some mother's face
Will leave some home a darkened place;
And broken hand, through coming years
A desert pathway wet with tears.

Some son in coffin's narrow space,
In death's last dress, will find a place,
With pale hands clasped above that breast,
Near'h which a heart has stopped to rest.

Death's spalling hand, too, will erase
The rose blush from some daughter's face,—
In the cold specter's withering shade
The fairest flute of beauty fade.

Then seek in world to cause a snare,
The spoiler's foot ne'er enters there;
No tears are shed, no loved one dies,
No graves are opied in Paradise.

Gleanings.

Columbus, Kansas.

BROTHER REED:—Monday, Jan. 11, I commenced a debate with C. W. Harvey, a Quaker, upon the nature of man, at the Burger school house, five miles from Columbus, Kansas, which was continued four nights. The interest was good, the house being filled every night, notwithstanding the extreme cold weather. Friday and Saturday nights I had the privilege of listening to the discussion between Brother Myres and Elder J. A. Murray, a Campbellite, which commenced on the 13th inst., and closed Monday night, the 18th. inst., at which time I commenced the discussion with friend Harvey, on the subject of the Kingdom of God, which closes to-night. The interest is increasing, and I hope for good results. No time to write more now.

Bev. J. C. Kinney is now in our county at work, and the people are being aroused as never before. Brother Kelley is doing good service. Pray for us. Yours in love,

AMOS SANFORD.

My meeting is still going on at Rosehill, Iowa, and the interest is so great that I have to close it. Twenty-eight have already come out on the side of truth, and have taken a firm stand to live in view of the coming kingdom; and we expect a number of others. I have procured a number of subscribers for the RESTITUTION, which I will send you at the close of my meeting. Your Brother, in hope of eteral life. A. F. DUDGER.

Antoina, Arkansas.

BROTHER REED.—I have been waiting to get some new subscribers to your paper; as they seem not to be ready, I have concluded to write in order to let you know that there is some interest manifested in our portion of the country, religiously. A few years ago I was alone in the faith. My friends and relatives would tell me that my faith was nothing more than a chimera of the brain; besides it was both dangerous and obnoxious doctrine. Now we number some twenty members. A goodly number of these had a similar opinion of the faith, but having the scales taken from their eyes, they now realize the fact that there is but one faith one Lord, and one baptism, and that without a resurrection at the coming of our Lord, man is lost.

JAMES L. CALLAWAY.

Newburgh, Ohio.

DEAR BRETHREN:—

It is not often that I write to you, but as I am renewing my subscription for the year 1875, I may be permitted to express my thoughts to the Brotherhood concerning our isolated position. It is plain to me, by reading Paul's Epistles to the church at Corinth, that we are not allowed to join any of the man-made organizations for the purpose of relief in case of sickness or death. See Paul's second Epistle to church of Corinth, sixth chapter, fifteenth and following verses. What concord hath Christ with Belial, or one that believeth with an infidel? Come out from among them and be separate, saith the Lord; touch not the unclean thing and I will receive you, and will be a father unto you, and ye shall be my sons and daughters saith the Lord God Almighty. Comments not necessary.

Since we cannot join man-made, or worldly organizations, let us unite to help each other in temporal things, as firmly as we are in the one faith and hope of the Gospel, we are the one body of the Christ, himself being the head. If one member suffer, then all the other members should suffer, our Lord and Master says. John xii. 34, "A new commandment I give unto you that ye love one another as I have loved you, that ye also love one another; by this shall men know that ye are my disciples, if ye have love one to another." 1 John iii. 16. "Hereby perceive we the love of God, because He laid down His life for us, and we ought to lay down our lives for the brethren. But whoso hath this worlds goods, and seeth his brother have need and shutteth up his bowels of compassion from him, how dwelleth the love of God in him. My little children, let us not love in word, neither in tongue, but in word, and in deed and in truth."

I see that our Brother Hornaday has fallen asleep in Jesus, and as I see in the RESTITUTION, that Sister Hornaday has need of our sympathy and help; now suppose each brother in these United States should send to the editor of the RESTITUTION ten cents and upward, according to his means, for Sister Hornaday. We should show our love by our works, and what we give to the poor, we lend to the Lord. Think of it, brethren, the Lord our debtor! however, he has bought us and paid the ransom.

A. F. JONES.

Newtonia, Mo.

I have nothing very encouraging to say of this section of country at present. Had two years in succession of half crops. Taxes and expenses high, and a great deal of complaining of hard times. We are better pleased with the climate in south-western Missouri than in Iowa, but man's days here, as elsewhere, are few and full of trouble.

I stand on the side of all men, having one chance of life in Christ, and see no occasion for its causing a division of the one body.

I shall do what I can to extend the circulation of the RESTITUTION, and hope it may be sustained.

Your Brother in Christ,

E. D. ADAMS.

Providence, R. I.

BROTHER REED:—

Will some of our able brethren please give through the RESTITUTION a review of Thomas Paine's Age of Reason. I have been reading the work for the first time, and find it full of inconsistencies and contradictions, and I am satisfied that there are brethren who can show it up in its true light and completely overthrow all his arguments against the Bible. I know of many p...sons myself, who, if it were not for this book, would embrace the truth as it is in Jesus. I was talking with an infidel yesterday, who said, that if he could see that Mr. Paine was wrong, and the Bible right, he would believe as I did; for, said he, you talk the most sensible of any one I ever heard. Therefore I do earnestly hope that some of our brethren will take this matter in hand at once. The book can easily be obtained. It is published in Boston, Mass., at the office of the "Banner of Light," No. 158 Washington street, and sold at 60 cents per copy. Wishing you a happy and prosperous New Year, with health and strength of body and mind to battle for the truth, and contend earnestly for the faith once delivered to the saints, I am your brother in the hope of the soon coming kingdom of our Lord.

ALEXANDER FISHER.

THE HARVEST-HOME OF HEAVEN.

The only people who share in the blessed harvest-home of heaven, are God's people—such a people as he has had in every age—a people called out from the world, marked with holy signs, set apart unto God, and signalized in faith and hope, and life, as those whose fatherland is heaven. Such were the patriarchs of former ages, who saw the promises, and were persuaded of them, and embraced them, and confessed that they were pilgrims and strangers on earth. Such were the prophets, who prophesied beforehand of the sufferings of Christ, and the glory that should follow, and searched and inquired diligently into those blessed things which also the angels desire to look into. Such were those in the early ages of the Church, who held fast the name of Jesus, and denied not his faith even when the fires burned to consume them, and the blood of confessors flowed like water. Such were those whosighed and cried, through the gloom of the middle ages, over the abominations that were done, and shook the torch of Jehovah's truth afresh, that the nations in darkness might see and live. And such are those in every land, of every tongue, of every age, who show by their lives and testimony that they seek a heavenly country, and look for a city whose maker and builder is God. Be they Africans among the burning sands, or Finns among the perpetual snows; be they Arabs in their tents, Druses in their mountains, or sons of Japhet in their costly homes; be they deep in obscurity, unknown to the world around them, or high up the steeps of renown, with their every movement blazoned over the earth; if they have turned from idols to serve the living God, and to wait for his Son from heaven, they are the children of God, and on their way to join the glad harvest-home of the new creation in the New Jerusalem.

And what a glorious assembly rises to our view as we look forward to that mighty celebration! How grand its worship! How splendid its praises! How sweet its songs!

Hark! the sound of holy voices Chanting at the crystal sea;
"Hallelujah, hallelujah, Hallelujah, Lord, to Thee!"

Blessed company! Blessed festival. Would God that we were there.—Dr. J. A. Seiss.

The disappearance of the Danube between Moehringhen and Immiodingen, on the frontier of the Duchies of Baden and Wurtemburg, is a curious natural phenomenon. For at least half a century it has been noticed that some portion of the water of the river flowed into cavities in the calcareous rocks —Jura limestone—to re-appear again near the town of Aach, in the Hobgan; now the whole body of water disappears in the vast cavities which have been formed.

A temperance meeting at Fond du Lac, Wis., has issued an address in which it is said; Our observation and experience has taught us that the temperance army can do more good by pursuing the policy that has been adopted in this part of the state than in any other manner, viz: By bringing to bear all the moral influence at our command; by unceasing personal effort; by constantly laboring to get men to reform and to return to the path of reason, right and duty; by earnest endeavors to get the young and non-drinking classes impressed with the dangers that follow habits of intoxication; in short, by working where, when, and how we know will bring good results.

The Reading (Pa.) "Times" thus refers to to the death of a local giant. On Wednesday morning Mr. Wm. Kupp, aged 21 years, residing near Douglasville, and celebrated throughout that section for his remarkable weight, died suddenly. Mr. Kupp was a wonderfully framed man, weighed 450 pounds, and some idea of his immense size may be gathered from the fact that the calf of his right leg measured 29 inches in circumference. He was five feet eight inches in height, and was, without doubt, the heaviest man in the United States. He was said to have been a singularly handsome man, and his unusual size did not seem to detract from his personal comeliness.

Guide for Holy Living.

Let us be on our guard against old self in every form, whether it be indolence, or temper, or coldness, or rudeness, or disobligingness, or slovenliness, or shabbiness, or covetousness, or flippancy, or self-conceit, or pride, or cunning, or obstinacy, or sourness, or levity, or foolishness, or love of pre-eminence.

Let us cultivate a tender conscience avoiding crotchets, and conceits, yet watching against the commission of little sins, and the omission of little duties, redeeming the time, yet never in a hurry; calm, cheerful, frank, happy, genial, generous, disinterested, thoughtful of others, and seeing we must protest against the world, on as many important points, let us try to differ from it as little as possible on things indifferent, always showing love to those we meet with, however irreligious and unlovable, especially avoiding a contemptuous spirit or an air of superiority.—H. Bonar.

It Will Come

Though the coming of the final consummation be slow, it will come. There is not another truth in God's word that is so peculiarly authenticated. All the holy prophets since the world began have foretold it. All the evangelists and apostles have inwrought it in all their writings in the Divine purpose. Jesus himself has given parable on parable, precept upon precept, and promise upon promise, all directed to this one thing. And God hath certified it to all men, in that he hath raised up Christ from the dead. But after all the rest of the canon of inspiration was finished, another book was indited, making this its particular and specific theme; and in that book is a particular vision, in which the mighty Judge himself appears, and gives forth the most intense and awful asseveration on the subject. With clouds for his garments and the rainbow for his crown —with his face shining as the sun and his feet glowing like pillars of fire—with a roll in his hand, lifted by his merit from the throne of infinite majesty, he stretches up his right hand into the sky, and sweare—swears by the Eternal—swears by the power which has given birth and being to all things,—that, in spite of all the mistakes, disappointments, delays and consequent doubts upon the subject what was made known to the prophets shall be, and that the time shall come when there shall be no more delay!

Shall we then have any doubt upon the subject? Shall we allow the failure of men's figures and prognostications to shake our confidence or obscure our hope? Shall we suffer the many and long delays that have occurred, or that ever may occur, to drive us into the scoffer's ranks? True as the life of God—certain as the divine eternity—unfailing as the power which made the worlds—immutable as the oath of Jesus—the great consummating day will come, when the whole mystery of God shall be fulfilled. Unbelief, away! Misgiving, be thou buried in the depths of the sea! Doubt, be shamed into everlasting confusion! "Behold He cometh with clouds, and every eye shall see Him, and they which pierced Him. Even so, Amen."

Holy One of heaven, have mercy upon us, and help us hold fast the profession of our faith without wavering; for He is faithful that promised.—Dr. Seiss' Lectures on the Apocalypse.

Love Not the World.

Wealth is like a bird; it hops all day from man to man, as that doth from tree to tree, and none can say where it will roost or rest at night. It is like a vagrant fellow, which, because he is big-boned and able to work a man takes in-doors and cherisheth; and perhaps for awhile he takes pains, but when he spies opportunity the fugitive servant is gone, and takes away more with him than all his service came to. The world may seem to stand thee in stead for a season, but at last it irrevocably runs away, and carries with it thy joys, thy goods, as Rachel stole Laban's idols; thy peace and content goes with it, and thou art left desperate. Honor must put off his robes when the play is done; strength, though like Jeroboam, it put forth the arm of oppression, shall soon fall down withered; beauty is like an almanac; if it lasts a year, it is well; and as for pleasure, it is like the lightening, a flash and away. The world itself is not unlike to an artichoke; nine parts of it are unprofitable leaves; about it there is a little picking-meat; and in the midst there is a core enough to choke them that devour it.

O, then, set not your hearts on these things. Let the stableness of God's mercy to us, work a stableness of our love to Him; and howsoever, like the lower orbs, we have a natural motion of our own from good to evil, yet let us suffer the higher power to move us supernaturally from evil to good. Our ripeness of Christianity must overgrow fluctuant thoughts. The God of constancy would have his to be constant. Be steadfast in your faith in him. "Continue in the faith, grounded and settled, and be not moved away from the hope of the gospel." Col. i. 23. "Be steadfast in your faithfulness to man, promising, and not disappointing." Psalms xv. 4. No man can turn Christ from thee unless thou turn thyself from Christ; for Jesus is the same yesterday, to-day, and for ever.—Thomas Adams.

Family Worship.

How sadly it is neglected on every hand, and even sometimes among our own people; and when attended to, how often it is cruelly perverted, and reduced to a heartless formality. An exchange thus speaks on this point:

There ought to be no sweeter hour in the day than that in which come the morning meal and family worship. Yet it is sorrowful to see what sometimes passes for the latter. A chapter of the Bible hurried through, stereotyped prayer mumbled over, and the participants rush off to the work which they enjoy a great deal better. The exercise is wrapped up in fog, instead of being crowned with heaven's light. It is a mistake to suppose that fluency or education are especially needed in conducting family worship. It wants a heart most of all. Let there not be a single petition that is not born of real desires—even if the prayer be not two minutes long. Blessed be the home where the spirit of song dwells and adds its charm to the morning worship! The exercise need not be long, but it should not be crowded. Break up the formality; carry all the soul-life you have into it; and its savor shall not go through the day alone, but among all the home memories none shall be stronger to hold the grown up children to the faith of their fathers.

The Sins of Youth.

Young men do not remember, as they might, how the early firmness, the early resistance of temptation, gives its coloring to the whole future life. They do not mean to go far. They do not mean to pollute their souls without hope of recovery. There is a kind of lurking feeling, even if they do not confess it to themselves, that one day they shall be able to put off these pleasant vices, and address themselves in all seriousness to a nobler, because a more self-denying life. And I do not question that there have been cases where the better thoughts have at length prevailed, where the spirit of God has taken possession of the heart, and the spirit of evil has been cast out. I do not deny that there have been instances where a life of early profligacy has been succeeded by a life of devotion to Christ; where even the recollection of time wasted and talents abused may have given a tenfold zeal and earnestness to the faith of the man who has been set free from his chains, and brought into the liberty of Christ. But even where it has been so, if you could read the inner history of such men, if you could see them on their knees bitterly upbraiding themselves before God for their youthful sins, if you could witness their hours of anguish, if you could hear them confessing how often and often and often the old temptations come back, come back with tenfold force because the tempter knows how often he has triumphed in the past, how often the very recollection of past sin itself is a fresh suggestion to sin—if you could see and hear all this you would not dare, any of you, to make light of sin, or trample with the grace of God. And even while we acknowledge the possibility of a restoration, of the return of the prodigal to his father, we cannot but tremble when we remember how often it has been otherwise.—J. S. Perowne.

THE BOLTED DOOR.

"Behold I stand at the door and knock. If any man hear my voice and open the door, I will come in to him and sup with him, and he with me."—Rev. iii. 20.

God is knocking,
Ever knocking,
At the heart's tliree bolted door,
Which we're locking,
Ever locking,
As we oft have done before,
And we hear, yet hearing, heed not,
While we faster bolt the door.

He is calling,
Ever calling,
In a soft and gentle tone,
To the fallen,
And the falling,
To the weary and the lone,
Still they answer not the summons,
Till the Spirit-voice has flown.

He's entreating,
Ever entreating,
By his mercy, by his care,
Knocking, knocking,
And repeating,
Calling, calling, this his prayer;
"Let me enter!" Hear it mortal,
Open wide the sin-locked portal.
Hear it, mortal, open quickly,
God is waiting at the door.

THE EXPOSITOR.

[Under this head we shall give important criticisms, from the ablest scholars and editors, and also insert valuable historical extracts, on such subjects as will more fully illustrate Bible truth.]

God has been pleased, at different times, to enter into covenant arrangements with mankind. These covenants have been ratified by the death of certain sacrificial victims. There are two ways of giving, validity to the stipulations of a covenant. By the one way the contracting parties themselves are both present and pledge a fulfillment of its terms; and by the other, the stipulations are made known and acceded to through a mediator. In Gen. xv., we have an account of the making of a covenant between God and Abram in reference to an innumerable posterity and a grant of the land of Canaan for an inheritance. Under God's direction, Abram took certain victims, and divided them, (the birds excepted) and laid the pieces one against the other. It was the custom, when both contracting parties were present, to pass between these pieces in order to give the most solemn assurance, and pledge of intention to carry out all the terms of the contract. In this particular instance, the "smoking furnace and lamp of fire," that passed between the halves, are the symbols of the Divine Being, as one party, while Abram passed in his own proper person. By this passing between the severed parts of the slaughtered victims was that covenent ratified that embraces promises requiring for complete fulfillment, not only the dispensational times of the law and of the Gospel, but the "times of the restitution of all things," and the unfolding developments of ages to come. In Exodus xix., we have the account of a covenant between God and the nation of Israel, which is made through the intervention of a mediator. God, through Moses, proffers certain honors and blessings to Israel on condition of obedience to certain requirements. Moses, as mediator, makes all known to the representative elders of the whole people; on behalf of the whole people, the elders heartily accept the terms and pledge implicit obedience to all God requires; Moses returns their answer to God, who then makes known his requirements in the ten commandments and other legal stipulations, in a book which Moses in turn reads to all the people,—to which they respond in a body: "All that the Lord hath said will we do, and be obedient." Ex. xxiv. 7. Then the covenant is ratified as described in Ex. xxiv. 8, and more fully by Paul in Heb. ix. 19. The words of Moses are: "behold the blood of the covenant which the Lord hath made with you concerning these words"—the words of the sprinkled book. This covenant waxes old and vanishes away, and God makes a new covenant made valid by more precious blood, Of this new covenant Jesus Christ is the Mediator, High Priest, and sacrificial victim. The Apostle declares that "He is the Mediator of a better covenant which was established upon better promises." Now this covenant is Paul's theme in his epistle to the Hebrews, in chapters vii. viii. ix, and x. And in chapter ix. he gives us a special account of its ratification. It is an unfortunate circumstance that our translators have introduced the terms "testament" and "testator" as though God was making a will and devising goods and chattles instead of entering into solemn covenant arrangements, which are ratified by the precious blood of a Redeemer.

We now proceed to give the translation and paraphrase of McKnight, who is sustained by many other able critics and translators.

MCKNIGHT'S PARAPHRASE.

"For if the blood of bulls and goats, offered by the high priest, and the ashes of an heifer, sprinkling the polluted, did, by the appointment of God, sanctify to the cleansing of the flesh, so as to fit the offender for joining in the tabernacle worship, how much more reasonable is it that the blood of Christ, who in obedience to God suffered death, and through the eternal Spirit, being raised from the dead, offered Himself a victim without fault to God, should have merit sufficient to cleanse your conscience from the guilt of works which deserve death; that is, banish from your mind the fear of punishment, that ye may be fit to worship the living God with the hope of acceptance. And for this reason, that the death of Christ is so efficacious of the new covenant he is the Mediator or High Priest, by whom its blessings are dispensed; and also the sacrifice by which it is procured and ratified; that his death being accomplished for obtaining the pardon of the transgressions of the first covenant, believers of all ages and nations, as the called seed of Abraham (Rom. viii. 43,) may receive the promised eternal inheritance.

For to show the propriety of Christ's dying to ratify the new covenant, I observe, that where a covenant is made by sacrifice, there is a necessity that the death of the appointed sacrifice be produced.

For according to the practice of both God and man, a covenant is made firm over dead sacrifices; seeing it never hath force whilst the goat, calf, or bullock, appointed as the sacrifice of ratification, liveth.

Because from the beginning God ratified his covenant by sacrifice, to preserve among men the expectation of the sacrifice of his Son, hence not even the covenant of Sinai was made without sacrifice.

For when Moses had read every precept in the book of the law to all the people, taking the blood of the calves and goats which had been offered as the sacrifices of ratification, with water, and scarlet wool, and hyssop, he sprinkled both the book of the law itself as representing God, and all the people, in token of the consent of both parties to the covenant, saying, while he sprinkled the people, This is the blood whereby the covenant which God hath commanded to make with you is ratified both on his part and yours."

God did not, through Moses, make a will or testament to the children of Israel,—but entered into a covenant with them made valid by sacrifices. Neither does He, in the new arrangement, makes will or testament through Christ, but makes a covenant, sealed by the precious blood of the Son of God.

The length of our article prevents giving translations and notes. If the reader will read the italicized words in the above paraphrase, he will have McKnight's translation.

Flee to the Mountains.

The time of "fleeing to the mountains" will be the subject of an article or two, which we hope to make interesting, by reasoning on the subject, taking the most literal view of the subject. It is proper to state that the question has been sprung from time to time for several years, and several writers have added a few proofs, but still enough to make it as clear to others as desirable. After we give our views let others come up and add their views, by which means only can we speedily arrive at the truth. We shall constantly aim to take the proofs literally, and see what the result will be.

We begin by quoting from Matt. xxiv. 15–23. "When you therefore see that detestable thing that makes desolate, stand in the holy place, . . . then let those who are in Judea flee to the mountains." We quote from Anderson's translation.

The "holy place" is the temple, and whatever that "detestable thing" was it must occur at the temple, in the holy place, and that occurrence was to be a token to get out of the city, field, and country, because a thing must transpire which was already written, called the vengeance. But now let us go back and see the question asked the Lord by four disciples, to see what these answers relate to. Luke xxi. 6, 7. "As for these things which you see, the days will come when there shall not be one stone left upon another that shall not be thrown down. And they asked him, saying, Teacher, when shall these things be? and what shall be the sign when these things come to pass." Here is where we wish men to make the turn, that is, stick to the question, and then the answer, which is relative to "when" the stones of the temple are to be thrown down, for we shall insist earnestly and fearlessly that the temple is to be thrown down, at the Lord's advent, by an earthquake. What the Lord gave in answer as a sign when those stones were to be thrown down, was his own appearance in the clouds of heaven, which He calls "the sign." Let us come out and say that the temple was never at any time thrown down, but invariably burnt down; which will not be denied, but in this case it requires to be "thrown down." No one ever said that the buildings of Chicago were thrown down during the fire, but burnt down in every case. Nor do men say when earthquakes throw down buildings, they were burnt down. Now do not forget that Mark and Luke both state the question plainly to the Lord, about when the stones of the temple should be thrown down. Not one intimation did the Lord give of the invasion of the Roman army, but taking the three witnesses who have reported it they were to wait for the army to encompass the city, and then the, whatever it may be, it was a thing "standing in the temple of God, showing himself that he is God, and that event is the sign to govern them about when to "flee to the mountains," for the reason that a thing is to happen at the house of God, where judgment is to begin—that it is like Sodom. We say they never had such warning to leave, nor can it be proved that the Christians did leave when Titus besieged the city. It is claimed by many that long before Titus came Cestius came, and then the Christians left. But all this is assumption, as there is no reliable proof of it. And even if there is proof, it is proof that they misunderstood the Lord, for never did they see any unusual occurrence happening in the "holy place.' Be patient and let us look into Josephus' history, and see what, and how things did occur. But first we should refer to another report recorded by Luke, of this same event, in "fleeing to the mountains." It is in chapter xvii. where the Lord was talking to his disciples about his coming, which would be like the lightning shining from one part of heaven to the other, and He adds: "In that day let not him that is on the housetop, and whose stuff is in the house, come down to take it away. Likewise he that is in the field, let him not turn back, remember Lot's wife." Verses 31, 32. Now read Matthew's report and you see when they are told to flee to the mountains," the same charge is given not to go into the house to take goods, but get out. He says, when told to flee, "Let him that is on the housetop not come down to take his goods out of his house, and let not him that is in the field turn back to take his clothing." Matt. xxiv. 16–18. Now is this the same occurrence just quoted in Luke xvii. 31, seeing the same words are used? Both relate to the same event, and we have positive proof in the latter that it is when the Son of Man is revealed, it is to be "in that day." There is no escaping this conclusion.

Now as we said we must for a while leave Scripture and examine Josephus, to see if, in the Roman war, there was any necessity for even pregnant women to escape, or any one else. It is true the six months' siege was desperate, like all such that ever happened. This is what Josephus says; "For Titus let a great number of them go away into the country whither they pleased."—Book v. chap. x. sec. 1. Then again he said, when they wounded him, "to come out upon the security that would be given them."—Chap. xii. sec. 3. Then he says in another speech made to them, pleading the good intentions of the Romans, "Unto this very time take care to have our laws observed, and almost compel those sacrifices to be offered to God which have by thy means been intermitted."—Book vi. chap. ii. sec. 1. And again he says, as the interpreter to negotiate for Titus: "If you will throw down your arms, and deliver up your bodies to me, I will grant your lives, and I will be like a mild master of a family, what cannot be healed shall be punished."—Chap. vi. sec. ii.

Here we must pause and wonder why it was that they were to flee from the Romans, not ever going into the house to take out anything, and this was so great a time of distress as called for pity upon pregnant women, when the truth was, no women, nor men either need have fled the country, as we shall prove yet, that no confiscation nor conscription was made. And it will not do to say that the Lord's advice to them to flee was unnecessary.

Now let us hear Josephus again, about the great distress and danger in the land. "And indeed many there were of the Jews that deserted every day, and fled away from the gates, although their flight was very difficult, since they had guarded every passage out of the city, and slew every one that was caught at them, as taking it for granted that they were going over to the Romans, yet did he who gave them money get clear off, while he who gave them none was voted a traitor. So the fact was this, that the rich purchased their flight by money while none but the poor were slain."—Book iv. chap. vi. sec. 3. Why could not the Lord have told them how easy, if they had money, they could get out of the city even after the siege had lasted long, and not distress their minds with reports of the most calamitous nature that had ever, or ever would occur. And to be consistent, certainly they should have been told the truth about the Roman war, if it was that He was speaking of. You may say the temple is not there now, and therefore it cannot be as I say. So exactly the throne of David is not there, and still the fulfillment of Scripture requires it to be there. So not a whit is to fail. And it is constantly asserted that the event of the Jewish war, the siege of six months was the most distressing that ever happened. But even the little we have quoted about it proves it untrue. When the ten tribes were besieged three years and a half at Samaria, by the Assyrians, they underwent more distress in proportion to the length of time it lasted. 2 Kings vi. 25.

According to the Lord's own summing up after giving a long catalogue of events He says: "This (that, as Storrs renders it) generation shall not pass till all those things shall be fulfilled." All then He spoke of were limited to a generation, and in the answer to the question for a sign when the stones of the temple are to be thrown down, He says: "Then shall appear the sign," you asked for, when the stones of the temple and buildings of it were to be thrown down. Mark and Luke's reports both show this perfectly clear, and Matthew's, connecting the coming in the question shows perfectly clear that the disciples all knew his advent and throwing down the temple, and fleeing out of it were to be at the same time.

The subject is inexhaustable, and not a mystic passage is relied upon to sustain the same thing, even down in Moses' prophecy, then in all the holy Scriptures the idea we maintain is perfectly clear by being expressed literally. And it will be expected that we sustain our views by all the Scriptures in harmony, we so will, if the Lord will, purposely for the edification and growth of knowledge of many who have already considered the matter.

All who read this, lay it aside for re-reading, and then preserve it as from a false prophet, for events must sooner or late turn up to make this same question of the greatest importance.

Submitted to the brethren for the sake of Truth and the love of it.

A Letter from Sister Abby A. Perry.

To the readers of the RESTITUTION I wish to say, though I am far from all of like precious faith, yet I love all who love the truths of the Bible, and especially the great truth of the "restitution of all things, which God has spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began." But when I hear men say and teach, that He will restore all things that have ever existed, or all men, or all nations, I do not believe it, for I have searched the Scriptures diligently for twenty-five years on the restitution theme, and have failed to find any such promise. God has promised to restore the throne and kingdom to Israel, but He has not promised to restore those Israelites whose carcasses fell in the wilderness; for Paul asks, "But, with whom was he grieved forty years? was it not with them that had sinned, whose carcasses fell in the wilderness? And to whom swore he, that they should not enter into his rest, but to them that believed not? So we see that they could not enter in because of unbelief." Heb. iii. 17–19. "Let us labor therefore to enter into his rest, lest any man fall, after the same example of unbelief." Heb. iv. 11. It seems very hard for men to keep on the track of truth, even after they have been once enlightened. Jesus said, "Strait is the gate and narrow is the way that leadeth unto life, and few there be that find it." Now, I cannot reconcile this with the idea that all men are to have life somewhere in the future! O to abide in the Word of God, where He has made known his will, is a great thing in these days of fables, and misrepresentations! I have long been a believer in the age, and ages to come. My views are in harmony with Brother Joel A. Simonds and many who write for the RESTITUTION. I believe God's purpose is prospective, not retrospective. I do not understand it to reach after any that have died in the past, but those who have died in faith. It seems to me if David spoke as moved by the Holy Ghost (the spirit of eternal truth) Psa xlix. and xxxviii. will convince any unprejudiced mind, that the "wicked will never see life," no matter how much he may have been honored in this life. "Nevertheless (or notwithstanding all their wealth and all their plans) man being in honor, abideth not; he is like the beasts that perish." "Like sheep they are laid in the grave." Now the conclusion, that any sane person must come to, without prejudice is, that when beasts have a resurrection, such persons will, who have died without understanding. "He shall go to the generation of his fathers, they shall never see light." How much such persons seem to enjoy in this life! "Their eyes stand out with fatness, they have more than heart can wish. They are corrupt and speak wickedly; concerning oppression they speak loftily. And they say, How doth God know, and is there knowledge in the Most High? Behold these are the ungodly, who prosper in the world; they increase in riches." And David was envious of them until God showed him in vision, their destruction. Psa. lxxiii. Again David exclaims: "O Lord, how great are thy works, and thy thoughts are very deep. A brutish (beastly) man knoweth not, neither doth a fool understand this. "When the wicked do spring as the grass, and when all the workers of iniquity do flourish; it is that they shall be destroyed for ever." Well, men say, "The Lord is good," "God is love." I believe it fully, or He would not let so many godless creatures inhabit the earth for so many generations as He has, and live upon his bounty. Nahum says, "The Lord is good, a stronghold in the day of battle, and he knoweth them that trust in him; but with an overrunning flood he will make an utter end thereof, and darkness shall pursue his enemies; for while they are folden together as thorns, and while they are drunken as drunkards, they shall be devoured as stubble fully dry." Matt. xiii. 30, 40–44; Joel iii.; Zech. xiv.; Ezek. xxxviii. 14–23. Those who believe in the restoration of all things, are wise above what is written by either Prophets or Apostles. If you give all the Scriptures their proper definition, no such thing can be proved, I affirm, without fear of successful contradiction. "Behold the whirlwind of the Lord goeth forth with fury, a continuing whirlwind, it shall fall with pain upon the head of the wicked. The fierce anger of the Lord shall not return, until he have done it, until he hath performed the intents of his heart. In the latter days ye shall consider it." "At the same time" will I be the God of all the families (or tribes) of Israel, and they shall be my people. For thus saith the Lord, Sing with gladness for Jacob, and shout among the chief of the nations, publish ye, praise ye and say, O Lord, save thy people, the remnant of Israel." "Hear the Word of the Lord, O ye nations, and declare it in the isles afar off, and say He that scattereth Israel will gather him, and keep him as a shepherd doth his flock.' "Behold the days (will) come saith the Lord, that I will sow the house of Israel, and the house of Judah with the seed of man, and with the seed of beasts, and it shall come to pass that like as I have watched over them, to pluck up and to throw down, and to destroy, so will I watch over them to build, and to plant saith the Lord." Jer. xxx. 31. How many, who profess to be looking for the coming of Jesus, the rightful heir to Israel's throne and kingdom, discard all these plain prophecies, made to the house of Jacob, which Christ is to reign over when He comes, according to the angel's word to Mary, when he was sent from heaven to announce his birth and mission. It is no wonder that such should be found setting the time when He shall appear, notwithstanding Jesus said, "It is not for you to know the times, or the seasons, which the Father hath put in his own power," and "Watch, for ye know not when the time is." O, what inconsistencies! and yet, they seem so honest and earnest in their love for Christ, and his coming.

I am looking for a darker time than earth has ever seen in the past. Jeremiah exclaims: "Alas! for that day is great, so that none is like it, it is even the time of Jacob's trouble, but he shall be saved out of it." Jer. xxx. 7.

In view of that time, dear brethren and sisters, I would exhort you in the language of the Prophet Zephaniah. "Seek ye the Lord, all ye meek of the earth, which have wrought his judgment, seek righteousness, seek meekness, it may be ye shall be hid, in the day of the Lord's anger." Again. "Therefore, wait ye upon me, saith the Lord, until the day that I rise up to the prey, for my determination is to gather the nations that I may assemble the kingdoms, to pour upon them mine indignation, even all my fierce anger, for all the earth shall be devoured with the fire of my jealousy. For then will I turn to the people a pure language," etc. "The remnant of Israel shall not do iniquity, nor speak lies." "Sing, O daughter of Zion, shout O Israel! be glad and rejoice with all the heart, O daughter of Jerusalem. The Lord hath taken away thy judgments. He hath cast out thine enemies; the King of Israel, even the Lord, is in the midst of thee, thou shalt not see evil any more." My heart responds Amen and Amen.

Sound Doctrine.

Brethren, I wish to arouse your minds somewhat, as to sound doctrine. What is more becoming than to see a man or woman speak the things which become sound doctrine.—Titus ii. 1. Sound speech that cannot be condemned; that he that is of the contrary part may be ashamed, having no evil thing to say of you. "Hold fast the faithful word that we may be able by sound doctrine to convince the gainsayer. James i, 16: "Do not err my beloved brethren." 1 Pet. ii, 10: "Honor all men, love the brotherhood, Fear God, honor the king." 1 Pet. iii, 15, 16, 17; "Sanctify the Lord God in your heart, and be ready always to give an answer to every man that asketh you a reason of the hope that is in you, with meekness and fear having a good conscience, that where as they speak evil of you, as of evil doers, they may be ashamed that falsely accuse your good conversation in Christ, for it is better if the will of God be so that ye suffer for well doing, than for evil doing; every good gift and every perfect gift is from above, and cometh down from the Father of lights with whom is no variableness; neither shadow of turning." Prov. xxv, 11: "A word fitly spoken is like apples of gold in pictures of silver." Prov. xxiii, 12: "Apply thine heart unto instruction, and thine ears unto the words of knowledge." Brethren, let us speak the doctrine that Paul spoke, and follow his teachings, then we will speak sound doctrine, and by so doing we can say with Paul, 2 Tim. iv, 7-8: "I have fought the good fight, I have finished my course I have kept the faith, henceforth there is laid up for me a crown of righteousness which the Lord the righteous judge shall give me at that day; and not to me only, but unto all that love his appearing."

Home.

It is not the imposing majesty of a sumptuous mansion, nor the hollow glare of gaudy furniture, nor the obsequious attention of servants, nor even of children, that makes a home of a home, and keeps alive the sacred blessedness of a married life. No; but it is the steady exercise of those holy charities that soothes the sorrows and smoothes the asperities of our nature; those little evidences of sincere esteem; those spontaneous expressions of affection and tenderness; those unpremeditated smiles and tears at the acts of other's joys or sorrows; that affectionate officiousness which volunteers more readily as service becomes more difficult—these are the things that give to home its purest and most powerful attractions; where these abound the mind repeses in all the confidence of conscious safety and in the satisfaction of ample enjoyment. Mutual respect and attention between man and wife are essential to render them respectable in the eyes of their domestics and children, and also to maintain that healthy flow of soul, that cheerfulness and buoyancy of spirit, so necessary in bearing the ills and performing the duties of life. As kindness and respectful treatment are due to all persons, so they are due to ourselves as wife or husband, for we cannot love those whom we do not respect, nor can they love us in return. Let it then be a principle of established authority, like the laws of the Medes and the Persians that change not, to give each that affectionate attention which is mutually due between equals. Let everything be studiously avoided that goes to lessen either party in their own estimation or in that of other persons, and let it never be forgotten that even a smile or a frown may gild with brightness or overcast with clouds that most sacred spot on earth which you call Home! —Hebrew Leader.

The True End of Life.

So certainly is religion the great end of life that it may be truly affirmed of all who die without it, that however long they have lived, or whatever in other respects they have attended to, they have lived in vain. However they may have spent their time, it is, as to its higher purpose, all lost. Whatever they have been engaged in they have done nothing; but have been ingeniously negligent. They may have gained much; much knowledge, wealth, reputation, comfort, pleasure; but they have been losing all the while infinitely more than they have gained, for they have lost their soul. They have been busily employed in building up their earthly fortunes but they have been no less busy in pulling down their immortal interests. They have gained a name and a place in the temple of fame, but they have lost infinitely more reputation with God than they have gained with men. They may have lived for the temporal good of all nations and all posterity, but they have neglected to live for their eternal good; and therefore, in every view of the case, they have lived below the ends of their Creator in their existence; and if they had right views of their mistake at last, they would go down to the grave, though laden with years, and riches, and honors, uttering the melancholy confession, "Life with me has been a lost adventure."—Hebrew Leader.

THE RESTITUTION.

"THE RESTITUTION OF ALL THINGS WHICH GOD HATH SPOKEN BY THE MOUTH OF ALL HIS HOLY PROPHETS SINCE THE WORLD BEGAN."

Study of the Bible.

PURPOSE OF HOLY SCRIPTURE.

"Lamp of our feet whereby we trace
Our path, when wont to stray;
Stream from the fount of heavenly grace!
Book by the traveler's way!
Word of the living God!
Will of his glorious Son!
Without thee, how could earth be trod?
Or heaven itself be won?"
—Bernard Barton.

Every book has, or ought to have, a distinct object. What then is the object of the Bible?

The answer is at hand. It professes to enlighten us as to our true relation to our Creator; as to our duties in this world; and as to our destiny in the world to come. It has been sometimes said, and urged, too, as a reason for neglecting divine revelation, that the Bible deals with things beyond our experience and comprehension; that it has little to do with the everyday work of a practical man's life; that it is a book full of mysteries; and that it treats of matters regarding which nothing certain can by any possibility be known.

This is not true. Nor would it be, but for certain mistakes into which we fall into, in consequence of misunderstanding the things which it reveals, with the things it merely hints at.

Properly speaking, the Book reveals only that which really belongs to man—the present, which is his possession, and the future, which is his inheritance. To many things it only incidentally refers; speaking, for instance, of other beings and other worlds, with much beside, simply to the extent, and no further, than seems to be needful in order to our true comprehension of the position we occupy in the universe. To fix our attention on these mere accessories; to create difficulties out of them; and to neglect the immediate object of the revelation, is, to say the least of it, unpractical and absurd.

We would not, for a single moment, even in the slightest degree, underrate the importance of these incidental communications. On the contrary, we receive them with a thankful wonder. For we cannot forget that we have no other account, besides that given in the Bible, of the most important events that have educated the race, and made men what they now are.

But we say again, as these things are not the object of the Book, so difficulties relating to them, however formidable, can afford no good reason for neglecting, or rejecting its immediate message to ourselves, as creatures of God, destined, in one form or other, to fulfill the ends of our existence, whether in this world, or in that which is to come.

Further, the Bible always pre-supposes other and prior revelations.

NATURE is a revelation. "The heavens declare the glory of God; and the firmament showeth his handywork. Day unto day uttereth speech, and night unto night showeth knowledge. There is no speech nor language, where their voice is not heard. Their line is gone out through all the earth, and their words to the end of the world." Psa. xix. 1–4. It was the neglect of nature's voice which rendered the idolatry of the heathen inexcusable. "For the invisible things of him from the creation of the world are clearly seen, being understood by the things that are made, even his eternal power and Godhead; so that they are without excuse." Rom. i. 20.

The PROVIDENCE of God is again a continual revelation. Paul, in addressing the Athenians, could appeal on this ground to heathen poets: "As certain also of your own poets have said, For we are also his offspring."

Forgetfulness of this truth plunged the ancients into ever deepening error. "When they knew God, they glorified him not as God, neither were they thankful; but became vain in their imaginations, and their foolish heart was darkened." Rom. i. 21.

The peculiarity of the later revelation, that of God in Christ, is that it was embodied in a person, and that it exists for us as a WRITTEN BOOK. To its presentation in this shape, many persons fancy they see insuperable objections. We can scarcely imagine, however, that it could have been given otherwise. A direct revelation to each individual personally and separately would, if effectual, offer such violence to human nature, that freedom, both of choice and action, would be destroyed by it; while if otherwise,—making no deep and strong impression on the mind,—such a communication would soon come to be regarded as unreal, the result of natural causes, and the effect a disturbed imagination. Imposture, under such a state of things, would be sure to abound, and enthusiasm would supersede reason altogether.

The mode actually adopted, that of first qualifying individuals, by indisputable credentials, to instruct others, as to the will of God, and then preserving their teaching in writing, is obviously the best, if not the only method in which the work could have been accomplished. It is plainly a more secure method for conveying truth than tradition could ever be; it is freer from liability to suspicion of fraud or contrivance; it throws truth open at all times to the investigation of every man; and it has this great advantage,—it is the only natural and human method. "Every thing that is of consequence man desires to have in writing. By its means laws are promulgated, arts and sciences spread, and titles and estates are secured. All that we know of history comes down to us in books; tradition passes away like the morning cloud, but books may live as long as the sun and moon endure."

Add to these considerations the fact that God, although invisibly, is ever bearing witness to the truth of this written revelation by a voice within; that without other evidence than that which is internal, its revelations are at once recognized as realities by the "lowly heart and pure;" that it is the only key that fits the wards of human consciousness; that to the poor and uninstructed it comes home like a familiar thing, and we are forced to confess that stereotyped as it is in paragraphs and in letters, it yet bears about with it all the characteristics of perpetual life, and is capable of being made the common property of all the children of men.

We are not quite sure that the Bible was intended to be so direct an instrument in the conversion of the world as is usually supposed. That work seems rather to be the peculiar responsibility of the Church; to be accomplished by the living voice, and the power of a holy example. The Bible, regarded as a book, is not so much intended for the unbeliever as for the believer. Its chief aim and end is to elevate the Christian; to bring him closer to Christ; to teach, and to enable him, by faith in the Redeemer to live a higher life than others, a life of self-denial, of unworldliness, and of disinterested love. This seems to be the view taken of Scripture by St. Paul, when he speaks of it to Timothy, as "profitable for doctrine, for reproof, for instruction in righteousness, that the man of God may be perfect, thoroughly furnished unto all good works." 2 Tim. iii. 16, 17.—H. Dunn.

Foreknowledge.

God's foreknowledge is not simply considered the cause of anything. It puts nothing into things, but only beholds them as present, and arising from their proper causes. Knowledge in itself is an apprehension of a thing, is not the cause of it. A spectator of a thing is not the cause of that which he sees; that is, as he beholds it. We see a man write; we know before that he will write at such a time; but this foreknowledge is not the cause of his writing. We see a man walk; but our vision of him brings no necessity of walking upon him; he was free to walk, or not to walk. We foreknow that death will seize upon all men; we foreknow that the seasons of the year will succeed one another; yet is not our foreknowledge the cause of this succession of spring after winter, or of the death of all men, or any man. We see one man fighting with another; our sight is not the cause of that contest, but some quarrel among themselves exciting their own passions. The foreknowledge of God takes not away the liberty of man's will, no more than a foreknowledge that we have of any man's actions takes away his liberty.—Charnock.

The Cemeteries of Jerusalem.

Jerusalem and its environs are a vast necropolis. Not less than a hundred and twenty or thirty generations lie buried there. For a period after the establishment of the monarchy, the kings and princes were interred within the city. In later ages the great and wealthy families hewed sepulchres for themselves in the rocky declivities that surround the city. Great numbers of them still remain, open, dilapidated and appropriated to other uses,—a shelter for animals, or habitations for living men. There is not one, so far as is known, that has not been rifled, and swept of every trace of its original tenants.

The great tombs in the environs of the city, which tradition or conjecture refers to the judges, kings, the empress Helena, and other eminent personages, were, ages ago, opened and rifled, their sarcophagi broken into fragments, and the dust of those who slept in them swept forth and given to the winds. Empty, deserted, and open to the intrusion of whoever pleases, they have become monuments of the utter ruin and oblivion to which death at length consigns the great and enobled as well as the unknown. No efforts of art have hitherto succeeded in preserving a single individual of the race for more than a short period in such a form that he could be identified. The dust of the great monarchs of Egypt, Babylon, Persia, Greece, Rome, though embalmed and consigned to massy mausolea that were expected to preserve them intact to the end of time, have vanished from their sepulchres, and is as undistinguishable now as that of the most obscure of their subjects. Dr. Barclay says:—

"No expression could more forcibly characterize the Holy City than the term necropolis—its rocks being everywhere perforated with tombs, and its soil crowded with grave-stones. . . . .

"These myriads of sepulchres, though originally designed almost without exception, for the interment of the dead of Israel or their proselytes, have in turn served also for the sepulture of various successive races, consequently occupying the devoted city —Pagan, Moslem, and Christian. And not only have these rock-hewn sepulchres been tenanted by the Gentile dead, but by the living also. Thousands of Cenobites have no other dwelling at Jerusalem than these cold, dark, habitations of the dead. And even down to the present day the Arabs of Siloam occupy, either wholly or in part, the catacombs of the Hill of Offence, though generally having a small ante-room in front of the tomb. And in the Turkish burial-field, on the hill to the right of the Damascus Gate, called Turbet-es-Zahara, or Mount of Tombs, the order of nature is exactly reversed by these Troglodytes—the dead being above the living.

"The process of quarrying and blasting is so much facilitated in cliffs perforated and intersected with tombs, that the sepulchres immediately around the city are rapidly disappearing before the hands of the mason, the dark habitations of the dead being thus converted into the lighted residences of the living.

"On the east side of Olivet and the southern slope of Scopus, I discovered a few sepulchres precisely resembling some that I saw at Rome; instead of large loculi for sarcophagi, mummies, or corpses like the Jewish tombs, they have a great many small recesses in the sides of the room, barely large enough to contain a small cinerary or lachrymary vessel. But with that exception nearly all the excavated rock tombs of Jerusalem are undoubtedly of Jewish origin. The Jewish sepulchres, though regulated by one general principle, yet differ very much in point of capacity, finish, and internal arrangement. Lazarus seems to have been interred in a mere natural cave with a small mouth—such as still abound in the vicinity of Jerusalem and Bethany. And the cave of Machpelah was unquestionably in its natural condition when first used for the burial of Sarah. In the sides of some of these natural grots, loculi or roughly excavated receptacles of the dead are still found; but it is probable that in the earlier periods of the Jewish age the corpses were often merely laid on the floor swaddled in the winding sheet. Indeed there is abundant proof that such a burial has been practised in quite modern times. Usually, however, the Jewish sepulchre is a small room excavated in the solid rock, and provided with several receptacles for the dead. They are occasionally provided with an anteroom, and susceptible of unlimited enlargement, which is effected by adding room to room, laterally in the rear, on the sides, or below. A perpendicular surface is generally sought, through which a small door is cut; but the position of this door in reference to the room is very irregular—the workmen having evidently paid more regard to the grain and flaws of the rock, than to the symmetry of the room.

Hope of the Righteous.

"For the upright shall dwell in the land, and the perfect shall remain in it. But the wicked shall be rooted out of it."—Proverbs.

These words were spoken by the king of Israel when under the inspiration of heavenly wisdom. They describe not the things of the present life but tell of events yet future, and belong to the age of final rewards and tribulation. The rooting out of the wicked is essentially preliminary to the establishing of the righteous in the land. "Wait on the Lord and keep his way, and he shall exalt thee to inherit the land; when the wicked are cut off thou shalt see it." Can it be that the oft repeated promise of an inheritance in the earth finds its entire fulfillment in the joys and sorrows of this life, Has Abraham received the country, the lot of his inheritance, covenanted to him, and confirmed by an oath in which God swears to give him the land wherein he then sojourned as a stranger for an everlasting possession. Do the meek inherit the earth? Who more meek than the lowly Nazarene? Yet He had not a place to lay his head. The prince of this world regarded Him not among his heirs. Moses was meek yet after having been chosen to lead the children of Israel into the promised land endured the contempt and reproach of all that mighty people received not even a temporary residence in the goodly land. The most deserving of God's servants, together with Him who is appointed heir of all things, fulfilled the law, kept the faith, endured unto the end; declaring plainly that they sought a better country that is an heavenly. Faith and Hope transfer that glorious possession beyond the resurrection of the dead. God has reserved a more glorious dispensation of things in connection with the inheritance. The curse still lingers upon the fairest portions of earth. Briars and thorns and thistles shall it bring forth to thee. Bloodshed and violence are abroad in all her coasts, and her bosom groans with hidden wrongs and the cry of innocent blood. In vain do we look for that heavenly country while the one chosen to redeem the inheritance returns not. The rulers of darkness hold and sway the sceptre of oppression in all the earth. They killed the heir, they seized upon the inheritance and continue to hold the rightful dominion of the prince of peace. But blessed be the holy one of Israel who has promised to send his Son with power and great glory to destroy those wicked men and recover the vineyard, to wrest the garden and the field from the hands of the destroyer, and destroy them that destroy the earth. O, may the glorious day soon dawn that will end alike the power of Satan and the sorrows of suffering humanity. Thrice blessed be the great Restorer who will cause "peace to flow as a river" and righteousness as the waves of the sea. "Let the whole earth be filled with his glory." Amen and Amen.

Power of Faith.

Childlike faith looks into the Holy Scriptures with an eye of penetrating power, like that of the telescope directed toward the starry heavens. It brings into view glorious things of divine revelation which escape the notice of the common eye, which are wholly invisible to the natural eye. It reduces the symmetry and displays in beautiful proportions many sublime prophecies and glorious promises involved sometimes in contradictory appearances to a superficial reader. The splendor of the starry hosts is the midnight sky, the grand constellations, the brilliant planets, the erratic shooting stars, the galaxy and its innumerable hosts, faint and bright—fill the beholder with perplexity and with profound admiration. There is a fair type of the appearances presented by the precious promises in the oracles of God to the natural man, who fails to study the holy volume as a work of the same hand which built the earth and the heavens and is building the city of God. In its pages are found the brightest examples and the worst, that men may follow the one and see the miserable end of the other; are found also the purest morals, the loftiest sentiments, the tenderest affection, the holiest teachings, the most wonderful miracles, revelations, promises and prophecies, all mixed in with the darkness of sin and wickedness, rebellion and wretchedness, making such a chaos of disorder in the temporal darkness that the learned and the ignorant are sometimes alike puzzled to see the harmony and holiness of Bible history with its testimonies and its laws. Those who read it as a common work of the press soon come to know all about it, as they think, and they lay it aside. While those who study it daily, for wisdom, for instruction in righteousness, and for spiritual nurture, love it more and more as long as they live, and continually find deeper and richer mines of eternal truth in its pages. To the strongest men it gives meat, and milk to babes, with honey out of the rock to every soul that fears the Eternal and desires to learn the Word of life.—Ward's Faith of Abraham and Christ.

Progress of Romanism.

It is very suggestive to compare the progress of the Roman Catholic faith in Great Britain for the last one hundred years. In England and Scotland there were counted in 1776, 90,000 Catholics; in 1823, 500,000; in 1842, 2,000,000; and in 3,380,000. England now numbers 1,895 priests, 1,453 churches, 86 monasteries for men, 286 convents for women, and 1,260 Catholic schools. England Scotland and Wales are divided into 20 dioceses. The House of Lords contains not less than 33 Catholic members; the House of Commons, 37; and the Queen's Privy Council, six. Amongst the baronets there are 77 of that creed.

Words of Jesus.

"Remember the words of the Lord Jesus, how he said:"

"I will not leave you comfortless; I will come to you" (John xiv. 13).

Does the Christian's path lie all the way through Beulah? Nay, he is forewarned it is to be one of "much tribulation." He has his Marahs as well as his Elims—his valleys of Baca as well as his grapes of Eschol. Often he is left to contend to bear the brunt of the storm—his gourds are fading when most needed—his sun going down while it is yet day—his happy home and happy heart darkened in a moment with sorrows which a stranger (with which often a brother) cannot intermeddle. There is one Brother "born for adversity" who can. How often has that voice broken with its silvery accents the muffled stillness of the sick-chamber or death-chamber? "'I will not leave you comfortless;' the world may, friends may, the desolations of bereavement and death may; but I will not; you will not be alone, for I, your Savior and your God, will be with you?"

Jesus seems to have an especial love and affection for his orphaned and comfortless children. A father loves his sick and sorrowing child most; of all his household, he occupies most of his thought. Christ seems to delight to lavish his deepest sympathy on "him that hath no helper." It is in the hour of sorrow his people have found him most precious; it is in "the wilderness" he speaks most "comfortably unto them;" he gives them "their vineyards from thence;" in the places they least expected, wells of heavenly consolation break forth at their feet. As Jonathan of old, when faint and weary, had his strength revived by the honey he found dripping in the tangled thicket; so the faint and woe-worn children of God find "honey in the wood"—everlasting consolation dropping from the tree of life, in the midst of the thornjest thickets of affliction.

Comfortless ones, be comforted! Jesus often makes you portionless here to drive you to himself, the everlasting portion. He often dries every rill and fountain of earthly bliss, that he may lead you to say, "All my springs are in thee." "He seems intent," said one who could speak from experience, "to fill every gap love has been forced to make; one of his errands from heaven was to bind up the broken-hearted." How beautifully in one amazing verse does he conjoin the depth and tenderness of his comfort with the certainty of it;—"As one whom his mother comforteth, so so will I comfort you, and ye shall be comforted!"

Ah, how many would not have their wilderness state altered, with all its trials and gloom, and sorrow, just that they might enjoy the unutterable sympathy and love of this comforter of the comfortless, one ray of whose approving smile can dispel the deepest earthly gloom! As the clustering constellations shine with the intensest lustre in the midnight sky, so these "words of Jesus" come out like ministering angels in the deep, dark night of earthly sorrow. We may see no beauty in them when the wor sunny and bright; but he has them up in store for us for the and cloudy day."

"These things have I told you, when the time cometh, ye may remember that I told you of them."

What We Find in Jesus.

"I have found him whom my soul loveth."

This is the joyful utterance of many a happy heart whom the Shepherd has first found and brought home to the fold. If Jesus had not first sought us, we never would have found Him. There is one side of the deepest, purest Christianity, on which Jesus is seen as doing everything for the believer; there is another side on which the believer appears as doing everything for Jesus. The two together make pity.

Conversion is finding Christ. The penitent soul then discovers in the crucified Savior what he never saw before; he obtains from Him what he never had before; he becomes through Christ what he never was before. Is not all this a finding of something entirely new?

In finding Christ we find forgiveness. He comes to us as sinners with the offer of pardon in his hand. It is a precious gift stained with his own blood and tears.

In finding Jesus we alone find peace. He is the "Lord of peace." He hath made peace by the blood of his cross. The old enmity between our offended Father and ourselves is taken away.

It is not only the peace of reconciliation, but the peace of contentment that Jesus gives. "My peace I give unto you." And how it smoothes the ruffled brow, and cools our heated pulses, and quiets our worries! A half hour of communion with Jesus does more to cool off a fit of angry passion or to restore the equilibrium to a distured mind than all the "philosophy" in the universe. What a wonderfully calm, self-possessed set of sayings these words of Jesus were! And the simple reason was that Jesus possessed their souls with his patience and kept in perfect peace the hearts that were stayed on Him.

Wisdom is also found in finding Jesus. This is something better and deeper than knowledge. It is the practical sagacity that discerns what is right—the everyday light for every day's duty. I have seen many people who not only received grace with the truth, but also a degree of good sense that they never had before. Their minds grow steadier, their judgments sounder. Their religion clears their heads as well as warms their hearts.—Dr. Cuyler.

Signs of Summer.

The Rev. J. C. Ryle, B. A., rector of Helmingham, Suffolk, England, is an Episcopal minister whose name is known to many on this side of the sea from his "Expository thoughts on the Gospels," and numerous small, practical works. He is a decided millenarian—earnest and out-spoken on the subject of the Lord's coming. The following paragraph from his pen deserves attention, and reminds us of the poet's statement, based on the words of Jesus in Mark xiii. 28, 29.

"Budding figtrees tell that summer
Draweth o'er the land;
Signs portend that Jesus' coming
Is nigh at hand."

"It becomes all true Christians to observe carefully the public events of their own day. It is not only a duty to do this, but a sin to neglect it. Our Lord reproved the Jews for 'not discerning the signs of the times.' Matt. xvi. 3. They did not see that the sceptre was passing away from Judah, and the weeks of Daniel running out. Let us beware of falling into their error. Let us rather open our eyes and look at the world around us. Let us mark the drying up of the Turkish power, and the increase of missionary work in the world. Let us mark the revival of popery, and the rise of new and subtle forms of infidelity. Let us mark the rapid spread of lawlessness and contempt for authority. What are these things but the budding of the figtree? They show us that this world is wearing out, and needs a new and better dynasty. It needs its rightful King, even Jesus. May we watch, and keep our garments, and live ready to meet our Lord! Rev. xvi. 15."

—As storm following storm, and wave succeeding wave, give additional hardness to the shell that encloses the pearl, so do the storms and waves of life add force to the character of man.

THE RESTITUTION

PLYMOUTH, IND.....Feb. 3, 1875.

EDITORIAL DEPARTMENT.

—We clip the following from an exchange paper. It would seem that the nations of Europe have no idea of settling peace. Preparations for war are more extensive now than ever before. Over six millions of men have been put upon a war footing by the different nations of the old world. Prepare war! Wake up the mighty men. Let all the men of war draw near" seems to be the motto of the nations. The subjoined extract shows that the implements of death are in great demand.

The manufacturers of firearms in this country are reported to be very busy. Large orders from foreign governments are now being executed. Turkey is having 500,000 of the Peabody-Martini rifles made, Prussia lots of needle guns, Russia 100,000 of Smith and Wesson's pistols, while Spain calls for all that can be made of the Winchester and other breech-loaders.

—We spent Sunday last in Warren, Huntington county, Indiana. Was called away on Saturday to preach a funeral discourse. Brother Wm. T. Guffin, grandfather of the infant son of Wm. and Eliza Hubbell came for us. We spoke in the M. E. church, to a good audience, notwithstanding the severity of the day. Our remarks were based upon the language of Paul. "Now we see through a glass darkly, then face to face." A deep interest was awakened in many minds, who saw the beauty of the resurrection hope in contrast with the mysteries of a faith which presents no tangible inheritance. In the evening we preached in a school house near Brother Guffin's. The word spoken found a place in many honest hearts and we expect at no distant day to return and carry forward the good work begun. The truth has some warm friends in that locality, and we trust there will be a company in Warren that will enroll their names in the book of life.

—While we would not detract one [illegible] from the great importance of studying the prophetic word, yet we must insist that the glories of the world to come can never be attained, only as we conform to the "law of the spirit" in the life that now is. That God has many rich blessings in store for the world of nations during the reign of his Son, we most heartily believe, but that will not release us from a life of personal obedience.

No one can expect to live and enjoy the blessed immunities of Christ's kingdom without a character formed in harmony with the teachings of the King. The object of the Gospel is to mould men, even now, into the moral image of Christ. And if that image of the Divine Master has not been stamped on the renewed heart, it is useless to hope for immortality. There is to be a physical change at the resurrection, but a moral change must go before it. There is a crown of royalty in his kingdom, but the royal robes must be washed and made white in the blood of the Lamb.

John Stuart Mill's Testimony.

Our readers are aware of the fact that John Stuart Mill, one of the most profound thinkers and writers which England ever produced, did not accept the Christian religion. He was opposed to almost everything supernatural, and yet he has rendered one of the most glowing tributes to the life and character of Jesus. We commend it to those who would wish to find a better example than our blessed Lord.

"The most valuable part of the effect on the character which Christianity has produced, by holding up in a divine person a standard of excellence and a model for imitation, is available even to the absolute unbeliever and can never more be lost to humanity. For it is Christ rather than God whom Christianity has held up to believers as the pattern of perfection for humanity. It is the God incarnate more than the God of the Jews or of nature, who, being identified, has taken so great and salutary hold on the modern mind. And whatever else may be taken away from us by rational criticism, Christ is still left; a unique figure, not more unlike all his precursors than all his followers, even those who had the direct benefit of his personal teaching. . . . . Who among his disciples, or among their proselytes, was capable of inventing the sayings ascribed to Jesus, or of imagining the life and character revealed in the Gospels? . . . . About the life and sayings of Jesus there is a stamp of personal originality combined with profundity of insight which, if we abandon the idle expectation of finding scientific precision where something very different was aimed at, must place the Prophet of Nazareth, even in the estimation of those who have no belief in his inspiration, in the very first rank of the men of sublime genius of whom our species can boast. When this pre-eminent genius is combined with the qualities of probably the greatest moral reformer and martyr to that mission who ever existed upon earth, religion cannot be said to have made a bad choice in pitching on this man as the ideal representative and guide of humanity; nor even now would it be easy, even for an unbeliever, to find a better translation of the rule of virtue from the abstract into the concrete than the endeavor so to live that Christ would approve of our life. When to this we add that, to the conception of the rational sceptic, it remains a possibility that Christ actually was . . . . a man charged with a special, express and unique commission from God to lead mankind to truth and virtue, we may well conclude that the influences of religion on the character, which will remain after rational criticism has done its utmost against the evidences of religion, are well worth preserving, and that what they lack in direct strength as compared with those of a firmer belief is more than compensated by the greater truth and rectitude of the morality they sanction."

Our Burdens.

Burden bearing is as extensive as the woes and sufferings of humanity. All hearts have their burdens and feel at times the heaviness of sorrow. The whole system of christian truth is vicarious. As men rise and assume new responsibilities, burdens increase. And where there is no force, no mission and no heart of sympathy, there will be no burden. The highest have the greatest burdens, and bear with brave hearts the weaknesses of others. The traces of these soul-struggles, are left after the storms have swept over, and the sun shines "o'er hill and plain."

Christ was a burden bearer. He bore our griefs, he took our sorrows, he lived our life of temptation, [illegible] made our cause his own. But he gathered strength from our weakness, and rose to a moral heroism grander than the angels, and won a name which shines in the brightness of the years of God. His mission was one of burdens, of crosses, of sufferings, and of tears; but he obtained through these the immortal honors of a throne and a crown, glory and a kingdom. Each brother in life's battle is a burden bearer. The strong are to bear the infirmities of the weak, and they who are rich in the faith of Christ are to break the bread of life to the perishing of earth. "Bear ye one anothers burdens and so fulfil the law of Christ" is a duty written on the fleshly tablets of the heart, and interwoven with the life of every child of God. The band of saints, the heirs of promise is a co-operative body, each member fills a place, has a burden, and must work for the common good of all. The plan is one, the work is one, and the destiny is one. Would you become strong and brave soldiers? Then take a place where there are duties to be performed and trials to meet. With nothing to do, with no one to care for, no heart to make cheerful in the valley of the cross, you may rest assured that no crown will gleam beyond the valley, no star will shine beyond the cloud.

Little do we know our power or place until the burdens of life are thrown upon us; Then we rise into a new life and put forth strength which before was lying dormant. We must take hold of life's realities and become workers together with God, and in this way we become ripened for that harvest which shall be gathered by angel reapers. God permits the truth to remain in obscurity and his servants to become weak, that our hands and hearts may grow strong in his service, and that our loyalty may appear. Many fall by the way simply because they have nothing to do, forgetting that the weak, the unfortunate and the poor need their ministry.

Neglected duties become swords and cut us off from the Vine. The branches must bear fruit or perish. Burdens have become a necessity in our pilgrimage and we must bear them with a loyal heart.

The child that is weak and helpless calls out the sweet spirit of the mother, so the child of God in his weakness and dependence draws blessings from the hand of the Divine Father and is protected underneath the everlasting arms. Every believer has a place in the great field which is now white for the harvest. Gather ye the golden grain into the garner of the divine kingdom. The night is coming on, the shadows of the evening are stretching across our pathway. The gospel work of taking out a people is closing.

Arise from the stupor of indifference, and take up the burdens of life, and press on; the gates of the city are open and the golden streets, the great white throne and the tree of life are before you. Happy transit at last. Welcome, is written over the way. At the gates of the city you lay aside your burdens, and take the wreath and palm; you lay aside the cross and take the throne. The victory is won, and the rest "that remaineth" has now come. The jubilee of peace fills the world with blessings, and the king in his beauty reigns triumphant.

Trine Immersion.

We now proceed to examine the various uses of the term baptism by way of figure and symbol. Christ's church is compared to a body of which obedient believers are the members. "So we, being many, are one body in Christ, and every one members one of another" Rom. xii. 5. Every living body has an animating spirit; consequently, we find that there is "one body, and one spirit," which enlivens this one body. Eph. iv. 4. All the members, belonging to any body whatever, are quickened by "drinking in," the vivifying influences of the life-spirit of that body, and are dead whenever the connection is severed. For instance, sever a finger, so that it no longer "drinks" the blood, and, with the blood, the life-spirit animating the whole system, and it dies. The way of forming this body, so as to make it entire and complete, is, to fashion its individual members, and attach them to the body; this is done by baptism. "For as the body is one, and hath many members, and all the members of that one body, being many, are one body; so also is Christ. For by one spirit are we all baptized into one body, whether we be Jews or Gentiles, whether we be bond or free; and have been all made to drink into one spirit." 1 Cor. xii. 12, 13. Now must these individual members be attached three several times? Does a surgeon, when a member is nearly dissevered, carefully attach it once, then detach it, then again nicely fix it to its place, then again break the vital connection, and only make the final adjustment in a third effort?

Again our being in Christ is compared to being branches in a vine; and our being members of his elect church, to being branches in a good olive tree; while the process of uniting foreign branches is likened to engrafting. Now does the person who sets grafts, accurately fit them, then insert them, then pull them out, again put them in place, again draw them from the cleft, and only leave them in position to unite with the vine or tree at the third insertion? Usage like this, without a careful refitting of the cion, would probably defeat the object of the workman altogether.

There is another figure frequently employed. As the temple was the earthly abode where God dwelt between the cherubim upon the mercy seat, so the church is compared to a temple built of living stones for a "habitation of God through the spirit." Eph. ii. 22. Says the Apostle: "Know ye not that ye are the temple of God, and that the Spirit of God dwelleth in you?" 1 Cor. iii. 16. Of this temple the Apostles and subordinate ministers are represented as being the builders. Now as baptism is the consummating act of placing one on the foundation, and in the building, does a "wise masterbuilder" put a stone in position three times before leaving it in its place? Did the architects of Solomon's temple, the typical building, perform their work in this way?

Once more, the baptismal process is compared to the casting material in a mould to give it a new form, with the accessory idea of leaving the dross behind. McKnight thus translates Rom. vi. 17: "But thanks to God, that although ye were the slaves of sin, yet ye have obeyed from the heart the mould of doctrine into which ye were delivered." This he paraphrases: "By thus speaking, I do not insinuate that ye have made yourselves slaves to sin; on the contrary, I thank God, that although formerly ye were the slaves of sin, ye have willingly obeyed the mould of doctrine into which ye were cast at your baptism." In this figure the hard and obdurate nature of the sinner is represented as being broken down and melted in contrition; he is then put into a mould to be fashioned into a new moral image; compare Rom. viii. 29, and leaves the dross of sin behind. Rom. vi. 18. He then comes forth a new creature, or as happily expressed by McKnight, "Having yielded to the forming efficacy of that mould of doctrine, is made into a new man, both in principle and practice."

There is another moulding referred to in this connection. "Are ye ignorant, that so many of us as have been baptized into Christ Jesus, have been baptized into his death? Besides, we have been buried together with him by baptism into his death, that like as Christ was raised up from the dead by the glory of the Father, even so we also shall walk in a new life. For seeing we have been planted together in the likeness of his death, certainly we shall be also IN THE LIKENESS of his resurrection." (McKnight's translation.) Rom. vi. 3-5. We are dissolved in death in order to the removal of the dross and corruption of an earthly nature, so that, being refined, we may be re-cast into the personal likeness of our Lord's heavenly nature. "And as we have borne the image of the earthy, we shall also bear the image of the heavenly." 1 Cor. xv. 49. First we are transformed or moulded, into Christ's moral image, by the appliances of the Gospel, then into his glorious personal likeness by the resurrection. Now, in moulding, does the metallurgist cast, recast, and finally cast a third time, to obtain the desired formation?

Let us now look at the symbolism of the rite of baptism. The ordinances of Christianity embody a significant representation of its most important doctrines. Baptism is an action designed to symbolize, in the most impressive manner, the death, burial, and resurrection of Christ, as well as the death, burial, and resurrection of the people of God. "For if we have been planted together in the likeness of his death, we shall be also in the likeness of his resurrection. Now if we be dead with Christ, we believe that we shall also live with him." Rom. vi. 5, 8. Neander, speaking of baptism, says: "Baptism was originally administered by immersion, and many of the comparisons of St. Paul allude to this form of its administration; the immersion is a symbol of death, of being buried with Christ, the coming forth from the water is a symbol of a resurrection with Christ, and both taken together represent the second birth, the death of the old man and a resurrection to a new life." Hist. Three First Centuries, p. 197.

We are definitely informed "that Christ died for our sins according to the Scriptures; and that he was buried, and that he rose the third day according to the Scriptures." 1 Cor. xv. 3, 4. Also that we are "baptized for the dead;" that is, to represent the resurrection of the dead. In the [illegible] grave, Lazarus, though bound hand and foot with grave clothes, came forth alive; Christ came out of the sepulchre alive; and the dead in Christ will come forth alive, and not dead, at the last day. Now the symbol must accurately represent the facts of the resurrection. Christ died once, was buried once, and was once raised to life; the saint dies once, is buried once, and is once raised to life. In the symbol, then, the man is represented as dying to his former course of life, then as being buried in baptism, and, lastly, as being raised up to walk in a new life.

Let us now try trine immersion as a symbol. We will suppose the candidate symbolically dead, that is dead to sin; he is then buried in the name of the Father once, and while in the watery grave, remains symbolically dead; he is then raised up; and in this resurrection must either be symbolically dead or alive; if dead why raise up a dead man? His proper place is to remain in the grave till he can come forth alive. If he comes forth alive, why bury the living?

The fault of the trine baptism in symbol is,—either the person, when buried in the name of the Father, is raised up in the dead state, and then, while dead, buried in the name of the Son to be raised up a dead corpse again, to be once more buried in the name of the Holy Spirit, to finally emerge alive; thus making three burials and two resurrections of dead corpses, and one resurrection to life; or, if he comes forth alive each time, as a resurrection must certainly require he should, then the person is twice buried alive, to die two fearful deaths in the grave, and only enters upon his new life at the third resurrection when raised in the name of the Spirit. The death, burial, and resurrection of our Lord was not after this manner, neither will the grand up-rising, at the last day, be after any such mode.

But we are not left entirely to the teaching of figure and symbol. The Holy Spirit has so accurately defined the ordinance as to leave no room for mistake. We are taught that the redemptive economy is a system composed of certain UNITS. We give McKnight's translation and paraphrase of Eph. iv. 3-6. "Carefully endeavor to preserve the unity of the Spirit by the bond of peace. THERE is one body, and one Spirit, as also ye have been called to one hope of your calling; one Lord, one faith, one baptism; one God and Father of all, who is over all, and with all, and in you all."

This he paraphrases: "Carefully endeavor to preserve the unity which should subsist among persons animated by the same Spirit; and do this by the bond of a peaceful disposition. To this unity ye are bound by many strong ties. For there is one body, or church which comprehends you all; and one Spirit which animates that one body by his gifts; as also ye have been called to one hope of the same blessings by your calling. Ye all serve one Lord; have one and the same objects of faith; and have professed that faith by one form of baptism. Ye worship one God and Father of all, etc." The argument is: You belong to a system where everything is a unit; therefore be of one and the same disposition, that your temper, or spirit may, as a unit, correspond with the units of the economy. If we were to change one term of one of the premises, and read, "One body—one spirit—one hope—one Lord—one faith—trine baptism—one God and Father of all, who would not feel the jar, and see the incongruity, of the language? Theologie would be ruined; for the unity of spirit is argued from the unity of each of the terms.

Finally the term baptism means a dipping, or an immersion; hence there is—one body—one spirit—one hope—one Lord—one faith—ONE BAPTISM (or one immersion, not trine dip, or trine immersion,)—one God and Father. Therefore keep the unity of the Spirit.

In our next we will examine the force and uses of the prepositions in and into.

S. A. C.

Duties Devolving Upon Christians.

Some seem to attach more importance to the faith than to the obedience of the gospel. The gospel was "made known to all nations for the obedience of faith." Rom. xvi. 25, 26. One of the chief designs for which the gospel was published among all nations was obedience, not only before, but after baptism. According to the great commission, the apostles were commanded to go and make disciples (margin) of, or among "all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Spirit." But was their work completed when they had discipled those to whom they had preached? No; their duty had just commenced, for a disciple is only a learner. When a sinner shall have believed, repented, and been baptized, he has just entered the school of Christ. To suppose that his education is completed at this point of his history is like claiming that a pupil should graduate when he enters the primary department of the school. To leave the disciples here is like gathering a flock of sheep together in one place and leaving them without an enclosure or shepherd, to be devoured by wolves. Christ does not stop with the command to go and make disciples. He adds teaching them (the disciples) to "observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you." ver. 20. Obedience, therefore, to all the commandments of Christ, is just as essential to final salvation as faith. It is justice, that without works it is impossible to please God, as without faith it is impossible to please him. James reasons the point ably and logically. Hear him: "What doth it profit, my brethren, though a man say he hath faith and have not works? Can faith save him? If a brother or sister be naked, and destitute of daily food, and one of you say unto them, depart in peace; be ye warmed and filled; notwithstanding ye give them not those things which are needful to the body; what doth it profit? Even so faith, if it hath not works, is dead, being alone. But a man may say, thou hast faith, and I have works; show me thy faith without thy works, and I will show thee my faith by my works. Thou believest there is one God; thou doest well; the devils also believe and tremble. But wilt thou know, O vain man, that faith without works is dead? Was not Abraham, our father, justified by works, when he had offered Isaac, his son, upon the altar? Seest thou how faith wrought with his works, and by works was faith made perfect? And the scripture was fulfilled which saith, Abraham believed God, and it was imputed unto him for righteousness; and he was called the friend of God. Ye see then how by works a man is justified, and not by faith only. Likewise also was Rahab, the harlot, justified by works, when she had received the messengers, and had sent them out another way. For as the body without the breath (margin) is dead, so faith without works is dead. James ii. 14, 26.

Faith is only the first unit in the sum of addition of Christian duties and graces. God proposes to multiply grace on his part, and asks us in return to work out the sum of addition, faith being the Alpha in development of Christian character. Christian character is not the subject of creation, but of developement. God has provided the means, and left those to whom these means are made known to work out their own salvation. His grace is multiplied through the medium of exceeding great and previous promises held out as incentives to heroic effort. See 2 Pet. i. 4. Through the moral power of these glorious promises he may triumph over the world with its corruption and lust, and finally obtain the incorruptible and immoral nature of our heavenly father and his holy angels. It is not enough, however, to shun temptation and escape the corrupting influences around us, we must add all those graces which adorned the immaculate character of him who was made perfect through suffering (Heb. ii. 8) as an example for all Christians to imitate. Thus the apostle continues, and besides this, giving all diligence, add to your faith, virtue; (courage) and to virtue (courage) knowledge; and to knowledge temperance; and to temperance patience; and to patience godliness; and to godliness brotherly kindness: and to brotherly kindness charity," or love. 2 Pet. i. 5, 6, 7. Thus, we commence with faith and climax with love.

James addressing his brethren says, "So speak ye, and so do, as they that shall be judged by the law of liberty. Jas ii. 12. We are not only to profess, but to do the will of God. Christ refers to a class of men who have made a loud profession, but have been deficient in corresponding good works. He says, "Not every one that saith unto me, Lord, Lord, shall enter into the kingdom of heaven; but he that doeth the will of my father which is in heaven." Matt. vii. 21. He then shows that not the hearer of the word only, but the doer of the word shall be saved. He says, "Therefore, whosoever heareth these sayings of mine and doeth them, I will liken him unto a wise man, which built his house upon a rock, and the rain descended, and the floods came, and the winds blew and beat upon that house; and it fell not; for it was founded upon the rock. And everyone which heareth these sayings of mine, and doeth them not, shall be likened to a foolish man, which built his house upon the sand. And the rain descended, and the floods came, and the winds blew and beat upon the house, and it fell; and great was the fall of it." verses 24, 27. The whole issue, after having heard the words of the great teacher, turns upon doing them. Christ's sayings are compared to a rock, and those who do the will of his father, by hearing and doing his sayings, are represented as building upon a solid rock; and their superstructure of faith and hope, though frail it may appear, will remain unmoved amid the last winds, and waves, and warring elements. But those who hear and obey not, are compared to the foolish man who built his house upon the sand, which however costly or magnificent must fall before the rushing winds or ebbing [illegible] great will be the wreck of [illegible] hopes, as is clearly revealed [illegible] jection of many while p[illegible] own souls being the [illegible] Matt. vii. 22, 23. Faith without wo[illegible] is like a light hid under a bush[illegible] instead of being placed upon a cand[illegible] stick, that it may give light to all [illegible] the room. Matt. v. 15. The churc[illegible] of the living God, is the moral light-house of the world. The light of faith is good works. Hence, Christ says, "Let your light so shine before men, that they may see your good works, and glorify your father which is in heaven." verse 16. Faith without works is like a candle-stick without a candle. The stick is of no use without the candle; and the candle is of no use, without it shall be lighted. Faith without works may be compared to a tree which is fair to look upon, but which bears no fruit. It might be difficult to prove that a fruitless tree is bad. It would be equally difficult to prove that it was good. Christ did not curse that barren fig-tree because it bore bad fruit, but because it bore no fruit at all. Good fruit is the only evidence of a good tree. Christ says, "Ye shall know them by their fruits. Do men gather grapes of thorns, or figs of thistles? Even so every good tree bringeth forth good fruit, and a corrupt tree bringeth forth evil fruit. A good tree cannot bring forth evil fruit; neither can a corrupt tree bring forth good fruit. Every tree that bringeth not forth good fruit, is hewn down and cast into the fire. Therefore, by their fruits ye shall know them." verses 16, 19. Paul said concerning his Corinthian brethren; "Ye are our epistles * * known and read of all men." 2 Cor. iii. 2. Paul preached and they practiced what he preached, Paul gave precept and they example. J. M. S.

E RESTITUTION

COME LORD JESUS!

O Lord Jesus, is our cry,
ising every groan and sigh;
each heart's unceasing prayer,
ising on the midnight air,
the rapture of our song;
the strain we would prolong;
the solace in our grief:
we bore a sure relief.

w long, thy church has stood reels of wilderhood;
ith patience meek and scorn,
for her Lord's return;
ng with her tearful eyes,
to the eastern skies;
still the long delay,
rising King of day.

e, Lord Jesus. This has rung, the rattling martyr's tongue;
the cruel wild-beast's den;
to the lurking rack of men;
In the damp and gloomy cell,
From the gaoler's fiery hell;
From the gibbet, and the flame
Forth to sweetest accents came

This confession unto death;
Borne upon the latest breath.
Come, Lord Jesus, cries the seer
From the seagirt Island drear;
Lord above the billow's roar,
Speaking on the rocky shore,
Comes the voice distinct and clear,
Fishing on the Christian's ear.

'Long the dreary track of time,
Floats the earnest pray'r sublime;
Echoing back in sweet refrain,
Come, Lord Jesus, come to reign;
Come in thy majestic might,
To avenge the truth and right;
To arouse the sleeping dead,
And to crown each holy head.

Coming of our absent Lord!
'Tis the doctrine of the Word!
Scoffers then may scoff in vain;
He has said "I'll come again."
Plain expression of our hope!
Not in symbol or in trope;
Fishermen of Galilee,
This same Jesus, you shall see.

THE SPIRITS IN PRISON.

BROTHER REED:—

Give an exposition of 1 Pet. iii. 18
Query.—What spirits did Christ preac in prison? Also chapter iv. 6. Quer
Who was dead and to be judged accor to men in the flesh.

I want this subject treated full and luastive in the RESTITUTION, for the be of others as well as myself.

Yours for Truth.

T. R. PATTO

The subject indicated above been one of much discussion am Commentators and biblical critics many years. The Catholics quoted these texts to prove the trine of purgatory, and others, t tablish the theory of a post mor gospel. We have examined the ject with some care and are perfectly satisfied that the reference is to living men, and not to the departed dead.
This view of the subject is sustained by the general harmony of the Bible and by the best critics and scholars.

Dr. Adam Clark gives the following note on The spirits in prison. "The inhabitants of the antidiluvian world, who, having been disobedient, and convicted of the most flagrant transgressions against God, were sentenced by his law, to destruction. But their punishment was delayed, to see if they would repent; and the long suffering of God waited one hundred and twenty years, which was granted to them for this purpose, during which time, as criminals, tried and convicted, they were represented as being in prison, detained under the arrest of Divine justice, which waited, either for their repentance or the expiration of their respite, the punishment pronounced might be inflicted.
This I have long believed to be the sense of this difficult passage."—
Clark's Note on 1 Pet. iii. 19.

Again, says Dr. Clark: "The word πνευμασι spirits, is supposed to render this view of the subject improbable, because this must mean disembodied spirits; but this certainly does not follow, for the spirits of just men made perfect, Heb. xii. 23, certainly means righteous men, and men still in the church militant; and the Father of spirits, Heb. xii. 9 means men still in the body; and the God of the spirits of all flesh, Num. xvi. 22; xxvii. 16, means men not in a disembodied
state."

I have before me the Improved
sion of the New Testament, printed 1809, and find the text translated follows: "Being put to death in-in the flesh, but restored to life he spirit; by which, after he
st) was gone, he preached to the s in prison." This translation accompanied with the following note: "By the holy spirit, which his ascension, he communicated his Apostles, he preached to spirits, e., to persons in prison, to idolatrous heathen, the slaves of ignorance and vice: he thus proclaimed liberty to the captives. Isa. xlii. 6, 7;
xlvii. 9."

If the reader will examine the texts ove referred to he will see that rist was to preach the Gospel to se who are represented as being in See also Isa. lxi. 1. "The of the Lord God is upon me;
e the Lord hath anointed me to good tidings unto the meek; sent me to heal the broken-hearted, to proclaim liberty to the captives, and the opening of the prison to them that are bound." The reader will observe that this prophecy had special reference to the Gospel dispensation and in no way refers to a post mortem gospel. That this is the case the reader will learn by reading Luke iv. 16; where Christ quotes this very text from Isaiah, and applies it to Himself.

This view is further strengthened by a number of the best MSS. Dr.
Clark presents various readings of the text, which confirm the view above stated, as follows: "By which he (Christ) came spiritually, and preached to them who were in prison." Another MS. has it, "In which, coming spiritually, he preached to those, who were SHUT UP in prison."

The following from the Coptic version, as translated by Wakefield, is still plainer. "Being killed in body but made alive by the Spirit; in which indeed he went and preached to the minds of men in prison; who were also hard to be convinced in former times; as when the patience of God continued waiting in the days of Noah."

The following from Cobb's Christian Divinity, is a fair statement of the case. "This work of liberating

McKnight renders it, "For this purpose hath the Gospel been preached to the dead, that although they might be condemned indeed by men in the flesh, yet they might live eternally by God in the spirit."

Knatchbull renders it, "For this cause was the Gospel preached to them that were dead that they who live according to men in the flesh, may be condemned; but they who live according to God in the spirit, may live."

These translations are sufficient to show that the Gospel was preached to those who were dead in sin, and that they might become blessed through the life of faith in Christ our Lord.
Nearly all commentators are agreed that the especial reference is made to the Gentiles.

We submit, therefore, that there is nothing in either of these texts to prove that men's souls are in a conscious state after death, or that Christ ever preached to those who were in their tombs. For it is written, "Whatsoever thy hand findeth to do, do it with thy might; for there is no WORK, nor DEVICE, nor KNOWLEDGE, nor WISDOM, in the GRAVE WHITHER THOU
GOEST." Eccl. ix. 10.

The Fullness of Christ.

The happiness we derive from creatures is like a beggar's garment—it is made up of pieces and patches, and is worth very little after all. But the blessedness we derive from the Savior is single and complete. In Him all fullness dwells. He is conversant with every period. He is answerable to every condition. He is a physician to heal, a counsellor to plead, a king to govern, a friend to sympathize, a father to provide. He is a foundation to sustain, a root to enliven, a fountain to refresh. He is the shadow from the heat, the bread of life, the Morning Star, the Sun of righteousness; all, and in all. No creature can be a substitute for Him, but He can supply the place of every creature. He is all my salvation, and all my desire; my hope, my life, my glory, and joy.

Whom have I in heaven but Thee? and there is none upon earth that I desire besides thee. My flesh and my heart faileth, but thou art the strength of my heart and my portion forever.
I cannot be exposed, I cannot be friendless, I cannot be poor, I cannot be fearful, I cannot be sorrowful with Thee.

Immortalization of the Entire Race.

Such is the gospel or "addition to,
or new link in the gospel" of Brother Wm. P. Shockey, of Nebraska, as set forth in a number of discourses just closed at Rensselaer, Ind. No matter how much they may have sinned against light and knowledge in the present dispensation. I present from my notes taken a brief synopsis of his reasons given, and positions taken.

1st. "In thy seed shall all nations, families and kindreds be blessed."
Assumed the blessing to be the gift of immortality.

2d. On Eph. i. 10. "That in the dispensation of the fulness of times he might gather together in one all things in Christ." Assumption.—that he would gather all creatures into Christ.

3d. On Rom. viii. 21. "The creature shall be delivered from the bondage of corruption." Assumed—the creature to be all the balance of creation in antithesis with the children of God by faith.

4th. Rev. xxi. 4. "There shall be no more death." This of all others was the grand rallying point. Assumed—that no more death, must necessarily mean, that every creature (of which Adam was the progenitor), that ever had died, was then delivered, and with all others, placed beyond the power of death. Many minor arguments were produced in affirmation, that all are familiar with, which have been exploded over and over again; such as the pleasure, will, mercy, goodness, and love of God. If strong sympathy could settle a question, then be certainly placed this forever at rest.

Much time and hard labor were expended in trying to remove certain plain passages that were evidently in the way, of which I will give sufficient to show the manner.

1st. On Luke xiii. 28, 29, "There shall be weeping . . . when ye shall see Abraham . . . in the kingdom of God and . . . yourselves thrust out."
This was transposed, thus: "There shall be weeping . . . when you are thrust out, (at the overthrow of the Jewish polity), and you shall see (in the restitution) Abraham . . . in the kingdom. Lest it should be objected still that the transposition did not change the sense with the copulative left in, he changed the copulative and to the disjunctive nevertheless, thereby making him say, notwithstanding you are thrust out now, by and by you will see Abraham, Isaac and Jacob, in the kingdom of God; and they shall come from the east, west, north and south, and sit down in the kingdom.

2d. In 2 Thess. i. 6, 8. "The taking vengeance on them that . . . obey not the gospel," was admitted to be their destruction (that is of the living), but it was the fire that took vengeance on them and not God; the fire was the fire of battle of their own getting up.

3d. "The second death," Rev. xx. was the same great battle. Fire came down from God out of heaven and devoured them, that is, from their God, out of their heaven (political) in shape of torpedoes, shot and shell. The first death was the destruction of every wicked soul living at the time of the flood. The result of the great battle is the second death, which terminates like the first, in the destruction of every wicked living soul,—which of course, in order to their destruction, must gather into the contending armies all the wicked without exception; the extreme aged, the cripples, blind, and diseased of all kinds, without reference to sex or condition. Thus assembled, they fight until the last one is killed. Who kills the last one, is not stated, but of course, he or she, as the case may be, must perform the work themselves, as there is none other to do it. To get rid of the idea that the second death might have power on the rest (remainder) of the dead, those that lived not again until the thousand years were finished, in contrast with those who lived again at the first resurrection. In the statement "Blessed and holy is he that hath part in the first resurrection, for on such the second death hath no power," The words hath part in, did not mean those participating in, or included among the number of the first raised. What do you suppose it could mean? Simply the righteous living, hath part in the kingdom and inheritance with those first raised! The great effort was to show there is no future retribution on account of anything done here, and to be consistent therewith, it was likewise claimed there is no future reward on account of a godly life here.
Yet admitted, that action here effected the time of entering into life and the kingdom, not as a reward of virtue, but because at that time, when Christ comes, he finds them qualified for the position. The unqualified live again after the thousand years, and then die no more. Why? Because God has so decreed, and then they are compelled to be righteous and holy, and to come in. Who compels them? God. In what manner does he do it? This he did not publicly tell, but kindly informed me, and for the benefit of others I will impart the knowledge. When they are raised from the dead,—reconi-structed—they will have perfect organizations. All in their organization that inclined them to do evil being now completely eradicated—they are powerless to do evil. Therefore, how easy it is to discover where the responsibility is for either doing good or evil in the past, and how unjust it would be in God to "reward every man according to his deeds."
He exhorted us much to freedom of thought, to be courteous and kind, all of which was very good; and when I suggested that it might not be treating him courteously to occupy a portion of the time in criticism, he fully concurred, and kindly suggested that I write out what I might wish to say and he would publish it in his, the only free paper; and still more kindly consented that I might occupy a few minutes after his last discourse. So after speaking about two hours, he publicly announced that Brother Halstead would like to speak about five minutes.

If every creature would or could be saved from death—immortalized—made holy and happy, we should rejoice exceedingly. We want to see all saved that it is possible to induce to be saved; but inasmuch as holiness and happiness is the result of virtuous action, and virtue cannot result from compulsory action. Therefore, it is not hard to see the wisdom and mercy of God in the past, present, and revealed purpose in the future. That transgressed law producing fixed character in evil, and consequent unhappiness, terminates in death as the only relief. Yet I do not believe that because one conceives that God may, or will in some manner save all in holiness, that he should therefore be unchristianized, or is therefore necessarily vile; but I must say that the advocacy of anything that compels men of acknowledged ability to resort to such pettifogiug, must be, to say the least, quite doubtful; and further it has necessarily this practical effect on the man out of Christ.
You ask him to deny himself of all ungodliness and get on board the Gospel train for the New Jerusalem.
He says: Oh, no; I understand that the regulations on this train is self-de- nial, and I am assured by the conductor there is another train to come, by and by, with much better accommodations. You ask him about the delay in time and consequent want of enjoyment. He replies, it will make no difference with me in that respect, as I shall retire and sleep during the time; hence it will be no delay to me.
Therefore I would suggest; would it not be better, more practical and sensible, if we have a mission here—a work to perform in this dispensation in saving men by turning them to righteousness; that we go to work in earnest at that, until relieved, and then when our work is assigned us in the next world—work at that.

This charity that always commences on the largest scale, and the farthest from home, never accomplishes much. "Let us cleanse ourselves from all filthiness of the flesh and spirit," and then teach men now and here, that which is written. "Be not deceived. God is not mocked, whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he also reap; he that soweth to the flesh, shall of the flesh reap corruption; but he that soweth to the spirit, shall of the spirit reap life everlasting.

D. T. HALSTEAD.

Satisfied.

"As for me I will behold thy face in righteousness, I shall be satisfied when I awake in thy likeness."—Psa. xvii. 15.

What a volume of meaning in that one word, Satisfied. All our wants and wishes filled—nothing lacking,— no cares, sorrows nor anxieties be-cloud our brow, or mar our happiness.
How lovely! None can claim to enjoy such a desirable state in this world of sin, sorrow and suffering. Though possessed of sufficient wealth, so that we can afford all the comforts, luxuries and pleasures of life, though blessed with friends and honored in society, yet there is an aching void, a longing for something, we cannot tell what. See the rich young nobleman as he approaches the Savior with the query as to what he lacked of filling the requirements of a Christian life.
He had been obedient to his parents from his youth up; he had, in short,
been a good, moral man all his life,
and could not think of a single fault, but when informed by the Savior that he must divide his goods with the poor, see what sorrow and dissatisfaction beclouds his brow. Not satisfied to exchange the filthy lucre for an inheritance in the kingdom of God.

The little prattling babe in its mother's arms, tenderly and comfortably cared for, not yet having learned the cares, anxieties and troubles of life, may be apparently satisfied, but the first attractive object coming to view will create a restlessness until obtained. Then quiet for a time is restored, until some other toy comes to view, and that too must be had before quiet can again be restored.

The little boy or girl, coming up to know more of life's pleasures and ills, though favorably surrounded, so that none of the comforts and necessaries of life are lacking, yet there is a continual longing for this thing and that thing, this toy and that piece of finery, wishing themselves men and women, filling higher stations in life, and so on without a possibility of being satisfied.

The young man or lady, though possessed of all the luxuries and comforts of life, filling high and honorable places in society, are still yearning and longing for something, they hardly know what; they look around them for something to fill that aching void. Is it some dear friend whose society they loudly crave? No, the most loved one of all is near by. Is it a parent, companion, child, sister, or brother? No, they are all here, nothing obtainable in this present order of things will relieve that longing, aching void.

The Psalmist David, amid all his favorable surroundings, amid all his songs of praise and adoration to his great Redeemer, seems not to have been fully satisfied, for says he, in the language of our text, "I will behold thy face in righteousness, I shall be satisfied when I awake with thy likeness." Blessed thought! Glorious hope! There is, then, a time coming when all our desires and longing anxieties may be fully satisfied. The Psalmist looked forward to this glorious time, though he might sleep for a time in the cold and silent tomb, as the term awaking would imply, though he might moulder back to dust again, yet he expected to awaken at the resurrection morn, when the curse should be removed,—when the tree of life should be restored,—when the earth should be brought back to its Edanic form, he would then come forth in the likeness of the Son of God, when he would be fully satisfied.

"Satisfied, for like their Lord,
Whose promise gleams upon his Word;
Proclaiming things best."

Items of Jewish History.

The Jews are a people of remote antiquity, descendants from Abraham.
Abraham was chosen and called out of the land of the Chaldeans to become the father of this peculiar people, to whom God expounded his law and made known his revelations; "Unto them were committed the oracles of God." Rom. iii. 2. From Abraham's time we trace their history—which to some extent is given in the books of the Old Testament, especially in the Pentateuch. When their promised Messiah came, they were divided into various religious factions; the Pharisees, Sadducees, and Essenes, which were also divided and sub-divided into different classes. (For a full description of these sects and their sentiments, see Jones' Eccl. Hist.) In modern times, the Jews are divided into three classes: the Caraites, Rabbinists, and Rationalistic, Progressive, or New School. The Caraites admit no rule in religious matters, except the strict letter of the law of Moses. The Rationalists add to the law the traditions and comments of the Talmud. They have two works which bear the name Talmud. Talmud of Jerusalem, and and Talmud of Babylon. The former is more ancient, concise and less clear than the latter, which is more extensive and lucid, and is more generally received by the Jews. Stuck-er's Hist. p. 30. In 70 A. D. Titus captured Jerusalem. The Jews were then led away captive among all nations, Jerusalem trodden down by the Gentiles, and is to remain so until the times of the Gentiles be fulfilled.
Luke xxi. 24. From that day to the present, their house has been desolate, and they have been the subjects of unjust persecution. I might point out many examples wherein the Jews have suffered unjustly, even in recent times. In Ooroomiah, Persia, in 1840, a Jew was publicly burnt to death by order of the governor. Naphtha was poured over him, the torch applied, and he died in the greatest agony.

In Meshed, Persia, in 1839, a Mohammedan child disappeared. The poor Jews had to suffer for it. A number of them were, in a merciless manner, massacred. The rest, in order to save their lives, were compelled to embrace the Mohammedan religion, which was offered to them as an alternative. In fulfillment of prophecy, this once highly honored people have been scattered among all nations.
They have suffered extremely, and are found in all countries, under various circumstances. The Jews came to this continent in 1660, and settled in New York, then called New Amsterdam. They were Portugues and Spanish Jews, from the Batavian Republic; to which Republic they had previously fled, from the cruelties of the Inquisition, in their native land.
Here they were permitted to enjoy religious freedom and liberty. They continued to increase in numbers until they were able to erect a small synagogue, which, up to 1827, was sufficient to accommodate their whole community, and now the City of New York contains ten Jewish synagogues.
In 1780 they began to settle in Philadelphia, also in parts of Virginia and Maryland.

In this country, with the exception of North Carolina, the Jews have fully and impartially enjoyed the just and inalienable rights of men. The number of Jews in the world, is estimated at about five millions. In the United States, about seventy thousand;
Poland and Russia, one million; Austria, half a million; and other large communities exist in the chief countries in Europe. The religious faith of what is now termed the Conservative Jews, may be ascertained from the creed drawn up by Rabbi Mar-monides, who flourished in the eleventh century, which is as follows:

1. I believe, with a true and perfect faith, that God is the Creator, whose name be blessed, governor and maker of all creatures, and that he hath wrought all things, worketh and shall work forever.

2. I believe with a perfect faith that the Creator, whose name be blessed, is one, and that such a unity as is in him can be found in none other, and that he alone hath been our God, is and ever shall be.

3. I believe with a perfect faith that the Creator, whose name be blessed, is not corporeal nor to be comprehended with any bodily property, and that there is no bodily essence that can be likened unto him.

4. I believe with a perfect faith that the Creator, whose name be blessed, to be the first and the least that nothing was before him, and that he shall abide the last, forever.

5. I believe with a perfect faith that the Creator, whose name be blessed, is to be worshipped and none else.

6. I believe with a perfect faith, that all the words of the prophets are true,

7. I believe with a perfect faith,
the prophecies of Moses, our Master.
May he rest in peace; that he was the father and chief of all wise men that lived before him, or ever shall live after him.

8. I believe that the law was given by Moses.

9. I believe that the law shall never be altered, and that God will give no other.

10. I believe that God knows the thoughts and actions of all men.

11. I believe that God will regard the works of all those who perform what he commands, and that he will punish those who transgress his laws.

12. I believe that the Messiah is yet to come, though he tarry a long time.

13. I believe that there will be a resurrection of the dead, at the time when God shall see fit.

This is the doctrinal belief of the mass of the Jewish people. Their Messiah came, they knew him not but rejected him.

He was to them as "a root out of dry ground," there was no form, com-liness, nor beauty in him; therefore they hid, as it were, their faces from him, and cried, "Away with him. We have no king but Cæsar, crucify him; his blood be upon us and our children." Centuries have rolled away in rapid succession; generation after generation have vanished like vapor that mantles the stream. Still Messiah does not come. The disappointment is bitter; "hope deferred maketh the heart sick." Such is and has been the condition of the exiled sons of Jacob, for more than eighteen hundred years. With hearts full of sorrow and disappointment, in mourning clad, they have wandered up and down the highways of earth without a king, either human or divine. Their oppressions have been great, their sorrow continued and long. Their noble ancestors sleep, hushed in the quiet stillness of death, while their sons and daughters traverse the land which is not theirs. These hopes hang on the weeping millions, and they no longer sing the sweet songs of Zion; Zion's glory has departed. She is ploughed as a field. The temple is buried. Jerusalem is trodden down under the feet of unsanctified Gentiles.
Master Moses in the valley of Moab sleeps. David the holy bard is dead, and his sepulchre remains; his tabernacle is fallen, and his throne in ruin lies. But beyond this cloud of darkness is seen a silvery lining, the bow of promise, the father of hope. It is God's set time to favor Zion and to remember Abraham's chosen seed. In the times of restitution Jerusalem shall rise. Zion shall be restored; the tabernacle of David raised up; his throne re-instated; Israel brought back.
Then shall Christ on David's throne assume the rulership of the world.
All grand and glorious will be that day. Come, Lord Jesus, and come quickly.

A. F. DUGGER.

OPPOSITION.—No man ever worked his passage anywhere in a dead calm.
Let no man wax pale, therefore, because of opposition; opposition is what we wants and must have, to be good for anything. Hardship is the native soil of manhood and self-reliance. He who cannot abide the storm without flinching lies down by the wayside to be overlooked or forgotten.

—All genuine love takes sorrow as a part of its portion. Only to sympathize truly is to feel in our hearts the burdens that weigh on other hearts. And as by the cross was wrought the crowning work of Jesus;
as by his death his love shone brightest and with supremest power to win and save, so the highest work of men for men can only be done as we go down into the depths of trouble with others and for others.

God's Little Whiles.

These "little whiles" of God, do they comfort us as God meant they should? or do we look one another in the face, wondering and saying, what is this that he saith? For faith's and comfort's sake let us seek the meaning and the consolation of God's "little whiles." The misery of the "little while" is a legacy to the universal church. Christ's discourse on his second coming, in Matt. 24: certain passages in the Epistles, and the closing words of Revelation: "Behold I come quickly," may all have had, and will have their influence in awakening and keeping alive this, the sweetest hope that the church can cherish—the little while of human life. "For what is your life? It is even as the vapor that appeareth for a little time and then vanisheth away."

Look at the "little while" of earthly sorrow. "Our light affliction which is but for a moment." Surely he is a stranger to human grief, who thus can speak lightly of life's woes. But listen to his own confession: "Of the Jews five times received I forty stripes save one, thrice was I beaten with rods, once was I stoned, thrice I suffered shipwreck, a night and a day have I been in the deep, in journeyings often, in perils of water, in perils of robbers, in perils of my own countrymen, in perils by the heathen, in perils in the city, in perils in the wilderness, in perils in the sea, in perils among false brethren, in weariness and painfulness, in watchings often, in hunger and thirst, in fastings often in cold and nakedness; besides those things that are without, that which cometh upon me daily, the care of all the churches." So far, then, from being a novice, he is an old veteran, battle-scared and tried. But by what magic scale does he weigh such momentous experiences, that he can call them "light afflictions?" By what unknown standard of time does he gauge their continuance, that they seem but for a moment? His afflictions were not light in themselves. There were times when, to use his own language, he "was pressed out of measure, above strength, insomuch that he despaired of life," but whenever the heavy sorrows of life bore down the scale he threw into the balance a weight so mighty that the beam was instantly reversed, and that weight was the eternal weight of glory. Paul's public life was by no means brief, and during the whole period he might well say, "I die daily." As the weight of glory made the affliction light, so the eternal weight of glory made it seem but for a moment. It was then, from the time-side of the eternal, that Paul looked upon life's woes, and felt they were only for a "little while."

Rightly estimated and improved, our afflictions are our greatest mercies. They are the credentials of sonship, they are seals of the divine love, and in proportion as we strive with God's grace, to become partakers of his holiness, we shall find the world sinking in the distance, and ourselves poised on wings of faith, and rejoicing in God's time-view, estimating earth's painful hours by the eternal standard, and comforted by the thought that the sufferings of this present time are not worthy to be compared with the glory that shall be revealed in us. From the remote ages of the eternal future we shall look back and see our entire earthly life, to be but a point, a speck in our immortal career.

To you, my fellow soldiers, I have these words to say: These are not times for fainting, these are not times for idling. All the world is active, the wheels of commerce are revolving at a greater rate than ever; everywhere events march with a giant stride. We have seen what our fathers dreamed not of. Now, if ever, the church of God ought to be awake. The demands of souls require our utmost diligence, the enemy is active in deceiving, we must be active in instructing and saving now, by the precious blood of Christ, who bought us. O ye believers in Christ, bestir yourselves,—if indeed ye be legitimately born from above, if the blood divine be in your veins, and if ye be the soldiers of that great Captain, who unto death strove against sin; and if we expect to wear the white robe and wave the palm of victory. In the name of the eternal and ever-living God, seek ye his Spirit and the divine energy, that ye may labor more abundantly and faint not.—Messiah's Herald.

Science and the Bible.

The thing to be lamented is that the moment men of science get hold of a fact they instantly begin to set it in opposition to God's Word. But the vaunted "fact" of Tuesday often takes another shape on Wednesday, and by Thursday is found to be no fact all. The truth is that geology, as a science, consists mainly of probable guesses. "That field of peat," says Sir Charles Lyell, "has probably been 7,000 years in course of formation." "No," replies a friend of his own in a published criticism, "I think it quite possible that it has only been 700 years in growing." A piece of pottery is found in the valley of the Nile, and a geologist immediately argues that it must have lain there more than 30,000 years. But an antiquarian soon points out marks upon it which show it to be less than 2,000 years old. Yet it is upon guesses of this kind, which do not amount to a tenth part of a proof, that the Lyells, Owenses and Colensos venture boldly to assert that it is clear that Moses knew nothing whatever of the subject on which he was writing. Just in the same spirit do Bunson and his followers unhesitatingly assert that the growth of languages proves that the world must be more than 20,000 years old. We refer them to the confusion of tongues described by Moses, which at once dissipates their dream. "Oh! but that was a miracle," they reply, "and we have made up our minds never to believe a miracle." Very well, gentlemen, there we must leave you; for men who make up their minds before inquiring are not acting like reasonable beings. A dozen other little juntoes are now at work in the same laudable fashion. One set is not quite certain that man was "developed" out of an ape. Well, and what was the ape "developed" out of? They do not know. Our comfort in all this is that this influenza will wear itself out like the Tractarian, or like the infidel fashion of the days of Bolingbroke. Men have been striving to get rid of the Bible and its inconvenient morality for nearly these two thousand years; but they were never further off from their end than they are at present.—Shaftesbury.

How He was Led.

William Leask, D. D., editor of "The Rainbow," London, England, made the following "statement," prefatory to a sermon he preached the last Sunday in October, 1869. He says:

"There is one man in the world of whom I never like to speak, and that is myself, but in this case a brief personal statement is desirable with regard so what I may call my mental history, i. e. my mental history respecting the destiny of the lost. I have very vivid sights of things; it is an intellectual characteristic, not acquired, and it is a fact that I look at some matters in an intense light. Many years ago, in the exercise of this faculty, I was distressed exceedingly at the thought—the appalling thought—that the overwhelming majority of human beings were to derive no benefit from the death of the Son of God. I tried to realize, according to the teachings of modern theology, the dogma that countless millions of humans are to be kept in a life of torture as long as God himself lived. I looked at his character as a God of love, who so loved man as to give his only begotten Son to a life of sorrow, and a death of ignominy and agony; I looked at his gracious appeals to us, his tenderness, his loving care for the widow, the orphan, the stranger, and the outcast, and I could not reconcile the manifest inconsistency. "It is no business of yours to reconcile it," I have been told. I beg pardon, all that is revealed belongs to me. I never pry into the unrevealed. As time went on, I found that this common doctrine of theology had made a countless number of infidels; men told us in plain language, "We cannot believe that God will everlastingly damn his creatures." I found that persons had been driven to madness by the contemplation of this awful theory. I heard men blaspheme the God I love, on account of this doctrine, but, I, like others, thought and spoke of the immortal soul and never-dying spirit. Again the subject came before me, and I examined the scripture and found to my utter amazement, that no such word appeared in the book as "immortal soul of man," or, "never-dying spirit." Here a flood of light burst upon me. If this be so; if man, as man, is simply a natural being, a mortal being, the doctrine of an immortal life in hell cannot possibly be true. I have always preached the doctrine of life only in Christ, but in the usual theological light, the spiritual, instead of the natural life we derive from Adam, in investigating this, I felt compelled to take this position—we must take God's work literally, except where parable or metaphor is found; everything that looks like a doctrinal statement must be accepted as the plain utterance of the Holy Ghost. I found this key invaluable. I saw that there are more resurrections than one—the resurrection of the lost and the resurrection of the righteous, do not take place simultaneously. I saw, too, what I have been teaching for many years past, that the kingdom and the church are two distinct things—that the coming of the Lord will supercede the present dispensation, and that the present dispensation is the era of the church. At the same time, I narrowly studied the meanings of words. Philology is important in theology. I looked at the original meaning of words, in the language in which the Bible was given, and though "everlasting" frequently expresses far more than its Greek original, I accept it literally in relation to the doom of the wicked, because irrevocable destruction of being is "everlasting punishment." Now, look around me, and find numbers in Germany, multitudes in America, and not a few in England, who have recoiled from the doctrine, that the devil is to triumph and have the majority—that groaning misery and blasphemy are to exist forever; recoiling from that they have adopted the theory of restoration. Hundreds, thousands of Protestants who protest against the Roman Catholic purgatory, have invented a Protestant purgatory, which is infinitely worse. I searched again, and came to the conclusion that restoration is unknown to the Scriptures. I cannot bear the thought that the fires of hell are to be more efficacious than the blood of Jesus. I have taught the destruction of the wicked dead for some time past, in the magazine which I have the honor to conduct, and I am glad to-night to come before you and be able to state—though I feel a deep sense of responsibility—that hundreds and thousands are meditating upon this great question.

What is Christ to Us?

He is our way, we walk in him.

He is our truth, we embrace him.

He is our Lord, we come see him to rule over us.

He is our Master, we serve him.

He is our Teacher, instructing us in the way of salvation.

He is our Prophet, pointing out the future.

He is our Priest, having atoned for us.

He is our Advocate—ever living to make intercession for us.

He is our Savior, saving to the uttermost.

He is our root, we grow from him.

He is our bread, we feed upon him.

He is our fold, we enter it by him.

He is our Shepherd, leading us into green pastures.

He is our true vine, we abide in him.

He is the water of life, we slake our thirst from him.

He is the fairest among ten thousand, we admire him above everything.

He is the brightness of the Father's glory, and the express image of his person; we strive to reflect his likeness.

He is our wisdom, we are guided by him.

He is our righteousness, we cast all our imperfections upon him.

He is our sanctification, we draw all the sources of holy life from him.

He is our redemption, redeeming us from all iniquity.

He is our healer, healing all our diseases.

He is our friend, relieving us in all our necessities.

He is our Brother, sharing us in our difficulties.—N. Bishop.

Worth of the Bible.

Of all the boons which God has bestowed on this apostate and orphaned creation, we are bound to say, that the Bible is the noblest and most precious. We bring not into comparison with this illustrious donation, the glorious sun-light, nor the rich sustenance which is poured forth from the storehouse of the earth, not that existence itself which allows us, though dust, to soar into companionship with angels. The Bible is the development of man's immortality, the guide which informs him how he may move off triumphantly from a contracted and temporary scene, and grasp destinies of unbounded splendor, eternity his life-time, and infinity his home. It is the record which tells us that this rebellious section of God's unlimited empire is not excluded from our Maker's compassions; but that the creatures who move upon its surface, though they have basely sepulchred in sinfulness and corruption the magnificence of their nature, are yet so dear to Him who first formed them, that He hath bowed down the heavens in order to open their graves. Oh! you have only to think what a change would pass on the aspect of our race, if the Bible were suddenly withdrawn, and all remembrance of it swept away, and you arrive at some faint notion of the worth of the volume. Take from Christendom the Bible, and you have taken the moral chart by which alone its population can be guided. Ignorant of the nature of God, and only guessing at their own immortality; the tens of thousands would be as mariners tossed on the wide ocean, without a pole-star, and without a compass. Melville.

Too Much Joking.

Slang is not wit. Neither is the misspelling of words humor. And we may go even farther, and say that the prevalent disposition to present every thing, serious as well as trifling, in a ridiculous light, is also bad as a matter of morals. Yet there are many people whose sole effort in writing and in conversation appears to be in the direction of what they consider "smartness." That constant trifling with the sad realities of human life, with the serious work of human kind, with the events of the day, and with the character of the living and with the memory of the dead, is lowering the tone not only of literature, but of morals. The world itself is not a huge joke, however some people may so effect to consider it.—Religious Telescope.

The Simplicity of the Bible.

The fact that God gave a revelation, not for the learned, but for all classes of men: not for any one age or nation, but for all nations; proves, that that revelation may be understood, at least as to its direct teaching, without the aid of human science. It is an instructive fact, that the Gospel was understood, and did achieve its most signal triumphs, at periods when every existing system of philosophy was fundamentally erroneous. The entire history of the Church in all ages, and in the present, sustain me in the assertion—that the gospel has lost its power over the human conscience and heart, precisely in the degree in which there has been departure from the obvious meaning of the language of the Bible, to accommodate its teaching to any science or system of philosophy. The history of the Church furnishes not a solitary exception to this general statement; indeed, one of the most convincing proofs of the inspiration of the Scriptures is the fact, that every attempt to improve upon their meaning, (and there have been many such,) has been attended with loss of power, or has exhibited a perverted and pernicious power.—Nathan L. Rice, D. D.

A Time for All Things.

There is a time to laugh. In youth's glad and joyous hour, ere age with its innumerable troop of cares attacks the heart, or dims the eye, or furrows the cheek; when the lips are yet strangers to guile and the tongue knoweth not deceit—then is the time to laugh.

There is a time to weep. When we gaze upon the lifeless form of the lovely and the beloved; when for the first time guilt writes its name upon the heart, the soul is stained with sin—then is the time to weep.

There is a time to die. When the heart grows sick of earth and all its vanities; when with an undimmed eye we can look across the Jordan that separates us from the promised land of rest, and when the tired soul, purified and clean, longs for its heaven and its God—then, then is the time to die.—Hebrew Leader

Christ's Return From Heaven.

Christ's return from heaven in royal majesty, sovereign power and divine glory, is not a temporary visit. He comes to remain. He comes, as the rightful heir to David's throne, to establish his kingdom "under the whole heavens." He comes as the divinely ordained ruler of this earth, to "put down all rule, and all authority," and thus extend his dominions "to the ends of the earth."

But while He will be hailed with joy by his chosen people, his return will meet with opposition from the world. "The kings of the earth" will "set themselves" against his authority, and "the rulers take counsel together" to extirpate his kingdom, and attempt to triumph again as they did in Gethsemane; but all in vain. "He that sitteth in the heavens shall laugh; the Lord shall have them in derision." Man once triumphed over God's Anointed, but He is the Conqueror now.

Angels, methinks, must have wept when they witnessed the agonies of Calvary; heaven must have felt the gloom that shrouded the sorrowful scenes of Gethsemane. But when God shall set his King upon "the holy hill of Zion," the heavenly welkin of joy will announce the dawn of another age—a day of triumph. When the earth shall quake and the mountains tremble in acknowledgement of his sovereignty, as He sets his feet upon the Mount of Olives, this dispensation will have ended—"the times of the Gentiles" will have expired,—"the times of restitution" have fully commenced,—Jerusalem be released from her long trodden-down state,—and the blindness which has so long veiled Israel's eyes, be mercifully removed, and they shall look upon Him and "mourn for him" with the bitterness and anguish of one who mourneth for his only son.

Oh, what love God hath for his chosen people who now appear to be cast off! "In that day shall there be a fountain opened to the house of David, and to the inhabitants of Jerusalem for sin and for uncleanness." Zech. xiii. 1. In that day shall "the Spirit and the Bride say, Come. And let him that heareth say, Come. And let him that is athirst come. And whosoever will let him take of the waters of life freely." Rev. xxii. 17.

Surely, the contemplation of these things which are just before us, should inspire all to diligent, prayerful watchfulness, for the rising of the Morning Star.—Wm. H. Spencer.

THE FAMINE IN ASIA MINOR.—Constantinople, Jan. 16. The committe of relief for the famine-stricken people of Asia Minor, urgently request the English and American press to let it be known that their funds are exhausted, while distress is increasing. They state that it will be necessary to clothe, feed and give medical assistance to several hundred thousand persons until next June.

WAR IN THE EAST.—Vienna, Jan. 20. The government of Montenegro has declared war against Turkey. Both countries are rapidly arming, and foreigners are leaving in large numbers.

—To-morrow may never come to us. We do not live in to-morrow. We cannot find it in any title deeds. The man who owns whole blocks of real estate, and great ships on the sea, does not own a single minute of to-morrow. To-morrow! It is a mysterious possibility not yet born. It lies under the seal of midnight, behind the veil of glittering constellations.

DIED.

Susanah Brown, wife of Wm. Brown departed this life in Ringgold county, Iowa, Nov. 8, 1874, in the sixty-seventh year of her age. Mother Brown embraced religion some twenty years ago, and united with the United Brethren, with whom she remained until some three years ago, when she first heard the advent Christian views preached in her own house. She, like an honest seeker after truth, gladly accepted the faith of the Gospel, and has ever since endeavored by a well ordered life and godly conversation, to honor her profession. She died in the triumph of a living faith, and in the cheering expectation of soon being awakened by the voice of her Savior calling her with the rest of the saints from their dusty beds. Words of comfort were spoken on the occasion by Elder A. F. Dugger, from Isa. xxv. 11.

Mistakes as to Israel's Return.

The popular educational arguments against Israel's return are logical and the conclusion just, from their premises. The calling by the Gospel is from both Jews and Gentiles. It is a call to faith, repentance and baptism "into the one name—into one spirit, one body—Christ being the head. Acts ii. 3; xv. 17; 1 Cor. xii. Gal. iii. Now, if this be all that the Gospel proposes, then there can be no return of Israel or Judah; no, none at all. But what then becomes of Christ's kingdom over Israel, as often foretold in both the Old and the New Testament? Where then, is the Lord's throne in Zion? Where is the promised and prayed for kingdom to come? We have as yet "the kingdom of men." The government of the world by men, as men; in "the 4th," the Roman in its fragmentary form. Hence, as our mediator,—Messiah—our "priest after the order of Melchizedek," is still "within the veil," his kingdom must be future and after his second coming to reign. Amen.

In answer then, to the question, "will fleshly Israel be restored," I say NO—not within the circumscribed range of the questioner; not in "this present evil world." Yes, more; not at all as fleshly Israel, for the question involves a profound paradox—a series of impossible contradictions!

Israel "restored" will be Israel "saved, when the Redeemer comes to Zion." Rom. xi. 26; Matt. ii. 6; xix. 28; xxiii. 37–39. The blind man "restored" was no longer blind. Do think! Joseph's brethren, bowing to his royal will in Egypt, were no longer his betrayers. "Their sheaves" bent in willing obedience to his; for "the birthright" was Joseph's, thus they confirmed it by their own act. Now, when Israel shall look on him whom they pierced and "mourn," they will be no longer "blinded;" but his obedient subjects as often foretold. The question not only assumes a contradiction in terms, but that this "iron age the Roman" is final! That there will not be an "age (world) to come." It assumes that Jesus spoke unadvisedly, when He said, "neither in this world (age) nor in that (age) to come." Matt. xii. 32. I will not argue this truth, as to "the world to come;" we have it in Matthew, Mark and Luke, from the lips of Jesus. The prophets proclaimed it and the apostles echo it, scores of times. There it is—beyond the reach of human dogma. "The saints take the kingdom for the age, even the age of the ages." Dan. vii. 14, 18; Eph. ii. 7; iii. 21. It is "the world to come" that is to be SUBJECT to Christ. Heb. ii. 5; vi. 5. Then, in "the regeneration (the times of restitution) when the Son of man shall sit on the throne of his glory, the apostles are to sit on twelve thrones judging the twelve tribes of Israel." Matt. xix. 28; Luke xxii. 29, 30.

As some individuals of some of the ten tribes did return from Babylon, to Jerusalem, and did retain their genealogy, therefore it is argued that the ten tribes of Israel were returned with Judah, from that captivity, and that this fulfills their prophetic return. This argument, unwittingly perhaps, admits the promised restoration, and provides thus for its fulfillment. It also ignores the history of that people on this point through three hundred years, during national existance. The more pious returned again and again from the revolt under Jeraboam and his successors. Judah was greatly strengthened by large accessions from Israel. 2 Chron. xi. 16, 17; xv. 9; xxx. 18; xxxv. 18. Yet this did not then annul the nationality of Israel; therefore the few who returned from Babylon, did not annul Israel's national captivity. These persons all retained their tribal genealogy, though they were not "the ten tribes," much less "the kingdom of Israel."

It must be admitted that, "the Lamb of God will take away the sin of the world." John i. 29. Why, then, as "Jesus died for that nation," John xi. 50, 52, should "their sins and iniquities" be assumed to be too flagrant to be "remembered no more." Heb. viii. 8–12; Rom. xi. 25–29; Luke i. 69, 73. "Be ye reconciled to God!" Their sanctuary is desolate, but it "shall be cleansed." Their nationality is gone, but with as distinct a limitation, as is the absence of Jesus! "Ye shall not see me, till ye shall say blessed is he that cometh!" "If the casting away of them be the reconciling of the world, what the receiving of them, but life from the dead." Rom. xi. 12–15; Matt. xxiii. 38; Ezek. xxxvii. 1, 28.

"The Law—the shadow of good things (yet) to come," has its miraculous inception amid the graudeurs and terrors of Jehovah's presence on Sinai! Its temple was dedicated by the descent of the divine Shekinah! Its way was prepared by the going of Israel's God from everlasting, and all its "examples" by David and Solomon are deemed worthy of inspired record. How then, can the future Israel of all prophesy, that is interwoven with the Messiah and his new covenant kingdom, ooze out and be exhausted in a theological mystery? How can the crowning consummation of the Gospel, the substance, so foreshadowed in the law, come to pass so secretly, and so ingloriously, as to escape the notice of all history? To my feeble apprehension this thought now so prevalent, is more idle than a midnight dream.

The greater and more glorious "the restitution" by Christ, the more honorable and becoming his divine nature; and the more worthy the sacrifice of the law of God! "As the Lord liveth," the whole compass of "the law, the Psalms and prophets must be fulfilled." Luke xxiv. 44.

The past history of God's cause embraces Israel. The present does also; though, "blinded, cast away, and their holy and faithful house where the father's praised, the Lord has lain waste." The future is replete with the same inspired theme! Nay, it so intensines Christ and Israel, as to make them prophetically inseparable. "For unto us a child is born . . . the government shall be on his shoulders. . . . his name shall be called wonderful, (that is, his reign will be a miracle) of the increase of his government and peace, no end; upon the throne of David and upon his kingdom, to order it—with justice—forever! In those days Judah shall be saved and Israel dwell safely!" Isa. ix. 6, 7; Jer. xxxiii. 16. The Gospel groups all its glories on this line! Again, the bride, the church, is one in Christ, as the wife is one with her husband. It is dispensationally distinct from Israel in both calling and destiny. Only allow the authority of God, and so allow the distinctions between our "heavenly calling"—in Christ, to "take the kingdom," with "Israel and the left of the nations," as the subjects, then all is harmony. "Let the Lord speak," and we believe with the heart and confess with the mouth, then the promise is ours. Amen.

Let no one presume like poor Peter to say, "that be far from thee Lord," lest we "draw back" rather than "believe to the saving of the soul." Heb. x. 38. My whole effort centers in one fact. It is to show that Israel has a prophetic future, as certainly as it has a past history. This is proved by tracing out every leading line of prophecy. Lev. xx. 42. The "seven times" of Israel's punishment ends in God's remembering his covenant with Jacob, Isaac, Abraham and the land! Thus the terrible and prolonged agony of Israel as set forth in Deut. xxviii. to xxxii. culminates in this gracious [illegible] "Rejoice, O ye nations, (Gentiles) with his people, (Israel for you) will render vengeance to his adversaries; and will be merciful unto his land and his people." See Luke i. 33; xxii. 29, 30; Rom. xv. 8-12. At this [illegible] "the sanctuary will be cleansed" [illegible] the "grace (given) to be [illegible] at the revelation of [illegible] 1 Pet. xiii. For "[illegible] build up Zion, he will [illegible] his glory." Psa. cii. 16. This [illegible] not reached by interpretation, but "by faith" in the most definite statements of revelation. —J. B. C. in Advent Christian Times.

Rebuilding the Nations.

Divine [illegible] is indispensable to [illegible] and that legislation, moral, must be enforced [illegible] ever. The Law of Sinai [illegible] of Calvary, both divine [illegible] ing to this world; but "[illegible] this world" who hates [illegible] at large, and, without difficulty, gets his multitudinous subjects to trample on the one and reject the other. For proof look around you! Take all the states, and the kingdoms, and empires, all the islands and continents of the broad earth, and say whether the evidence is not overwhelming that some desperately evil and malignant power is constantly at work through the agency of men. Satan, the adversary, the devil, the prince of the power of the air, the god of this world, is unstiringly active as a liar, a spoiler, a murderer, a destroyer. It is vain to talk of improving and blessing humanity, and bringing in the reign of universal brotherhood by education, and science, and commercial interests, while this awfully evil being is lord of the kingdoms. He said to Christ that the kingdoms are in his power, and he was not contradicted. Our Lord speaks of him as the prince of this world. This gigantic foe of God and man is not to be cast down from his dark supremacy by any wisdom of statesmen, or work of ecclesiastics. He is too wise and too strong for them. A stronger than he must do that, and the honor is reserved for Him whom saints delight to honor, the Anointed of Jehovah, the Man of God's right hand, whom He hath made strong for Himself. . . . Some time ago, a gentleman quoted, for our benefit, as a proof that the church is destined to convert the world to Christ, the following words: "Ask of me, and I shall give thee the heathen for thine inheritance, and the uttermost parts of the earth for thy possession."

"Pray proceed," said we. "What is the result?"

"Their conversion to christianity, of course."

"Well, no; the next sentence is 'Thou shalt break them with a rod of iron; thou shalt dash them in pieces like a potter's vessel.' And such will be the terrible experience of the Lord's enemies when He riseth up to the long-delayed battle."

"You astonish me!" said our friend after a long pause.

"If What have I to do with it? They are the words of inspiration regarding the King that Jehovah will set upon his holy hill of Zion;—has set in 'decree,' will set in fact; and, as a christian man, you will surely agree with me in thinking that we are bound to believe them."

"Well, but, sir, our minister—"

"Hush! not a syllable, if you please. Your minister is an excellent man, whom I love, both for the sake of his work and his character; but I am profoundly impressed with the conviction that it is high time for us all to take up the Bible, and see for ourselves what God [illegible] really said to us."

Christians, living as [illegible] do, under the dispensation of grace, are too apt to forget that a time comes when the sword of justice will be drawn from its sheath to execute the long-delayed judgments of heaven. "For, behold, the Lord will come with fire, and with his chariots like a whirlwind, to render his anger with fury, and his rebuke with flames of fire. For by fire and by his sword will the Lord plead with all flesh; and the slain of the Lord shall be many." Isa. lxvi. 15, 16.—Rainbow.

"He is Faithful that Promised."

"When the Chief Shepherd shall appear, ye shall receive a crown of life that fadeth not away."—1 Pet. v. 4.

"A crown of life!" What is the beggar to be raised from the dunghill, set among princes, and made to inherit a throne of glory? In dust [illegible] ashes a puny rebel, a guilty [illegible] to be pitied, pardoned, loved, exalted from the depths of despair, raised to the heights of heaven, gifted with kingly honor, royally fed, royally clothed, royally attended, and, at last, royally crowned?

O my soul! look forward with joyous emotion to that day of wonders, when He whose head shall be crowned with many crowns shall be the dispenser of royal diadems to his people, and when they shall begin the joyful ascription of all eternity. "Unto him that loved us and washed us from our sins in his own blood, and made us kings; to him be [illegible] dominion forever and ever." Will thou be among [illegible] Shall the princes and [illegible] earth wade through [illegible] a corruptible crown, and [illegible] permit thyself to lose the [illegible] ble, for barter it for some [illegible] lishable nothings of earth? [illegible] thou wouldst awake to thy high destiny, and live up to the transcendent privileges as the citizen of a kingly commonwealth, a member of the blood royal of heaven! What wouldst thou sacrifice, what short wouldst thou grudge, if thou were included at last in the gracious benediction—"Come, ye blessed of my Father, inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world?"—Sel.

Christ the "Wonderful."

The coming glories of the despised Nazarene were never dreamed of in his day. Men whose ambition thirsted for "a name above every name," no doubt thought that the glories of the ages to come would shine out through their illustrious names. Little did they think that the crucified Galilean would outshine them all, and that the glory of the ages to come would be but as the faintest glimmerings of a taper compared with the dazzling effulgence of his glory, that he who was hooted through the streets of Jerusalem, insulted with mock royalty, buffeted and crucified, would suddenly become the most popular of all historic characters.

It is a remarkable fact that while the world is full of religious theorists, that not one of them all succeeded in arresting the attention of mankind, who leaves Christ out of his system. Even Master Strauss, the champion of "destructive criticism," finding that the world for a quarter of a century has refused to believe that he had annihilated Christ, or proved Him a myth, has reconstructed his criticism, and attacks christianity in the name of Jesus, whom he accepts as the Frenchman's model; while Renan finds Him an enthusiast, "a man with a lofty ideal, a serene and mighty soul—a hero who died to abrogate an ancient and detestable law."

Each of them has his little picture of the Judean peasant; but what miserable little daubs they are! The course infidelity of a hundred years ago that pronounced him an imposter, a mere trickster, comes now with a mendicant whine, and asks but for a little corner of the mantle of Jesus, with which they hope to conceal the blighting heresies of this philosophic and rationalistic age—heresies by which thousands have been unloosed from their moorings and moved from the sure, the only anchorage of human hope. So popular is the Nazarene to-day, that "the world has gone after him," and even that infidelity that regards humanity able to tower triumphant in its own unaided strength, and pile up its Babel towers until they smite the skies, would plant its dirty flag upon the cross of the rejected Christ the Savior, but wave it proudly over the "tried man," the peerless hero Jesus.

He is wonderful in his person. Wonderful is something that arrests the attention by its novelty, grandeur, and inexplicableness. Under circumstances well calculated to excite wonder and astonishment did a visitant from the heavenly world, contrary to the known laws of nature, announce to the holy virgin her motherhood of Jesus. Up at Bethlehem tax-gatherers and tax-payers are so intent on business that they have but time to drop a coarse remark on the startling novelty of a childbirth in a stable. The cries of the new-born babe, drowned by the din of a busy multitude without, failed to arrest even the attention of the stupid ox within, yet reach the ears of angels, and a thrill of joy wakes new and louder halelujahs in heaven. These songs that hang in his sweetest melody upon angelic lips around the throne of God are soon transferred to earth; and the plains of Judea, wrapped in midnight stillness, become vocal with the anthems of these first-born sons of God. Scarce had the echo of angelic song died away on the midnight air, when the shepherds, forgetful of their flocks, are bending their star-guided steps toward Bethlehem. In the east a star appears, and the "wise men," laden with costly presents, start out in search of a new-born sovereign. They go to Jerusalem, and find "the king troubled and all Jerusalem with him." They set out for Bethlehem, and "lo, the star which they saw in the east" leads the procession, and goes before them until it stands over where the young child was. It halls not at the palace of royalty or the home of wealth, where the young prince may recline on beds of down, but guides them to a stable, where they find "the Wonderful" cradled in "swaddling clothes," and cradled in a manger. Here, with a stable for his palace and a manger for his throne, they pay their first act of worship to Him who is destined, ere long, to rise to the throne of universal empire and receive the worship of heaven's adoring millions. Here they struck the first note in that anthem of praise whose undying echoes shall sweep down through all the centuries of time, rising and swelling into sublimer strains, until, in the world to come—

"Every kindred, every tribe
On this terrestrial ball,
To him all majesty ascribe,
And crown him Lord of all."

The Higher Ministry of Nature.

Science proper is the exact interpretation of phenomena. It has no concern for the harmony or discord of these with the canons of either metaphysics or theology, much less with efforts to prove harmony impossible. Its work is to grasp and accumulate the facts of the universe until they axiomatically group themselves into inevitable "laws." Nature thus discloses her own meaning, and mind perceives, does not invent the correlations of phenomena. But profound and eager students of nature, not content with interpreting to us the latest utterance of their great instructor, interpolate, tell what they think the following sentences will be. Doubtless this has been done at times with a splendid penetration that has reflected the utmost glory upon the human intellect. Nay, there are limits within which it is invaluable. But to the audience outside themselves, which scientific men seek to reach, the interpolation and the text should be distinguished. Their separate values should be frankly given, and the suppositions should relate to sequence, not to phenomena—to laws, not to facts. But this is too much lost sight of in the brilliant speculations of our day. Data real and data hypothetical are placed side by side. There is no attempt at distinction, and the whole are marshalled at the dictates of a philosophy by means of which science negatives the possibility of all but itself! It becomes, therefore, the duty of the christian philosopher to separate the known from the hypothetical, the real from the ideal; to disarm the ruthless, theoriser, by enabling the thoughtful and truth-seeking to distinguish between what nature has disclosed and what is merely the invention of imaginative minds; to front fearlessly the latest triumphs of research prepared to show that these disclose profounder lessons than the highest science can reach; that nature has a "higher ministry," without which, even after science has drawn from it its latest truth, it would be devoid of its noblest meaning.

Hence the importance of learning to the utmost what nature has the power to teach. It is urged that nature's ministry is two-fold,—a lower and a higher, a utilitarian and an ideal. By the one "she subserves the present individual and collective interests, makes highly civilized man what he now is, and promises to make him more than he now is and place him on the highest eminence of physical attainments." By the other, "she serves as a hand maid to religion, and becomes our servant in showing herself to be the servant of God." It is confessed that they are intimately linked, but we prefer to consider that nature has no ministry but the higher; that in her affluent response to man's personal needs, and in her aids to his physical elevation, as well as in her appeals to his highest mental nature, her ministry is one. It is selfishness that has broken the rythm and unity of her teaching. Man has luxuriated in her boundless beneficence to him, until mind's eye has become dull to the softer breathings, which, through his intellect, were meant to link him with the mind from whence all being sprang.

To those who are eager to exclude the Deity from the universe because He excludes their method, because they cannot find Him as they find an absorption band in a stellar spectrum, of course nature has no ministry but what is brute, no beauty that is real. But this is not philosophy, for it ignores the mental characteristics of the philosopher! It generalizes with some of the largest parts omitted. It is content wholly to omit the consciousness of humanity, and to treat with contempt the necessary laws of thought. Mind everywhere is conscious of the ethical in nature, otherwise the largest proportion of its meaning is lost. To what end the sublimity, the majesty, the glory of nature? Where the unuttered perfection [illegible] minutiæ, and the boundless [illegible]ence of its whole? If nature makes no appeal to mind, why are the purest displays of her beauty within its reach, yet defiantly and forever beyond the grasp of unaided human vision? Why has the invisible crystal such an entrancing grace of form? To what end the chasing of a [illegible] which requires our highest [illegible] aids to discover? Why have some of the minutest animals in nature a sculptured beauty which the most artistic conception cannot surpass? Is it not Infinite intelligence appealing to its finite kindred? Matter is the thought and activities of the Unbounded Mind taking visible form. Like poetry, music, sculpture, it is a language; and to understand it a like intelligence was formed. We may engender a deafness to it, we may become specialists, we may suffer an unequal development of our nature. In studying the mere frame work of creation, we may blind ourselves to its soul, as an organ may be analyzed or constructed by those who have no faculty to evoke its music. But it need not be thus. Some of the most accomplished experimentalists and investigators in every department of science are not only devout students of nature, but simple and confiding christians. We speak of that we know. Then, is not our voluntary or tolerated indifference culpable? Are we not responsible for a gift so large as that which nature offers?—Living Age.

Three New Things.

"And I saw a new heaven and a new earth; for the first heaven and the first earth were passed away, and there was no more sea. And I John saw the holy city, new Jerusalem, coming down from God out of heaven, prepared as a bride adorned for her husband."—Rev. xxi. 1, 2.

"A new heaven."—A sky, and clouds, and atmosphere, of higher beauty and more genial temperature than those which now surround us with their loveliness—a heaven which no more robes itself in storms and blackness, nor flashes with the thunderbolts of wrath, nor casts forth plagues of hail, and fire, and judgment, nor gives lurking-places for the devil and his angels, nor is ever again disturbed with omens of evil, or commotions breeding disaster to the dwellers under them.

"And a new earth."—One which no longer smarts and smokes under the curse of sin, needing to be torn with hooks and irons in order to the bringing forth of its fruits—an earth where thorns and thistles no longer infest the ground, nor serpents hiss among the flowers, nor wild beasts, bent on destruction, hide in the forests; an earth whose sod is never cut with graves, whose soil is never moistened with tears or saturated with human blood, whose fields are never blasted by unpropitious seasons, whose inhabitants never say, "I am sick," whose ways are never marked with funeral processions or glutted with armed men on their way to war, but whose hills ever flow with salvation, and whose valleys ever resound with uninterrupted joy; an earth which glows from end to end with the blessedness of Paradise restored.

"And a new city."—A heaven-built home-place for the saints of God, decked and adorned with jewelry and glory "as a bride adorned for her husband," where the Church shall rest from her long contest with ignorance and sin, and be comforted forever with the light and love of her Redeemer, John saw that city, and tells of it in terms which almost blind us with their brightness. It is not built up from earth, but comes down out of heaven, blazing with the glory of God, and girt with radiance jasper-hued but clear as crystal. It is a "great city," 1500 miles in length, and in breadth, and in height, with foundations and walls of precious jewels, gates of pearls, and streets of gold, so pure as to be like transparent glass, and needing no light of sun or moon, because illuminated with the eternal light and glory of God and of the Lamb—the true "eternal city"—the imperishable metropolis of the new heaven and the new earth.

And there, in that renovated and brightened scene of things, in that blest order when these present heavens and this present earth have passed their grand palingenesia, shall be that greater, higher, holier, final thanksgiving, of which these days of earthly praise remind us. And if in these old heavens, and this old [illegible] in this earthly city, [illegible] to stir our hearts [illegible] with songs of thanksgiving, [illegible] it be when once [illegible] opens up its beauties [illegible] Jerusalem has become [illegible] home?—Dr. J. A. [illegible]

PROVERBS.—Those children seldom prove the best, or the happiest, that are most indulged.

The more patiently we suffer, the less the bitterness in the suffering.

Those content with less degrees of comfort, are best prepared for, and most likely to receive greater.

That is never said wisely that comes of passion and anger.

Those that keep from evil in times of common iniquity, God will keep from harm in times of common calamity.

The joys of faith are the best remedies against the griefs of sense.

They that will not make the Word of God their rest, will find it a heavy burden.

They that give good exhortations, should be careful to set good examples.

THE RESTITUTION

PLYMOUTH, IND.,.....March 17, 1875.

EDITORIAL DEPARTMENT

— Brother Stephenson spent last Sunday in this community. He preached in the morning at Antioch, and in the evening in Plymouth. The audiences were large, and were deeply interested in the word spoken. Bro. S. is an able workman, and is doing good. We have known him for over twenty years, and have ever found him a brave advocate of the Holy Oracles. From this point he goes to Cedo, Iowa, to attend the State Conference.

The Oath of God.

An oath is the most solemn and impressive form of giving testimony. Paul says that "an oath of confirmation is the end of all strife." Indeed men have in all lands and ages attached the highest importance to testimony given under oath. In order to impress man with the importance of his plans and purposes, God has confirmed his promises with an oath, which at once stamps them with certainty and immutability. In the light of these thoughts let us for a few moments contemplate some of those great truths which have been confirmed unto us by the Invisible Father.

1. "But as truly as I live, all the earth shall be filled with the glory of the Lord." Num. xiv. 21.

This oath refers to a time yet future, and will become true under the reign of Israel's King, Jesus Messiah. Isaiah refers to this epoch in chapter xi. "They shall not hurt nor destroy in all my holy mountain; for the earth shall be full of the knowledge of the Lord as the waters cover the sea."

2. "Once have I sworn by my holiness that I will not lie unto David. His seed shall endure forever, and his throne as the sun before me. It shall be established forever as the moon, and as a faithful witness in heaven. Selah." Psa. lxxxix. 35-37.

The above oath contemplates the eternal perpetuity of the throne of David under the kingship of his royal Son, Christ Jesus.

That this is the truth and will surely come to pass is abundantly sustained from the New Testament. Peter on the day of Pentecost refers to this oath of God, and makes it apply directly to the Son of God. In speaking of David he says: "Therefore being a prophet, and knowing that God had sworn with an oath unto him that of the fruit of his loins, according to the flesh, he would raise up Christ to sit on his throne." Acts ii. 30. See also Luke i. 31, 32; Matt. xix. 28; xxv. 31; Rev. iii. 21.

No system of figuring can ever do away with this plain testimony. Christ is the promised heir to the throne and kingdom of Israel, and when He returns from heaven, He will commence his glorious reign and bless the world. "He shall reign over the house of Jacob forever, and of his kingdom there shall be no end." Luke i. 32; See also Acts xv.

Israel's throne is now in ruins. Jerusalem is being trodden down by the Gentiles, and the nation is scattered, but under the future reign of Messiah, the throne shall be restored, Jerusalem shall arise and shine, and the "Redeemer shall turn away ungodliness from Jacob." These are the [illegible] of David, and will be fulfilled in the day of our Lord's glory. Let us be ready for that sublime era. With pure hearts and clean hands may we ever stand at the portals of the blessed promises, and when the King shall come, may it be said of us WELL DONE.

Death of Paul.

"For I am now ready to be offered, and the time of my departure is at hand. I have fought the good fight, I have finished my course, I have kept the faith. Henceforth there is laid up for me the crown of righteousness, which the Lord, the righteous judge, shall give me in that day; and not to me only, but to all who love his appearing." —Paul.

We all are interested in the last expressions of our dying friends. If followers of Christ, we are anxious to know whether the principles of the Gospel faith are an unfailing solace in the hour when all earthly hopes and supports avail no longer. In the above quoted language we have the confident statements of one of the most remarkable individuals whose example and teachings have had a widespread and lasting influence in human history. In the case of the Apostle Paul every worldly consideration had been sacrificed for Christ's sake.

Worldly honors, pleasures, ease, and wealth, had all been left behind as worthless things, and a life of toil and suffering cheerfully embraced in becoming a disciple and follower of the lowly Nazarene, who was Himself pre-eminently a "man of sorrows and acquainted with grief." But Paul had seen sufferings glorified. He had seen the personage, who was despised and rejected of men in this world, exalted to the first place in God's universe; and learned that the highest honors attainable, were only attainable through sufferings. Hence he embraced the cause of christianity with all the ardor of his powerful and energetic mind. He traveled long and weary journeys, suffered hunger, thirst, and privations of every kind; was set upon by all the fury and violence of raging mobs; was beaten, stoned, and left for dead; and now is in gloomy imprisonment, waiting for the execution of the sentence of death —and he triumphs. He had pursued no empty phantom. His life had been no failure. He had lost some perishable things, but he had won a crown of endless glory. He casts no lingering longing look behind. The things unseen and eternal enrapture his spirit, and all the deep gloom of the prison cannot prevent the exultant expression of joyous hope, as he anticipates the glory that is to be revealed when the Lord, the righteous judge shall appear. We have his last recorded words, words worthy to be printed in letters of gold on leaflets of silver; words that show the worth of the Christian's hope in the trying hour. Can we not all say, "Let me die the death of the righteous, and let my last end be like his."

In conclusion, we give our readers an account of his execution, from Conybeare and Howson, who have gathered up the scattered fragments of history and tradition that bear upon the closing scenes of the great apostle's career. It may, perhaps, interest our readers to learn from this source, that many dear followers of our Redeemer have found their last resting-place in those very grounds that were once bedewed by the blood of the great Apostle to the Gentiles. Though there is no likelihood that Peter ever was at Rome, yet history makes it certain that Paul died there.

We hope our extract will be [illegible] reading. It follows from the author above named, whose translation of the text heads this article.

The privileges of Roman citizenship exempted St. Paul from the ignominious death of lingering torture, which had been lately inflicted on so many of his brethren. He was to die by decapitation; and he was led out to execution beyond the city walls, upon the road to Ostia, the port of Rome. As he issued forth from the gate, his eyes must have rested for a moment on that sepulchral pyramid which stood beside the road, and still stands unshattered, amid the wreck of so many centuries, upon the same spot. That spot was then only the burial-place of a single Roman; it is now the burial-place of many Britons. The mausoleum of Caius Cestius rises conspicuously amongst humbler graves, and marks the site where Papal Rome suffers her Protestant sojourners to bury their dead. In England and in Germany, in Scandinavia and in America, there are hearts which turn to that lofty cenotaph as the Sacred Point of their whole horizon; even as the English villager turns to the gray church tower, which overlooks the gravestones of his kindred. Among the works of man, that pyramid is the only surviving witness of the martyrdom of St. Paul; and we may thus regard it with deeper interest, as a monument unconsciously erected by a pagan to the memory of a martyr. Nor let us think that they who lie beneath its shadow are indeed resting (as degenerate Italians fancy) in consecrated ground. Rather let us say, that a spot where the disciples of Paul's faith now sleep in Christ, so near the soil once watered by his blood, is doubly hallowed; and that their resting-place is most fully identified with the last earthly journey and the dying glance of their own Patron Saint, the Apostle of the Gentiles.

As the martyr and his executioners passed on, their way was crowded with a motley multitude of goers and comers between the metropolis and the harbor—merchants hastening to superintend the unloading of their cargoes —sailors eager to squander the profits of their last voyage in the dissipations of the capital—officials of the government, charged with the administration of the Provinces, or the command of the legions on the Euphrates or the Rhine—Chaldean astrologers — Phrygian eunuchs — dancing-girls from Syria with their painted turbans—mendicant priests from Egypt howling for Osiris—Greek adventurers, eager to coin their natural cunning into Roman gold—representatives of the avarice and ambition, the fraud and lust, the superstition and intelligence, of the Imperial world. Through the dust and tumult of that busy throng, the small troop of soldiers threaded their way silently, under the bright sky of an Italian midsummer. They were marching, though they knew it not, in a procession more truly triumphal than any they had ever followed, in the train of General or Emperor, along the Sacred Way. Their prisoner, now at last and for ever delivered from his captivity, rejoiced to follow his Lord "without the gate." The place of execution was not far distant; and there the sword of the headsman ended his long course of sufferings.

Weeping friends took up his corpse, and carried it for burial to those subterranean labyrinths, where, through many ages of oppression, the persecuted church found refuge for the living, and sepulchres for the dead.

Thus died the Apostle, the Prophet, and the Martyr; bequeathing to the church, in her government and her discipline, the legacy of his apostolic labors; leaving his prophetic words to be her living oracles, pouring forth his blood to be the seed of a thousand martyrdoms. Thenceforth, among the glorious company of the apostles, among the goodly fellowship of the prophets, among the noble army of martyrs, his name has stood pre-eminent. And wheresoever the holy church throughout all the world doth acknowledge God, their Paul of Tarsus is revered, as the great teacher of a universal redemption and a catholic religion—the herald of glad tidings to all mankind.

S. A. C.

The Design of the Gospel in the Age to Come.

"And the Scripture, foreseeing that God would justify the heathen through faith, preached before the Gospel unto Abraham, saying, in thee shall all nations be blessed." Gal. iii. 8.

The Scripture quoted by Paul reads thus: "And in thee (Abraham) shall all families of earth be blessed." Gen. xii. 3. This promise the apostle calls the Gospel. In Gen. xvii. 18, the same Gospel promise was repeated. The Lord said, "Seeing that Abraham shall become a great and mighty nation, and all the nations of the earth shall be blessed in him." This same promise was repeated to Abraham's unit seed in contrast with a numerous seed. We read, "And the angel of the Lord called unto Abraham out of heaven the second time, and said, by myself have I sworn saith the Lord, for because thou hast done this thing, and hast not withheld thy Son, thine only Son; that in blessing I will bless, and in multiplying I will multiply thy seed as the stars of the heaven, and as the sand which is upon the sea shore; and thy seed shall possess the gate of his enemies; and in thy seed shall all the nations of the earth be blessed; because thou hast obeyed my voice." Gen. xxii. 15-18. In the foregoing declaration of the Lord's angel, we cannot fail to perceive a marked distinction between the unit seed, represented by the singular pronoun his, and a seed numerous as the stars and sands. The gateway to the citadels of the world are thrown open to this victorious seed, to whose sceptre all nations shall bow, and through the administration of whose government they shall all be blessed. A clear and marked discrimination between the unit seed and the multitudinous seed is absolutely essential to a correct understanding of the Gospel in the past and future ages. The apostle has made the contrast between rulers and subjects, the individual and national seed, so plain that none need misunderstand the import of his language. Referring directly to the promises made to Abraham and his seed, He says, "Now to Abraham and his seed were the promises made. He says not, and to seeds as of many; but as of one, and to thy seed, which is Christ." Gal. iii. 16. Thus teaching that the promise was not made to the man, and, but to one seed which is Christ. As joint heirs all the saints are included with Christ in the same glorious promises. Thus, the apostle continues, "And if ye be Christ's then are ye Abraham's seed, and heirs according to the promise." Verse 29th. For Christ and his saints to occupy a position that will enable them to bless all nations, they must have all nations within their jurisdiction; for no king or potentate can curse or bless legitimately outside of his jurisdiction. That Abraham and his royal family will occupy this lofty position upon our planet, is evident from the apostle's exposition of this same promise in his epistle to the Romans. He says, "For the promise that he should be heir of the world, was not to Abraham, or to his seed, through the law, but through the righteousness of faith." Rom. iv. 13. Thus, according to the testimony of the unerring word, the design of the Gospel, during all the ages past, has been to select and prepare the royal family of Abraham to rule and bless the world. Hence the saints shall all sing, "Thou has redeemed us out of every nation, and we shall reign on the earth." Rev. ix. 10, 11. We have also learned that while all the saints shall reign as kings and priests on earth, that all nations will be their subjects, whom they shall rule and bless. We have now prepared the way for the introduction of a Gospel message for the nations—a message that shall be peculiar to the coming age. John says, "And I saw an angel flying in mid-heaven, having otionian glad tidings to announce to those who dwell on the earth, even to every nation, and tribe, and language, and people,—saying with a loud voice fear God, and give glory to him; because the hour of his judgment is come; and worship him who made the heaven, and the earth, and the sea, and the fountains of waters." Rev. xiv. 6, 7.—Diaglott.

Eighteen hundred years ago Christ commissioned his apostles to go into all the world and preach good news of a COMING kingdom to every creature in view of a judgment TO COME. Mark xvi. 15; Matt. xxiv. 14; Acts. xxiv. 25. But in the proclamation just rehearsed, it is emphatically the glad tidings of the age, because both the judgment and the kingdom have already come. Paul associates the judgment of the living and the dead with Christ's appearing, and kingdom. 2 Tim. iv. 1. The Gospel of the age to come differs as widely, in its DESIGN, from the Gospel which has been preached since the beginning of the ages, as the conversion and salvation of individuals differ from the conversion and salvation of nations; and also as much as a FUTURE judgment and kingdom differ from an EXISTING judgment and kingdom. The same discrimination is made in the Abrahamic covenant, between the individual seed through whom all nations shall be blessed, and the nations thus blessed through them. Thus, the good news preached to Abraham, and confirmed with the oath of God, had two grand objects in view, viz: (1) to bless Abraham and his seed, and (2) through them to bless the world. Such a message of mercy has never been proclaimed to the nations. How different its object from that proclaimed by those who profess to be preaching the everlasting Gospel to day. Instead of good news to every nation, they are ringing the death knell of the world. Would it be good news to inform one of these professed Gospel preachers that an enemy was coming to make a bonfire of his dwelling and burn up his innocent wife and children because a vagabond sinner was stopping with them over night? Is it good news to every nation kindred tongue and people, to tell them that Christ is soon coming to deluge the earth with an ocean of fire, reducing all thrones, kings, nations, and dynasties to ashes, while a few saints snatched as brands from the burning, are shouting hallelujah while the world is on fire? The messengers represented by this symbolic angel will go with mercy in one hand and judgment in the other, and call upon the kings and chief judges of the world to submit to the incoming administration, and be blessed, or refuse and be crushed to pieces as worthless potters vessels. When the Son of God and his associate rulers shall be enthroned in Zion, having been invested with authority to rule the world, the great God will intercede through his Gospel messengers, saying, "Be wise now therefore, O ye kings; be instructed, ye judges of earth. Serve the Lord with fear, and rejoice with trembling. Kiss the Son, lest he be angry, and ye perish from the way, when his wrath is kindled but a little. Suppose earth's kings and judges shall heed this message of mercy, what then will be the result? The response is, "BLESSED are all they that put their trust in him." Psa. ii; Rev. xi. 26. 27. Thus a standing statute of Messiah's kingdom will be death for rebels, and mercy for all loyal men. We also learn that judgments will be employed as instructors to nations in humbling the nations, and bringing them into subjection to King Jesus and his kingly cabinet, that they may be the recipients of the blessings promised them in the glad tidings of the age. Judgment will be a necessary requisite to the establishment of a righteous government upon earth. Righteousness will be the boon the world will most need when earth's great heir shall ascend the throne of empire. Before justice and mercy can culminate upon his throne, He must dash to shivers the crowns of tyrants of earth, and emancipate struggling millions for freedom, according David's last Psalm. Then the Son will commence his judgment for proud oppressors, mercy for the oppressed, and securing to the King's subjects shall be girt with [illegible] King David exclaims, "[illegible] King thy judgments, O God, and thy righteousness unto the king's son. He shall judge thy people with righteousness, and thy poor with judgment. He shall judge the poor of the people, He shall save the children of the needy, and shall break in pieces the oppressor." Psa. xvii. 1, 2-4. The effect of these judgments upon the people in awing them into submission is clearly expressed in glorious language, in the following description of the good time coming. He exclaims in lofty strains, "They shall fear thee as long as the sun and moon endure, throughout all generations (or according to the original, "from generation to generation.") In his days shall the righteous flourish and abundance of peace, so long as the moon endureth. He shall have dominion from sea to sea, and from the river unto the ends of the earth." Verses v. 7, 8.

Upon what great principle will he extend his dominion over the world? Answer—the principle of loyalty, though it shall be necessary to roll one wide wave of judgment from pole to pole. Christ will permit no rival king or kingdom to exist upon the face of the earth. Hence the Psalmist continues, "They that dwell in the wilderness SHALL bow before him; and his enemies shall lick the dust. Yea all kings shall fall down before him;—all nations shall serve him." ver. 9-11. That judgment will be the means employed to humble the nations, preparatory to blessing them, is further evident from the glowing description of the glories of Messiah's reign in mount Zion, by Isaiah the son of Amos. He says, "And it shall come to pass in the last days, that the mountain of the Lord's house shall be established in the top of the mountains, and shall be exalted above the hills; and all nations shall flow unto it. And many people shall go and say, come ye, and let us go up to the mountain of the Lord, to the house of the God of Jacob; and he will teach us of his ways, and will walk in his paths; for out of Zion shall go forth the law, and the word of the Lord from Jerusalem. And he shall judge among the nations, and shall rebuke many people." What shall be the result of this rebuke? We read, "And they shall beat their swords into ploughshares, and their spears into pruning hooks; nation shall not lift sword against nation, neither shall they learn war any more." Isa. ii. 1-4. And Micah has written the following beautiful adenda, "But they shall sit every man under his vine and fig tree; and none shall make them afraid; for the mouth of the Lord of hosts hath spoken it." Micah iv. 4. According to the foregoing, before all nations shall come up to Jerusalem to worship the king, the law must go forth from Zion with judgments and rebukes to subjugate the strong nations; and as the result of these judgments, they will convert the implements of war into the implements of husbandry to plow the earth and prune the tree. Dark clouds whose thunders shall shake the earth and whose lightnings shall scathe the guilty nations, must mantle the heavens before the sunshine of peace shall bless our world. The world must be educated in the terrible school of judgments before they will learn "the ways of the Lord and walk in his paths." That judgments will be the efficient means of bringing all nations into subjugation to God, where they shall fear and worship him, is clear from the universal song of all the redeemed. The same innumerable host of redeemed ones who proclaimed the consummation of the design of the gospel of the kingdom in all the past ages, will proclaim the consummation of the design of the gospel in THE FUTURE AGE. Standing upon, as it were, a sea of glass, "They sing the song of Moses the servant of God, and the song of Lamb, saying, great and marvellous are thy works, Lord God Almighty; just and true are thy ways, thou king of nations (margin). Who shall not fear thee, O Lord, and glorify thy name? for thou only art holy; for all nations shall come, and worship before thee, for thy judgments are made manifest." Rev. xv. 2-4. Thus the good tidings to every nation, offering mercy to them on condition of their fearing and worshiping God; and judgment if they shall refuse, will accomplish the design for which it shall be proclaimed. All nations shall fear and give glory to God, because his judgments shall be made manifest. The age measured off for the subjugation, saving, and blessing the living nations, will be one thousand years. When the time shall come to extend the offers of salvation to the nations, every obstacle in the way of their accepting the offers of mercy will be removed, [illegible] great Adversary will be restrained to give the nations a fair chance for one thousand years. Rev. xx. The Jews, having learned the living languages of the world, will be sent to the Isles afar off, who had not heard the fame or seen the glory of the [illegible]han Solomon, who will be [illegible] in mount Zion and before [illegible] gloriously. Isa. lxvi. [illegible] escape of the nations [illegible] the glorious holy land, [illegible] Jews. Isa. lxvi. Zech. xiv. [illegible] messengers are evidently represented by the symbolic angel whom the Revelator saw flying in mid-heaven having the glad tidings of the age to preach to every nation. They [illegible] Christ's embassadors, whom he [illegible] with the olive branch of [illegible] revolted nations. The [illegible] ultimately receive this [illegible] be blessed through the [illegible]ity. The Lord says, "A[illegible] to pass, that as ye were a curse among the heathen, O house of Judah, and house of Israel; so will I save you, and ye shall be a BLESSING." Zech. viii. 13. Through the preaching of these gospel messengers, the Gentile nations will hear of Israel's God and go with them to Jerusalem to worship before him; and thus fulfill the prophecy quoted by Christ, that his Father's house should be "called a house of prayer for all nations." Mark xi. 7. margin. "Thus saith the Lord of hosts; it shall yet come to pass, that there shall yet come people, and the inhabitants of many cities; and the inhabitants of one city shall go to another, saying, let us go speedily to pray before the Lord, and to seek the Lord of hosts; I will go also. Yea many people and strong nations shall come to seek the Lord of hosts in Jerusalem, and to pray before the Lord. Thus saith the Lord of hosts; in those days it shall come to pass, that the men shall take hold out of all languages of the nations, even shall take hold of the spirit of him that is a Jew, saying we will go with you; for we have heard that God is with you." Zech. viii. 20-23. Thus, according to Paul, the Jews will be the means of greater blessings to the Gentiles in their fullness than they had been in their diminution. Rom. xi. 12. As the gospel of the kingdom will have converted and saved every individual who shall have believed and obeyed it, so will this great national gospel save every nation that shall accept it. And that all nations will accept the glad tidings of the age and be saved, is further evident from the following unfulfilled predictions: "And all the ends of the world shall remember and turn unto the Lord, and all the kindreds of the nations shall worship before thee." Psa. xx. 27. And that this world-wide salvation will be produced by the kingdom itself, and not the gospel of the kingdom. Again addressing the great God, David says, "All nations whom thou hast made shall come and worship before thee, O Lord, and shall glorify thy name." Psa. lxxxvi. 8.

Then all the ends of the earth will have seen the salvation of our God, *when the people shall be gathered to*gether, and the kingdoms, to serve the Lord. Psa. lxxviii. 3; cii. 22. Then will the sun of righteousness be a light to the Gentiles, and salvation to the ends of the earth. Isa. xlix. 6. Then will the Lord have "made bare his holy arm in the eyes of all the nations; and all the ends of the earth shall see the salvation of our God." Isa. lii. 10. Then shall the angels repeat in loftier strains the birth anthem of the world's savior, saying, glory to God in the highest, and on earth peace and good will to men; for the kingdom of our father in heaven will have come, and his glorious will on earth be done, as angels do it in heaven. Then shall great voices roll through heaven and earth, mingling with the clarion notes of the seventh trumpet, proclaiming that the kingdoms of this world have become the kingdoms of our God and his Christ. While the redeemed of all ages shall sing in chorus the salvation of the world. Then the kings of the earth, and the nations of them that are saved shall bring the trophies of a conquered world and lay them down at Messiah's feet, and walk in the light of the jasper flashing walls of the holy city. Then the curse having been rolled from the groaning bosom of the earth, it will again flash upon the brow of night like a brilliant diamond in the sky; and Paradise having been restored, mortal man will again have access to the evergreen tree of life with its incorruptible fruit to eat and live forever—to bloom in fadeless and immortal youth—while in its fadeless leaves will have been found the long sought for panacea to heal all human maladies. Then will the gate be thrown wide open and all the world be invited to come and partake of the water of life freely; for then shall the spirit and the bride say come. And let him that heareth say come. And whosoever will, let him come and take of the water of life freely. Amen.

We have heard from that bright, the holy land,
We have heard, and our hearts are glad;
For we seem a lonely pilgrim band,
And weary and worn and sad.
They tell us the pilgrims ever dwell there,
No longer are homeless alone;
We know that life proudly tread to fate—
Where life's pure river flow runs.

They say green fields are waving there,
That never a blight shall know;
And the deserts wild are blooming fair,
And the roses of Sharon grow.
The ever lovely birds in the bowers green—
Their songs are lillies and sweet;
And their warblings, gushing ever new,
The angels harpings greet.

We have heard of the palms, the robes, the crowns,
And the silvery band in white;
Of the city fair, of it goodly gates,
All radiant with light.
We have heard of the angels there, and saints,
With their harps of gold, how they sing;
Of the mounts, with the fruitful tree of life!
Of the leaves that healing bring.

The King of that country, he is fair;
He's the joy and light of the place!
In his beauty we shall behold him there,
And look in his smiling face.
We'll be there, we'll be there, in a little while;
We'll join the pure and the blest;
We'll have the palm, the robe, and crown,
And forever be at rest.

— The reader will find an interesting article in this number from the "Hebrew Leader," referring to the colonization of the Jews. Events are rapidly preparing the way for the re*turn of the scattered nation back to* their own land. That there will be a colony of Jews in Palestine at or soon after Christ comes, seems evident from Christ's great prophecy in Matt. xxiii, xxxvii, 39, and Luke xvi. 24.

What is His Creed?

He left a load of authracite
In front of a poor widow's door,
When the deep snow, frozen and white,
Wrapped street and square, mountain and moor.
That was his deed;
He did it well;
"What was his creed?"
I cannot tell.

Blessed "is he basket and his store,"
In sitting down and rising up;
When e'er he ate, he gave the more,
Withholding not the crust and cup.
He took the lead
In each good task.
"What was his creed?"
I did not ask.

His charity was like the snow,
Soft, white, and silent in its fall;
Not like the gusty winds that blow
From shivering trees the leaves a pall
For flowers and weed,
Drooping below.
"What was his creed?"
The poor may know.

He had great faith in loaves of bread,
For hungry people, young and old;
And hope inspired, kind words he said
To those he sheltered from the cold.
For us must feed
As well as pray.
"What was his creed?"
I cannot say.

In works he did not put his trust,
His faith in words he never will;
He loved to share his cup and crust
With all mankind who needed it;
In time of need
A friend was he.
"What was his creed?"
He told not me.

He put his trust in heaven, and he Worked well with hand and head;
And what he gave as charity
Sweetened his sleep and daily bread.
Let us take heed,
For life is brief.
"What was his creed?"
"What his belief?"

The Light of the City.

"And the city had no need of the sun, neither of the moon to shine in it, for the glory of God did lighten it, and the Lamb is the light thereof."

When the command "Let there be light," was flashed through the darkness of earth, the clouds and blackness fled before it. Its glory illumined the unfinished globe and scattered blessings in its pathway. Even so shall moral darkness and the black chaos of sin flee before the face of him who is the light of the world. The clouds of suffering and sorrow that have compassed earth so long shall be dispelled by the rising sun of righteousness. The dark shadow of the curse shall be driven from land and sea, and God's city shall be set like a gem in the glorified earth.

The cities of the present may be swept away by fire or crumbled by convulsive throes; but that which is to come shall never fall, for it hath foundations whose builder and maker is God.

The cities of men are the scenes of corruption and misrule, but God's city shall be governed by the King of kings, and his laws shall be justice and his scepter righteousness—no unclean thing can pass the pearly gates or find a home within the jasper walls.

The cities of the earth may be great, but that which is to come is the metropolis of the universe—the capitol of the Lord of hosts. These count their inhabitants by hundreds of thousands, but that shall contain all the hosts of the redeemed—its population is a multitude that no man can number, for they shall be as the sands of the sea or the stars of the heaven.

The cities of earth are lighted by the sun by day and by the ingenuity of man by night, but that which is to come shall be illumined by the glory of God. It hath no need of the sun, neither of the moon, for the glory of God and the Lamb shall be the light thereof. The glory of the Lamb seems to correspond with the mild, pure radiance of the moon. Its brilliancy is softened by Calvary and the grave. But its light can never be quenched; it gleams in triumph above the tomb, the resurrection light, and the hosts of risen and glorified ones shall walk therein. It is like the pillar of cloud by day, which knew no shade, nor suffered no eclipse. It guides our weary feet through the wilderness of time, and gleams with undying glory in the haven of our rest. But the glory of God is the sunlight splendor of the city, flashing over its gold and gems such a light that the moon shall be confounded, and the sun ashamed, when the Lord of hosts shall reign in Mount Zion and in Jerusalem and before his ancients gloriously. As the Shekinah rested anciently above the mercy seat, so shall God's glory illumine the Holy of Holies within the beautiful city—so shall it rest upon the glad heights of the eternal mountains, and quiver in the depths of the crystal sea. It shall flash upon the crowns that have been won in the valley of suffering, and light up the white raiment that was washed in the blood of the Lamb. It shall shine upon the healing leaves of the tree, and flash from the bosom of life's pure river. And there shall be no night there. The stars that gleam in midnight skies are lost in the glory of the city, for they are only the porch lamps before God's throne. "And they need no candle, neither light of the sun," for the sun of righteousness shall be there, with healing in his wings, and "the Lord God giveth them light, and they shall reign forever and ever."

Evangelist Report.

DEAR REST[illegible]—

Please say to those interested in hearing, I left home Feb'y 6, for Fountain county, held meetings, continuing over two Sundays, near Newtown, where there is a small body—organized last year. Found them all firm and steadfast, showing their faith by their works, letting their light shine. Their Elder, Brother S. K. Howard, speaks to them the word of life from time to time to very good acceptance, having a good report without. The time for holding the meeting was very unfortunate, as they were just in the midst of having the measles, scarcely a family escaping, interspersed with some lung fever. Still we had throughout very attentive, though not large, audiences. Found quite a number of friends deeply in sympathy with the truth.

On our way from there to Windfall, Tipton county, called to see the church in Warren county, remained and spoke two nights, had a fair hearing of outsiders, but partially failed in our desire to have the privilege of talking to the brethren generally in reference to the importance of the "Christian Publishing Association," however, all those that were present seemed fully to concur in the idea of the practical importance and necessity of the movement.

Taking leave of them, arrived at Windfall, Feb'y 26, found all things in readiness for the meeting, the Christian church freely granted the use of their house, which is neat, good size, and every way commodious, which was well filled with very attentive hearers during the meeting, which commenced on Friday night and closed on the following Thursday—had an interesting meeting throughout, people of all denominations, came out freely to hear. Many seemed much interested in the things heard, one intelligent believer put on Christ in baptism. On Sunday morning, according to pre-arrangement, we discoursed in memory of the death of our dearly beloved Brother Hornaday, also Sister Elizabeth Legg, mother of Brother Arthur Legg, and Sister Ruth Hendrickson, both of whom fell asleep in Christ, the former Nov. 12, 1874, at the age of seventy-four, and the other Jan'y 10, 1875, at the age of seventy, both having lived faithful and devoted lives in godliness. Their loss was deeply lamented by all who knew them. All classes seemed to be much moved by the presentation of the hope laid up for the sainted dead, which we tried to show from the words of Paul in 2 Tim. iv. 8.

Friends and brethren present from Grant county were anxious that I should spend the following Sunday with them, among whom was Brother F. Roberts, a Baptist preacher, of good mind and more than ordinary ability as a speaker. I commenced meetings at their place on Saturday night. On Monday Brother Roberts was baptized in the faith of the Gospel, having sometime previously renounced the idea of natural immortality, and gained quite a clear and intelligent understanding of the Gospel, in the hope of which we left him, fully rejoicing. God grant that he may be preserved, and be the instrument of turning many to righteousness.

From thence returned to Windfall, remaining until March 3, when two more rendered obedience to the good news, being very intelligent believers. May the Lord preserve them unto his heavenly kingdom.

Shall preach here to-night, then go on to-morrow to my next appointment at Dundee, in Blackford county.

"Famines in Divers Places."

Among the signs of "the end" foretold by the Savior, are "famines in divers places." Those who see in passing events signs of the near approach of the millennium, are confirmed in their views by the desolating famines which have prevailed in distant parts of the world. Two years ago the people of Persia, were held for more than a year on the verge of extinction for lack of food. The destruction of a still vaster population in India has just been averted by the most vigorous exertions and lavish outlay on the part of the British Government. And still more recently, the same scourge has fallen upon Asia Minor. Late letters from missionaries of the American board at Cesarea present an appalling picture of the suffering which prevails. In a region nearly as large as New England, embracing ancient Galatia and Cappadocia, in consequence of a drought last season, cutting off the grain crop, followed by an unusually long and severe winter, supplies of all kinds for man and domestic animals have been, in many places, wholly exhausted. Flocks and herds have been greatly reduced or wholly destroyed, [illegible] women and children, fleeing from their homes, have perished by the wayside, and sometime in the [illegible] which they fled for food. The missionaries in Cesarea, at the last advices, were distributing bread and soup to hundreds of all classes who come to them for help.—Christian Statesman.

From Bro. Keeton.

BRO. REED:—Permit me to say through the RESTITUTION to our brethren who read your valuable paper, that in Virginia is to be found a few who prefer to be guided by the beacon star of Bethlehem than such constellations as are brought from Jezebel, the wife of Ahab, to bear upon our children, though her influence is such as to deceive the unenlightened through the many and varied stars traveling from land to sea, and apparently lights of various hues, yet all emanating from the same fountain, all leading, ignis fatus like, into Babylon, the great. All making grand efforts to convert the world, and it is not unfrequently the case that all the varied lights, so called, are placed under the bushel while they consolidated in a grand and united effort to secure one proselyte. No sooner made than the bushel is turned, and each presents a different light, so that he or she may take their choice, each desiring to record the name that they may report to their Master, and thereby attain promotion, it may be D. D. But alas, what of the proselyte! In order that he may have no misgivings, he is by them (his teachers), instructed that there is but little difference; and in fact, the points of difference are nonessential. As your faith is, so be it unto you. We are all Evangelical, &c. For all such we can but weep, knowing that through ignorance they are made the sons of perdition, and are deprived of that light that they might become the sons of God.

I will say that there is scattered through Lunenburg and Mecklenburg counties, Va., about one hundred who are of the one faith, though they are scattered all over the counties, so that they all seldom meet together. I will say that there are about twelve members just in my neighborhood. We meet at a school house every first day, to break bread at 11 a. m., and not unfrequent is it that we have an attentive audience who remain until we conclude our worship. We expect Brother Wiley Jones, of Norfolk, next summer, if the Lord will, to labor with us; and would be glad to see any of our speaking brethren of the one faith. I think that the good seed sown, that may be sown, will yet spring up and bring much fruit.

In the hope of the soon return of the Nobleman and his kingdom, I am yours.

Testimonial to Sir Moses Montefiore.

For many years the civilized world, more especially that portion of it inhabited by Israelites, has had occasion to observe and note with pleasure the untiring efforts of one who has ever championed the cause of the poor Hebrews in the Holy Land. Commencing in early life to observe the distressed condition of his co-religionists in various parts of the globe where fanaticism and persecution still raged against the harmless members of a thrifty and industrious sect, whose only crime was to believe and offer up prayers to one true God, ever striving to elevate and aid those who have been oppressed by religious intolerance, we behold in Sir Moses Montefiore a philanthropist, with advancing age, yet exhibiting all those characteristic traits that have marked the noble, lofty career of this venerated defender of our faith in his younger days.

With a view of perpetuating the most arduous services rendered by this distinguished Hebrew, both at home and in distant countries, in vindicating on so many memorable occasions the rights of his co-religionists, and in protecting and assisting the suffering and oppressed without distinction of creed or nationality, it is proposed to raise a memorial, which it is suggested shall be an undertaking for permanently improving the condition of the Jews of the Holy Land by the promotion of industrial pursuits, the erection of improved dwellings, and the acquisition and cultivation of land on a moderate scale, whatever profits accrue from same to be entirely devoted to the encouragement of those who are anxious to help themselves, no part whatever to be applied to alms-giving.

There is something so rational and truly patriotic in this as to appeal most directly to the true Jewish feeling and instinct of all right-thinking Hebrews. Jerusalem, whose very name recalls recollections of a nation's glorious past, hallowed by the most sacred of reminiscences, is the spot indicated where a tribute well merited that is to benefit [illegible] shall mark the work of Mo[illegible] Subscriptions have already [illegible] ced to flow in the coffers of a [illegible] tee headed by such men as the [illegible] ereud Doctors N. M. Adler [illegible] Arton, Baron Lionel De Rothschild, F. D. Mocatta, Esq., Sir Francis Goldsmid, etc., and it but remains to be seen what steps will be taken this side of the Atlantic to further so laudable a project. For the honor and credit of American Judaism, whose generosity is proverbial, let it not be said we have been unmindful of the appeal, or that we fail to appreciate either the noble work of a public benefactor or the land of our early habitation once more populated by those who alone are God's chosen people.—Hebrew Leader.

New Covenant.

BROTHER REED:

The subject of the New Covenant I have never seen discussed very much by our brethren, and it is evidently for some cause or other overlooked or left in the back-ground. To my mind there is no subject more interesting to contemplate than this. I have often heard it stated by our brethren, that we are not now living in the time of the New Covenant. I do not know how such a position can be sustained, nor do I see how a feasible argument can be produced in support of it. Paul in Heb. viii. 6, says, that "Christ is the mediator of a better covenant, which was established upon better promises." Again, Heb. x. 29, "Who hath trodden under foot the Son of God, and hath counted the blood of the covenant, wherewith he was sanctified an unholy thing." I would ask, can a covenant be mediated before it is made? Shall the blood of the victim be shed to confirm a covenant before the terms of that covenant are stipulated? According to the above testimony of Paul, the blood of Christ was shed to confirm the covenant. But the Savior himself, makes the matter still plainer. Luke xxii. 20, "Likewise also the cup after supper, saying, This cup is the new testament in my blood, which is shed for you." Again, in Matt. xxvi. 28, "For this is my blood of the new testament." Christ gave his disciples, (together with all who should believe on Him through their word), great and glorious promises; together with "true laws, good statutes and commandments," promising them an inheritance if they would keep his commandments, and then sealed or confirmed the testimony with his blood, strictly charging them to keep in memory the token of the covenant. To Christ was promised the possession of earth, on condition of obedience, and He obeyed his Father's will perfectly, and in his will, He made all obedient ones, heirs and joint-heirs with Himself. He then became obedient to death. But in his death He accomplished a manifold object. He paid the purchase price to redeem a fallen earth, and to confirm the covenant, that the called out ones may receive the assurance of an eternal inheritance. Paul says, Heb. ix. 16,17, "For where a testament is, there must also of necessity be the death of the testator; for a testament is of force after men are dead." Christ died, and so I conclude that the New Testament or covenant has been made and confirmed, and is now in force. But after a will or testament is made and confirmed, it must be probated. The executor must go before court with the will and proofs of its validity, before it can be executed, or before the heirs can come into possession of their inheritance. Therefore, Christ has been raised from the dead, and is set at the right hand of the majesty of the court of heaven, there to probate the will, and mediate for the heirs named in the will; and unto them that look for Him, will He appear the second time, not as a sin-offering, but with the breast-plate of judgment, to appoint unto the heirs their positions in their inheritance. If I am not right in the above thoughts, I would thank any brother to point out my error, for it is truth that I want.

—We need to labor with our minds and hearts, as well as with our hands, in order to develop what is within us, to make the most of our possibilities and to enable us to live nobly and worthily. We need a careful balancing of our duties and relations in life and a due allotment of time and energy to each, that we may not develop into one-sided and unshapely characters, but attain the symmetry and beauty of true excellence.

—God hears the heart without words, but he never hears without the heart.

We should view all men in the clear sunlight of charity.

Those are but half-way teachers, who teach others and not themselves.

Those that reject divine revelation, have not so much as human understanding.

They cannot be secure from divine woes, who live in contempt of divine laws.

The sweetest intercourse we have with heaven, is when we have the least with this earth.

THE RESTITUTION

He Careth for You.

Go to the Lord with all your care,
With all your sorrow, pain and woe;
Your troubled heart, and spirit rend,
Before Him all your burdens show.

As loving children boldly come,
Before your Heavenly Father's throne;
And meekly there in humble faith,
Make all your wants unto Him known.

Our God is merciful and good,
Loving, compassionate and kind.
He knows our frame that we are dust,
And all our trials bears in mind.

His watches o'er the sparrow's fall,
He is a guardian ever true;
Then cast on Him your every care,
For he surely cares for you.

Then praise the Lord, and hallowed be,
His holy name; let every voice
Throughout the earth, in loud acclaim
His praises sing, and all rejoice.

LEWIS BUSH.

Hesperia, Mich., Dec., 1874.

Be Good and Be True.

Rest, rest ye, weary child. Why will you struggle
For the glittering toys of earth?
Knowest thou not, or hast thou not yet learned,
Where happiness has its birth?
Cease your struggle for sordid gain:
Fit for yourself a higher aim;
Learn to do good; learn to be true;
Do as you'd have others do to you.

There are riches more true than the glittering gold;
There are gems worth the seeking in a mine lost in old,
That will sparkle more brightly, when brought to the light,
Than the brightest of diamonds that gleam in the night.
These gems are the truths that lie hid in the Word;
To possess, we must seek them,—must know them when heard:
To cut, is to love them; to polish, to do.
The richest of gems are, Be Good and Be True.

Christ and the Thief.

How could Christ and the thief be together as living, conscious beings on the day of the crucifixion, when the scriptures declare that Christ died and was buried. 1 Cor. xv. That he was in the heart of the earth three days and three nights. Matt. xii. 40. That he rose from the dead and became the first fruits of them that sleep. 1 Cor. xv. 20. Now if Christ continued to live on in Paradise, heaven, or anywhere else, and did not cease to be conscious, how then did he die. If in Paradise, how then was he buried, and in the heart of the earth, if alive; how then could he rise from the dead on the third day, seeing he never died. These questions demand an answer—one which will introduce harmony between immortal soulism and the Bible—for as they stand, they conflict with each other. Our opponents say the thieves died on the same day Christ died. They acknowledge that all three died, two of them went to Paradise. Now as they died first, that is before entering Paradise, it follows that they must have gone there dead. What, then, was their condition. Let the wise man answer. "The dead know not anything." Eccl. ix. 5. So they knew nothing, hence were unconscious. This admission strengthens our argument, and goes to confirm us in the belief that we have the Bible truth on the nature of man and his condition between death and resurrection. Mark says, "When the even was come, Joseph of Aramathea went to Pilate and desired the body or person of Jesus. Pilate marvelled if he were already dead, and after he had received intelligence from the centurion that he was dead, he then delivered Christ into the hands of Joseph." Mark xv. 44. Here we have plain testimony that Christ was dead; but not one word about the death of either of the thieves. We further learn that Joseph came in the even or evening, in other portions of the book explained to mean the setting of the sun. Matt. vii. 13–16, Luke iv. 40. At which time their artificial day (12 hours) and natural or solar day (24 hours) closed and a new solar day began. Lev. xxiii. 33. "From even unto even shall ye celebrate your Sabbath." Thus with the going down of the sun, Friday closed and Saturday or Sabbath commenced. 2 Sam. iii. 36, 1 Kings xxii. 33, 2 Chron. xviii. 34, Judges ix. 33, Joshua x. 27. John's testimony is, the soldiers broke the legs of thieves; but when they came to Jesus, they saw he was dead already, therefore they did not break his legs, but pierced his side. John xix. 32–33. Here we have evidence that the thieves were still living, while Christ was dead. Their legs were broken, that when taken from the cross they might not recover or make their escape. Mark this point, Christ was dead and taken down from the cross in the evening, after the day on which he was crucified had come to a close. In harmony with the same law, the thieves must be removed from the cross at the same time; therefore, being yet alive, their legs are broken, that when taken from the cross they may not make their escape. Hence, the evidence is plain that the thieves did not die on the same day that Christ died. To this point are the remarks of Dr. Smith, which I here give: "Those who were to execute this duty found that Jesus was dead, and the thieves still living." Bible Dic. p. 410. "He was crucified between two thieves or malefactors, was watched according to custom by a party of four soldiers with their centurion, whose express office it was to prevent the stealing of the body. This was necessary, from the lingering character of the death, which sometimes did not supervene even for three days, and was at last the result of gradual benumbing and starvation. In most cases the body was suffered to rot on the cross by the action of sun and rain, or to be devoured by birds and beasts." Smith, p. 179. Did the thieves did the same day Christ died? The Bible nowhere speaks of their death, but gives us to understand they were yet alive when Christ was taken from the cross, which was in the evening after the day on which he was crucified had come to a close, and history informs us that death by the cross was slow and lingering in its character. Often the strength of the criminals lingered for three days and even longer, which accounts for the surprise of Pilate when Joseph asked for the body of Jesus; he marvelled if he were already dead. I am informed that Griesbach in the margin, puts the stop after to-day. which introduces a harmony between the request and the answer, and reconciles the text with all other portions of the book. The thief referred to future time. This request was to be remembered when Christ came; not when he went away. So does Jesus refer to that time as the period when he should be with him in Paradise.

Morals of the Bible.

Not long since I heard a spiritualist say, "The inspiration of Tom Paine, Voltaire, Jefferson, Ben. Franklin and others, was as good a code of morals as the inspiration of the Bible."

Well, perhaps to such as he (and those of the same school, and they are many) it is, for the moral precepts of the Bible do not very well agree with their notions of morality and virtue.

The slip-shod manner in which the Bible is studied by many who profess to be guided by its teaching, ill qualifies them to defend it, when attacked by these spiritists, who read and study it, only to find fault with it. The speaker above referred to, said the transaction in the garden of Eden, proved God to be a liar, and that the serpent told the truth; for said he, God said, "Thou shalt surely die," which is not true, man did not die. We showed the audience that he did die, and that the serpent told a lie, which is believed by all believers in inherent immortality, and that spiritism is founded upon the belief of the falsehood, and further, before we would receive their explanation of spiritualistic phenomena, we would require them to prove that the serpent told the truth, or that man did not die. The explanation given by them of the (so-called) spiritualistic phenomena, is like the explanation of the eclipse of the moon by the Indian, who said there was a fish trying to swallow it. That would account for it, provided he could prove the fish was there, and that he had the disposition and capacity for such an act.

But to return. If those men were as much and similarly inspired as the authors of the Bible, let it be tried awhile. When the sorest of trials; sorrow of the most gloomy kind, and the raven of despair hovers over them, and everything is as gloomy and dark as the tomb, let them read a sketch from Voltaire, a few extracts from one of Shakspeare's plays, or one of Franklin's "Poor Richard" almanacs, or Jefferson's preamble to the Declaration of Independence, I think they would derive but little comfort. Who, ever knew any one to be worse for following the precepts of the Bible? Glorious Book! Where else do we find a promise of future life—reward after death, a guide for all our actions in every day life, and what other book is there but what one man might learn all there is in it. But the Bible, "Search we may, for many years, till some new rich gem appears." We may have read books when young, that seemed to us that we never could know as much as was taught in them, but now they seem very common; we have got past them—know as much or more than was in them. But the Bible is always new, always interesting; passages that we have read a thousand times do not get stale. Who that loves God, has ever been tired of reading the Sermon on the Mount, or the Life of Christ, as written by the Evangelists? But I must forbear, for want of space to speak of the eloquence of prophets and apostles. FRANK PARKER.

Prof. Huxley's Estimate of the Bible.

Although this eminent scientist is not disposed to acknowledge the claims of the Bible, as presented by the church, it is still interesting to notice how impossible it is for a candid mind to disown its spiritual quality, and how strong a hold it has upon one who has once studied it, even if only in the desultory manner natural to a child reading for entertainment.

"The pagan moralists lack life and color, and even the noble stoic, Marcus Antonius, is too high and refined for an ordinary child. Take the Bible as a whole; make the severest deductions which fair criticism can dictate for short-comings and positive errors; eliminate all that is not desirable for children to occupy themselves with; and there still remains in this old literature a vast residuum of moral beauty and grandeur. By the study of what other book could children be so much humanized and made to feel that each figure in that vast historical procession fills, like themselves, but a momentary space in the interval between two eternities; and earns the blessings or the curses of all time, according to its efforts to do good and hate evil, even as they also are earning their payment for their work?

"At least, I know that some of the pleasantest recollections of my childhood are connected with the voluntary study of an ancient Bible which belonged to my grandmother. There were splendid pictures in it, to be sure; but I recollect little or nothing about them save a portrait of the high priest in his vestments. What come vividly back on my mind are remembrances of my delight in the histories of Joseph and of David, and of my keen appreciation of the chivalrous kindness of Abraham in his dealings with Lot. Like a sudden flush there returns back upon me my utter scorn of the pettifogging meanness of Jacob, and my sympathetic grief over the heart-breaking lamentation of the cheated Esau, 'Hast thou not a blessing for me also, O, my father?' And I see, as in a cloud, pictures of the grand phantasmagoria of the Book of Revelation. I enumerate, as they issue, the childish impressions which come crowding out of the pigeon-holes of my brain, in which they have lain almost undisturbed for forty years. I prize them as an evidence that a child of five or six years old, left to his own devices, may be deeply interested in the Bible, and draw round moral sustenance from it. And I rejoice that I was left to deal with the Bible alone: for if I had had some theological 'explainer' at my side, he might have tried, as such do, to lessen my indignation against Jacob, and thereby have warped my moral sense forever; while the great apocalyptic spectacle of the ultimate triumph of right and justice might have been turned to the base purposes of a pious lampooner of the Papacy." —Messiah's Herald.

Wind Up.

Watches run down; so do hearts. Rest in Jesus is retained only by skill in using the key of faith. Many have faith, but lack the skill or the habit to use it. They lay hold of Christ, receive a royal blessing, enter into a great peace, and then settle down, down, until peace and power are gone. They lack the art of keeping their souls in the love of God. That is more than believing; more than discerning their needs and the Lord's gracious supply; it is the habit of constantly, spontaneously, as by spiritual instinct, bringing wants and supplies together, feeling need and drawing on Jesus, detecting weakness and taking hold of strength, and taking hold in the right way, at the right place, through the right means, with the right spirit. It is the Lord's will that we use means. He ordered Moses to use the rod to divide the sea, the twigs of a tree to make the bitter waters sweet, the brazen serpent to heal the scorpion's bite. We shall keep our souls wound up when, as by instinct, we study the Bible when we ought and as we ought, pray in season, sing, when we need song, resort to social worship as a feast, sit at the Lord's table expecting sweet communion, give money to save souls or relieve distress, perform all Christian service, enjoy all Christian privilege, endure all Christian trials in a way to make them food, culture, inspiration, life. Then all the process of experience will do us good and wind us up, supply our needs and give rest.—Baptist Union.

The Reward of the Righteous.

The sons and daughters of the Lord Almighty shall are long receive the reward which only such a Father can bestow. For them his kingdom is reserved—a kingdom that cannot be removed. For them is a city prepared; the glory of the Lord shall lighten it, and the Lamb be the light thereof. For them shall heaven and earth be renewed, and there shall be no more curse. They shall see the King in his beauty; they shall walk with him in white, for they are worthy. They shall stand before the throne of God; they shall see their Father's face. To them, and them alone, shall glory, honor, everlasting life be given.

Not, as now, shall the inheritance, by comparison, make the inheritor insignificant—an interloper on his own estate. The sinful eye, the lying lip, the feet that run to evil, may not enter there. Dogs and sorcerers, whoremongers and murderers, idolators and whosoever loveth and maketh a lie—these find a place indeed, but not within the city. None but those who have a golden faith shall tread the pavement of the golden street; none but those who refrain their feet from evil, and their lips from speaking guile, shall follow the Lamb whithersoever he goeth, to sing the bridal song. The vile man shall no more be called liberal, nor the churl bountiful. Moth-eaten garments, cankered gold—the city of the saints contain not these; nor can the jasper walls enclose aught that is corruptible. Far, far from the gates of pearl shall tyranny and pride, avarice and luxury, in everlasting banishment bewail their bitter lot. Flee, then, ye sons and daughters of the Most High God—flee, as from Sodom's awful fire, the friendship of the world. Ye would not be God's enemies; let Him, then, not find in you any carnal-mindedness, but, contrariwise, the mind of Christ; yielding not your members as instruments of unrighteousness unto sin; but yielding yourselves unto God, as those that are alive from the dead, and your members as instruments of righteousness unto God. For they who have been buried with Christ in baptism reckon themselves to be dead indeed unto sin, but alive unto God through Jesus Christ their Lord. Do not the world will hate you, even as it hated Him; yet be not overcome of evil, but overcome evil with good. Not concerning friends alone have ye received commandment —feed the hungry, clothe the naked, shelter the outcast; ye must also love your enemies, for love is the bond of perfectness. Bless them that curse you, do good to them that hate you, and pray for them that despitefully use you and persecute you.

If thus ye do, happy are ye; for that kingdom comes for which we pray—the kingdom of our God—then shall ye be where there is neither hunger nor thirst, cold nor heat, sorrow nor sighing, darkness nor death, but blooming in immortal beauty amid unfailing riches and unclouded light, shall ye with all the saints dwell in the presence of God and of Christ, and reign forever and ever. Such is the lot of your inheritance, such the grandeur of your Father's gift, such the imperishable glory of the future age. Blessed indeed are ye who love the Lord's appearing, for yours is the kingdom of heaven.—S. Fletcher, in Messenger, Nottingham, England.

Degrees of Glory Among the Redeemed.

There are some who would introduce the barren and cold conception of perfect equality into the kingdom of Christ. Because the common fountain of every blessing is the grace of God in Christ, they would infer that the dignity and the blessedness of every believer will be the same. But this view is opposed to many statements of Scripture, and to every analogy of Divine Providence. The God of order delights to vary His gifts to His creatures. The God of equity, while he maintains the sovereignty of his grace, apportions the reward to every degree of faithfulness, and even to every separate act of true Christian love. The prophet and the righteous man has each his own proper recompense, and even the cup of cold water shall have some answering gift provided for it in the kingdom of God.

The people of Christ are "trees of righteousness, the planting of the Lord." But how various will be their stature, from the lowly hyssop to the lofty cedar of Lebanon! They are his jewels; but how various is their beauty, in kind and in measure, from the twelve that sparkled on the breastplate of the high priest to the massive foundations and pearly gates of the heavenly city! They are members of one mystical body; but how various their honor, from the foot to the hand or the eye! Isaiah lxvi. 3.

They are fragrant flowers of Paradise; but their fragrance and beauty will be as various as in the countless flowers of earth. They are stars that will shine forever, but one star differeth from another star in glory. They are living stones that will form an united temple, where every stone will have its due place. No sound of hammer or axe will be heard; but, when the signal is given by the master-builder, the dovetailing will be found complete; no error or flaw will be seen in the whole building, but the whole company of the redeemed, the church of the first-born, shall be one holy temple, perfect in every part, and divinely fitted to be the dwelling-place of the King of glory.

Now the order of Christ's kingdom will be brightly displayed in the proportion observed between the faithfulness of each Christian, and the place he will fill in the coming inheritance. He who gained ten talents shall have authority over ten, and he who gained five talents, over five cities. Those who have drunk most deeply of the cup of Christ's suffering, will stand nearest to their Lord in the exaltation. "Behold, a King shall reign in righteousness, and princes shall rule in judgment." And who shall be foremost among those princes of the better world to come? Our Lord himself has made answer, in his words on the eve of his own bitter agony: "Ye are they which have continued with me in my temptations. And I appoint unto you a kingdom, as my Father hath appointed unto me, that ye may eat and drink at my table in my kingdom, and sit on thrones, judging the twelve tribes of Israel." This predicted eminence of the holy apostles is implied in the last and crowning description of the future glory. "The wall of the city had twelve foundations, and in them the names of the twelve apostles of the Lamb." Luke xxii. 28, 30; Rev. xxi. 14.

How unlike the poor schemes of worldly politicians this blessed order and harmony of the kingdom of Christ, where the Son of God shall reign supreme, and the chosen companions of the Man of Sorrows in temptation and suffering shall be also the foremost in privilege and in glory! No watchword of party strife, no Shibboleth of narrow sectarianism, no question of low and selfish interest, shall there decide into whose hands the reins of authority shall be given. Where there is the highest goodness, there will be also the largest power. Whoever has excelled in the love of God, and the love of his brethren, to him the palm of superior honor will be freely given; and no envy or strife will hinder the common joy of all the redeemed in the brightness of those morning stars of the resurrection, which excel the rest in the lustre of their holy beauty. The highest in that peaceful and glorious family will be simply forgiven sinners, and the least and the lowest will be beloved children of God. Order will have its fullest triumph when "grace shall reign through righteousness," in the distribution of every blessing, and those who have sown most bountifully on earth, in suffering for Christ and in works of love, shall reap most bountifully in the kingdom of heaven. —T. R. Birkes.

Adam's Nature.

As there is difference existing among the brethren in regard to the question of man's future immortality, as well as to whether Adam was mortal or immortal, permit me to offer a few thoughts in regard to the subject. It may be that I can do something toward making them all see eye to eye. Viewing these subjects of discussion from my stand point can see no reason for a diversity of views in relation to them.

Some say that Adam was neither mortal nor immortal; many that he was either the one or the other; while a few others say that he was, and all his posterity are mortal, live mortal, die mortal and will rise mortal if they rise at all. It is manifest, therefore, to every one that some, if not all, are in error. Now, to guide men into the knowledge of the truth is commendable, and those efforts which shall result in making the brethren one in this matter, will surely be pleasing to God. I by no means undertake this subject with a desire to arrogate to myself greater wisdom than my brethren, but to contribute my mite toward the advancement of the body in the knowledge of the truth; reminding all that the Bible is a large volume, and one must study a long time before he can fully accquaint himself with all its teachings; and that in coming out of Babylon, many of us brought with us some Babylonish whims from which we should free ourselves.

I have never conversed with any one in regard to immortality who did not think that it consisted in an imperishable or indistructible physical constitution, and that the elements of indestructibility would abide in the immortal one. This I style a Babylonish notion at variance with reason and Bible teachings. It is the last relict of that immortal ghostology with which we were formerly carried away.

If I should ask the brethren if Adam was either obedient or disobedient before a law was given him, I apprehend they would all answer no; for any one can see that law is necessary to the existence of either. It is, therefore, true that he was neither the one nor the other; and it is also true in regard to all who have since been born into the world.

Had Adam been created immortal according to the modern view of the subject, he never could have died or been destroyed; had he been created mortal he would have died as a necessary consequence of his creation. We are taught in the word of truth that his death was the result of his disobedience; hence, neither mortality nor immortality can exist independent of law any more than can obedience or disobedience. We are taught in the word of truth that mortality or death was caused by disobedience. It is therefore the cause and mortality the effect. An effect can not precede its cause; therefore Adam, before his disobedience, was not mortal. In the same word we are taught that a patient continuance (obedience to law,) in well doing results in eternal life, (immortality). Obedience, therefore, is the cause and immortality the effect. Now, no effect can precede the cause; therefore Adam was not immortal before obedience. If he was created mortal, disobedience could not have been punished by it; if immortal obedience could not have been rewarded with it? Nothing, therefore, can be plainer than that mortality and immortality are not peculiarities of man's constitution, if they are not, what are they? Let us see:

Adam was a perfect man, mentally and physically, [illegible] circumstanced that he must act. Two states or fates were before him and his acts would determine which of the two would be his. If he obeyed the law, God's favor would be secured and he would be alive, surrounded by harmonious favors and influences that in combination would keep him always alive, free from physical disorder or mental disturbances. This is immortality—an interminable life, resulting from the harmonious action of physical forces. Adam disobeyed and incurred the displeasure of God. The earth was cursed and Adam found himself alive when his constitution was not in harmony with external influences, and the result was physical derangements, mental and vital disturbances. These inharmonious agents failed to supply the loss of physical power and vital force, and in a short time he fell a prey to the curse. This is mortality—a life or state that ends as a result of inharmonious surroundings.

The watch that lies before me is a frail piece of machinery, and can be destroyed by a blow or crushed beneath the foot; yet if God should forbid rust to assail it, continually replace what is lost by friction, and momentarily restore the loss of power occasioned by the uncoiling of its spring, it would tick away until the recording Angel would weary in marking the ages of eternity. As it is with this little watch so it is with us, and so it was with Adam. Had he secured God's favor by his obedience, his food, drink and external influence would have been nicely adapted to his constitution—supplying every loss of physical power and vital force, and he could no more have died than the watch could cease to run; yet he would have had the same constitution and powers that he had before the law and the same as he had after his transgression.

The Light of Revelation.

"We have also a more sure word of prophecy, whereunto ye do well to take heed as unto a light that shineth in a dark place." 2 Pet. i. 19.

The world is a dark place; the apostle says it is a cave. We are living in cave of darkness. God has not lifted the roof off the cave and let full light in, but he sends a torch and put it in our hand; and however dark the cave, however devious the way, if we will take God's light and will walk by it, the pathway will conduct us to the open door that leads out into the heavenly light. It is a beautiful figure The apostle does not say, "This is a heavenly place we are living in;" he says just what it is, that it is a dark, sinful, sorrowful world; that it is full of pain, sorrow, trial and tears; that there are a thousand mysteries round about us that God himself does not solve; that there are a thousand sorrows that no light of God will take away; that there are a thousand evils that God has given us no light; that it is dark, sinful, sorrowful and hopeless in this world, are laboring under the sad fallacy of hiding the light from their eyes and then walking in their own shadow.—Bishop Wiley.

The Gospel of the Kingdom of God.

God's promises to Abraham are sure to be fulfilled.

And the Lord said unto Abram after that Lot was separated from him, Lift up now thine eyes, and look from the place where thou art northward, and southward, and eastward, and westward; for all the land which thou seest, to thee will I give it, and to thy seed forever. And I will make thy seed as the dust of the earth; so that if a man can number the dust of the earth, then shall thy seed also be numbered. Arise, walk through the land in the length of it and in the breadth of it; for I will give it unto thee. Gen. xiii. 14–17.

I will give unto thee, and to thy seed after thee, the land wherein thou art a stranger, all the land of Canaan, for an everlasting possession. Gen. xvii. 8.

And he said, By myself have I sworn, saith the Lord, for because thou hast done this thing, and hast not withheld thy son, thine only son; that in blessing I will bless thee, and in multiplying I will multiply thy seed as the stars of heaven, and as the sand which is upon the seashore; and thy seed shall possess the gate of his enemies; and in thy seed shall all the nations of the earth be blessed; because thou hast obeyed my voice. Gen. xxii. 16–18.

I will multiply your seed as the stars of heaven, and all the land that I have spoken of will I give unto your seed, and they shall inherit it forever. Ex. xxxii. 13.

Which covenant he made with Abraham, and his oath unto Isaac; and confirmed the same unto Jacob for a law, and to Israel for an everlasting covenant; saying, Unto thee will I give the land of Canaan, the lot of your inheritance. Psa. cv. 9–11.

He removed him into the land, wherein ye now dwell. And he gave him none inheritance in it, no, not so much as to set his foot on; yet he promised that he would give it to him for a possession, and to his seed after him. Acts vii. 4, 5.

Jesus Christ, of the seed of Abraham, through whom the promises are to be fulfilled, will again appear in the earth.

The book of the generation of Jesus Christ, the son of David, the son of Abraham. Matt. i. 1.

That the blessing of Abraham might come on the Gentiles through Jesus Christ; that we might receive the promise of the spirit through faith. Gal. iii. 14.

Now to Abraham and his seed were the promises made. He saith not, and to seeds, as of many; but as of one, and to thy seed, which is Christ. Verse 16.

This same Jesus, which is taken up from you into heaven, shall so come in like manner as ye have seen him go into heaven. Acts i. 11.

And unto them that look for him shall he appear the second time without sin unto salvation. Heb. ix. 28.

At the second coming of our Lord, Abraham, and all believers in the future fulfillment of the promises, who have died, will be raised from the dead, and they, together with believers who are alive at his coming, will then receive the reward of their faith.

Now that the dead are raised, even Moses showed at the bush. Luke xx. 37.

And many of them that sleep in the dust shall awake, some to everlasting life, and some to shame and everlasting contempt. Dan. xii. 2.

Marvel not at this, for the hour is coming, in the which all that are in the graves shall hear his voice, and shall come forth; they that have done good, unto the resurrection of life; and they that have done evil, unto the resurrection of damnation. John v. 28, 29.

Behold, I show you a mystery. We shall not all sleep, but we shall all be changed; in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye, at the last trump; for the trumpet shall sound, and the dead shall be raised incorruptible, and we shall be changed. 1 Cor. xv. 51, 52.

For this we say unto you by the word of the Lord, that we which are alive and remain unto the coming of the Lord, shall not prevent them which are asleep. For the Lord himself shall descend from heaven with a shout, with the voice of the archangel, and with the trump of God; and the dead in Christ shall rise first; then we which are alive and remain shall be caught up together with them in the clouds, to meet the Lord in the air; and so shall we ever be with the Lord. 1 Thess. iv. 15–17.

And these all, having obtained a good report through faith, received not the promise; God having provided some better thing for us, that they without us should not be made perfect. Heb. xi. 39, 40.

Gentile believers in the fulfillment of the promises, are included in the seed of Abraham.

And the Scripture, foreseeing that God would justify the heathen through faith, preached before the Gospel unto Abraham, saying, In thee shall all nations be blessed. Gal. iii. 8.

And if ye be Christ's, then are ye Abraham's seed, and heirs according to the promise. Verse 29.

And when they were come, and had gathered the church together, they rehearsed all that God had done with them, and how he had opened the door of faith unto the Gentiles. Acts xiv. 27.

Simeon hath declared how God at the first did visit the Gentiles, to take out of them a people for his name. xv. 14.

Immortality will be conferred on all who are to inherit the promises, who are to be the associates of our Lord in the establishment of the kingdom of God on the earth.

When Christ who is our life, shall appear, then shall ye also appear with him in glory. Col. iii. 4.

For our conversation is in heaven; from whence also we look for the Savior, the Lord Jesus Christ; who shall change our vile body, that it may be fashioned like unto his glorious body. Phil. iii. 20, 21.

The city of Jerusalem, in Palestine, will be the seat of government of the heavenly kingdom.

Jerusalem shall be trodden down of the Gentiles, until the times of the Gentiles be fulfilled. Luke xxi. 24.

And many nations shall come, and say, Come, let us go up to the mountain of the Lord, and to the house of the God of Jacob; and he will teach us of his ways, and we will walk in his paths; for the law shall go forth of Zion, and the word of the Lord from Jerusalem. Micah iv. 2.

And the Lord shall inherit Judah, his portion in the holy land, and shall choose Jerusalem again. Zech. ii. 12.

Yea, many people and strong nations shall come to seek the Lord of hosts in Jerusalem, and to pray before the Lord. Zech. viii. 22.

And it shall come to pass, that every one that is left of all the nations which came against Jerusalem shall even go up from year to year to worship the King, the Lord of hosts, and to keep the feast of tabernacles. And it shall be that whoso will not come up of all the families of the earth unto Jerusalem to worship the King, the Lord of hosts, even upon them shall be no rain. xiv. 16, 17.

Neither by Jerusalem; for it is the city of the great King. Matt. v. 35.

The earth will forever continue to be the inheritance of the saints.

The righteous shall inherit the land, and dwell therein forever. Psa. xxxvii. 29.

For the upright shall dwell in the land, and the perfect shall remain in it. Prov. ii. 21.

The earth abideth forever. Eccl. i. 4.

Blessed are the meek; for they shall inherit the earth. Matt. v. 5.

Death will continue to prevail on the earth for a thousand years after the coming of our Lord, and will then be everlasting for those who are excluded from inheritance in the kingdom.

For he must reign till he hath put all enemies under his feet. The last enemy that shall be destroyed is death. 1 Cor. xv. 25, 26.

Blessed and holy is he that hath part in the first resurrection; on such the second death hath no power, but they shall be priests of God and of Christ, and shall reign with him a thousand years. And when the thousand years are expired, Satan shall be loosed out of his prison, and shall go out to deceive the nations which are in the four quarters of the earth. Rev. xx. 6–8.

Death and hell were cast into the lake of fire. Verse 14.

There shall be no more death. xxi. 4.

Consider and hear me, O Lord my God; lighten mine eyes, lest I sleep the sleep of death. Psa. xiii. 3.

For in death there is no remembrance of thee. vi. 5.

The dead know not anything. Eccl. ix. 5.

And to you who are troubled rest with with us, when the Lord Jesus shall be revealed from heaven with his mighty angels, in flaming fire taking vengeance on them that know not God, and that obey not the Gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ; who shall be punished with everlasting destruction from the presence of the Lord, and the glory of his power; when he shall come to be glorified in his saints. 2 Thess. i. 7–10.

Faith in the Lord Jesus Christ, and baptism, and holy living, are prerequisite for everlasting life in the kingdom of God.

Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ, and thou shalt be saved, and thy house. Acts xvi. 31.

Arise, and be baptized, and wash away thy sins, calling on the name of the Lord. xxii. 16.

Know ye not that the unrighteous shall not inherit the kingdom of God? Be not deceived; neither fornicators, nor idolators, nor adulterers, nor effeminate, nor abusers of themselves with mankind, nor thieves, nor covetous, nor drunkards, nor revilers, nor extortioners, shall inherit the kingdom of God. 1 Cor. vi. 9, 10.

For this ye know, that no whoremonger, nor unclean person, nor covetous man, who is an idolator, hath any inheritance in the kingdom of Christ and of God. Eph. v. 5.

Blessed are they that do his commandments, that they may have right to the tree of life. Rev. xxii. 14.

S. WORK.

Hebrew Civilization.

The peculiarity of the Hebrew civilization did not consist in the nature of the imagination and intellect, like that of the Greeks, nor in the organization of government, like that of Rome; but its distinguishing feature was religion. To say nothing of the scriptures, the prophets, the miracles of the Jews, their frequent festivals, their constant sacrifices,—everything in their collective and private life was connected with a revealed religion; their wars, their heroes, their poetry, had a sacred character; their national code was full of the details of public worship,—their ordinary employments were touched at every point by divinely appointed and significant ceremonies. Nor was this religion, as were the religions of the heathen world, a creed which could not be the common property of the instructed and the ignorant. It was neither a recondite philosophy which might not be communicated to the masses of the people, nor a weak superstition controlling the conduct of the lower classes, and ridiculed by the higher. The religion of Moses was for the use of all and the benefit of all.

The poorest peasant of Galilee had the same part in it as the highest Rabbi of Jerusalem. The children of families were taught to claim their share in the privileges of the chosen people. And how different was the nature of this religion from that of the contemporary Gentiles! The pious feelings of the Jew are not dissipated and distracted by a fantastic mythology, where a thousand different objects of worship, with contradictory attributes might claim the attention of the devout mind. "One God," the Creator and Judge of the world, and the Author of all good, was the object of adoration. And there was nothing of that wide separation between religion and morality, which among other nations was the road to all impurity. The will and approbation of Jehovah was the motive and support of all holiness; faith in his word was the power which raised men alike their conduct [illegible]. [illegible] divinities of Greece and Rome were often the personifications of human passions, and the example and sanction of vice.

And still further;—the devotional scriptures of the Jews express that heartfelt sense of infirmity and sin, that peculiar spirit of prayer, that real communion with God, with which the christian, in his best moments, has the truest sympathy. So that while the best hymns of Greece are only mythological pictures, and the literature of heathen Rome hardly produces anything which can be called a prayer, the Hebrew psalms have passed into the devotions of the Christian church. There is a light on all the mountains of Judea which never shone on Olympus or Parnassus; and the "Hill of Zion," is the type of "the joy of the whole earth," while the seven hills of Rome are the symbol of tyranny and idolatry. "He showed his word unto Jacob, his statutes and ordinances unto Israel. He dealt not so with any nation; neither had the heathen any knowledge of his laws." But not only was a holy religion the characteristic of the civilization of the Jews, but their religious feelings were directed to something in the future, and all the circumstances of their national life tended to fix their thoughts on One that was to come. By types, and by promises, their eyes were continually turned toward a Messiah. Their history was a continued prophecy. All the great stages of their national existence were accompanied by effusions of prophetic light. Abraham was called from his father's house, and it was revealed that in him "all families of the earth should be blessed." Moses formed Abraham's descendants into a people by giving them a law and national institutions; but while so doing he spoke before of Him who was hereafter to be raised up "a prophet like unto himself." David reigned, and during that reign, which made so deep and lasting an impression on the Jewish mind, psalms were written which spoke of the future king. And with the approach of that captivity, the pathetic recollection of which become perpetual, the prophecies took a bolder range, and embraced within their widening circle the redemption both of Jews and Gentiles. Thus was the pious Hebrew always, as it were, in the attitude of expectation. And it has been well remarked that, while the golden age of the Greeks and Romans was the past, that of the Jews was the future. While other nations were growing weary of their gods,—with anything in their mythology or philosophy to satisfy the deep cravings of their natures,—with religion acting rather as a barrier than a link between the educated and the ignorant,—with morality divorced from theology,—the whole Jewish people were united in attachment to their sacred institutions, and found in the facts of their past history a sure pledge of the fulfillment of their national hopes. It is true that the Jewish nation, again and again, during several centuries fell into idolatry. But from the time of their return from Babylon they were no longer idolators. They presented to the world the example of a pure Monotheism. And in the active times which preceded and followed the birth of Christ, those Greeks and Romans who visited the Jews in their own land when they lingered at the portals of the East, and those vast numbers of proselytes whom the dispersed Jews had gathered round them in various countries, were made familiar with the worship of one God and Father of all.—Sel.

The Partial Resurrection Theory Examined.

"Thou art weighed in the balances and art found wanting." Dan. v. 7.

We purpose to explain in this article the principle texts in the Bible, which are supposed to militate against the doctrine of the universal resurrection of the dead, and to show that the "partial resurrection theory" is not in accordance with the "law and the testimony." The first text we shall notice, is Amos viii. 14. "They that swear by the sin of Samaria, and say, Thy God, O, Dan, liveth; and, The manner of Beersheba liveth, even they shall fall, and never rise up again." There is nothing either in the text or context, to indicate that this refers to death and the resurrection, but even if it could be proved (which cannot be done), that this text referred to a literal death and resurrection, it would avail nothing, because in Young's translation, the passage reads as follows: "And they have fallen and rise not again." It does not say they shall never rise up, but speaks of their present condition. Psa. xlix. 19, 20. "He shall go to the generation of his fathers, they shall never see light. Man that is in honor and understandeth, not, is like the beasts that perish." This proof text is supposed to be unanswerable, and we must admit that as it stands in the common version it favors the idea of a limited resurrection. But when properly translated it does not afford the slightest proof. Winchester says, that the words "Never see light," in this passage, are the same as in Job. xxxiv. 36, where they are rendered unto the end. "My desire is that Job may be tried unto the end." He asks how it would seem to render the words thus. My desire is that Job may never be tried. This would be quite inconsistent with the nature of things, as well as a contradiction in the words themselves. But render the words unto a time or period, and the meaning is both plain and benevolent, but to wish him tried forever would be a most malevolent wish, and to wish him tried never, would be nonsense. We see then, that if the passage was properly translated, it would read, They shall not see light unto the end, or until the end. The end of what? Evidently the end of the one thousand years spoken of in the Apocalypse. Chap. xx. 5, 6. But it is objected tho Psalmist says, "God will redeem my soul from the power of the grave," and we are asked "if He redeems all, where is the contrast?" We answer, the contrast is in the one thousand years. They will not be redeemed when the Psalmist is. They will have no part in the first resurrection. They will not be kings and priests unto God. They will remain in the tomb until the end, when the sea, death and the grave, shall give up the dead which are in them. Jer. li. 5–7. "In their heat I will make their feasts, and I will make them drunken, that they may rejoice, and sleep a perpetual sleep, and not awake, saith the Lord." This passage is quoted as proof, positive that the wicked rulers of Babylon will not rise from the dead.

In the pamphlet "Hope for our race," we find the following excellent remarks on this passage: "This is said of the king of Babylon and his lords in their feast, when the city was taken and they were slain by the Persian army. In drunken feasts men sleep, but awake; but here their sleep was to be perpetual, simply meaning that it would not be as the drunkard's sleep, but the sleep of death. Perpetual is from the same original word (olam) that forever is, and is used twenty-one times, in a limited sense, as any one can see by a Concordance." I ask what proof there is in this passage that the wicked will not rise from the dead? My judgment tells me that there is none, even if there were no Bible to oppose the idea. Prov. xxi. 16. The man that wandereth out of the way of understanding, shall remain in the congregation of the dead." The length of time that this class will remain after the righteous dead are raised, is sufficient to make this declaration an important part of revelation, but it does not give the slightest countenance to the non-resurrection theory. This will be seen from Young's translation of the passage. "A man who is wandering from the way of understanding, in an assembly of rephaim, or great men, resteth." If this translation is correct, (and it is allowed to be superior to the king's version) we might as well quote from the 3d chapter of Job 17 verse, to prove that the weary would never be raised, as to quote this text in proof of the non-resurrection of the unjust.

The words of the Prophet Daniel, "And many of them who sleep in the dust of the earth shall awake, some to everlasting life, and some to shame and everlasting contempt." Dan. xii. 2. Though they are plain and full proof of the resurrection of the wicked as well as of the righteous, yet they are made use of by some against it. It is observed that the prophet does not say all of them, but "many of them that sleep in the dust of the earth shall awake." It is even said that these many design only a few. In answer to which, let it be observed that the word many, may be understood universally of all that sleep in the dust of the earth, in which sense the word is used in Rom. v. 19. "By one man's disobedience many were made sinners." Here we must allow that many, means all, or else deny that all were made sinners. Young translates the passage, "And the multitudes of those sleeping in the dust of the ground do awake, some to life, age-during, and some to reproaches and abhorence, age-during." One thing is certain, beyond the shadow of a doubt, that many, or the multitude, can never designate a few; but if the righteous of all nations should be raised, they are but a few in comparison with others. Besides, the prophet says, that some shall awake to the shame and contempt of the age, which cannot be said of the righteous, but must designate the unfaithful servants. Therefore, this prophecy is so far from being an argument against universal resurrection, it furnishes us with a very considerable one for the resurrection of the unjust. Isa. xliii. 16, 17. "Thus saith the Lord, which bringeth forth the chariot and the horse, the army and power, they shall lie down together, they shall not rise, they are extinct they are quenched as tow." We fail to see what this has to do with a resurrection. The chariot, the horse, the army and power lie down together, they shall not rise. The Chaldean army is extinct and will never be raised as an army, but if they should all be raised as individuals, it would not conflict in the least with this fact.

The following is Young's translation of the passage: "Who bringeth forth the chariot and the horse, a force, even a strong one, together they lie down, they rise not, they have been extinguished as flax, they have been quenched." Truly this is a far-fetched proof of non-resurrection, and it has been well remarked, that we might as well quote the extinction of Pharoah and his army in the Red Sea, as to quote these passages in proof of a limited resurrection.

Isa. xxvi. 13, 14. "They are dead, they shall not live, they are deceased, they shall not rise, therefore, hast thou visited and destroyed them, and made all their memory to perish." All that this passage teaches, is that those wicked lords who had ruled Israel, were dead, and should not live again to tyranize over them. There is nothing in the passage to forbid their resurrection in God's appointed time. This will be seen from Young's translation, "O, Jehovah, our God, Lords have ruled us besides thee; only by thee will we make mention of thy name. Dead, they live not, Rephaim (or great men) they rise not, therefore, thou hast inspected, and dost destroy them, yea, thou destroyest all their memory." Surely, the non-resurrection theory is built upon a sandy foundation. But we will give it a "fair chance" by examining its New Testament proofs, as well as the Old Testament ones. B. E. MERRICK.

DEAR BRETHREN:—

I enclose herewith, check for twenty dollars, which is sent by the church in Philadelphia, in response to the appeal for help from our brethren in the far West. We are very few in numbers and not blessed with an over-abundance of worldly goods, but we cheerfully contribute our mite, and thank God that we are able to do so, and wish that we could do more. I hope the brethren will respond heartily to this appeal, and not let it be said to them: "I was an hungered and ye gave me no bread; naked, and ye clothed me not."

Yours in hope,

BROTHER REED:—

I have been some three months laboring in Canada for my Master, with some success, for some have embraced the Gospel. Others are stirred up to examine the doctrine we advocate. Congregations have generally been large for the country.

Times hard, and money tight, so the people say, and I think they tell the truth. But I am on the wing for our Eden home! However, I expect to return to my own sweet and quiet home before I get there. Then I will send some pay for the RESTITUTION, and by your permission, will place myself truthfully before its readers.

Yours in hope of life when Jesus our life-giver comes.

The Passover Supper.

The brethren of the Abrahamic faith are requested to meet at the house of P. B. Stouffer on the evening of April 19, 1875, for the purpose of commemorating the death and suffering of Christ. All who wish to keep the anniversary of our Lord's death at its appointed season are invited to be present.

The evening of April 19, Roman time, corresponds with the commencement of the fourteenth day of the first month, Abib, sacred time. Thus it can be seen how Christ could eat the passover with his disciples, at its appointed season and be crucified on the same day, viz: the fourteenth day of the first month. In sacred time the evening and the morning is the first day, etc. Hence the fourteenth day commences with the going down of the sun on the evening of April 19, Roman time, and ends with the going down of the sun April 20.

P. B. STOUFFER.

Lanark, Ill.

From Brother Sarvis.

DEAR BRETHREN:—

Once more I take up my pen to have a talk with my brothers and sisters to cheer them on in the good work. As Paul tells us in his letter to the Galatian brethren (vi. 10,) "As we have therefore opportunity let us do good unto all men, especially unto them who are of the household of faith." It is my desire to do good unto all, and, brother, it is necessary we should all have the same spirit. When Paul says, "Let us do good," he means you and me, just as much as he does a minister of the Gospel. We are bound to do either good or evil, there is no ground between the two, our influence is for one or the other.

It is cheering to hear from friends through our paper and hear the cheering accounts of their hope and faith. Brothers, time is short. Soon the trumpet will sound, soon we will be called to give an account of our stewardship. Let us ask ourselves the solemn question, Have we done good unto all men, can we see the results of that good in any way? If we have not done good we certainly will fall short of that crown which is laid up for all those who love his appearing. Some say we are too weak and unlearned to do good. I tell you, brethren, this will not be accepted as an excuse. It is not necessary that we should all be generals in this warfare. Some have to fill other positions. Let our lives be teachers in this great work. There are more souls lost by professors living ungodly lives than are ever ruined by the teachers of infidelity. Just think of this—you are either building up or dragging down. O be faithful and do good, and that Jesus, whom the heavens must retain until the times of restitution spoken of by all the holy prophets, will receive you to himself when He comes to make up his jewels.

Your Brother in hope,
WM. N. SARVIS.

—Brother Amos Sanford has moved from Columbus, Kansas, to Anna, Illinois, which will hereafter be his address. Our brethren in Illinois and Indiana, will without doubt find work for him in the Gospel field.

—Brother John Foore is doing valiantly for the truth in Kansas. He has baptized thirty-three persons since the first of January, and the good work is going on bravely under his ministry. While our brethren in Kansas are having sore trials, the Gospel is winning men to Christ.

—Brother D. T. Halstead has closed his labors as State Evangelist. Having carried out his part of the contract, he feels at liberty to leave the field. He will continue to preach where the door may be opened. Brother H. is an efficient minister, and should by all means be kept in the field.

—The Kansas Relief Fund now amounts to about three hundred dollars, which is being sent to those in need. There are many localities which stand in need of help, and it has been the aim of those having the matter in charge, to make the distribution as equal as possible. But little can be sent to each place, yet we trust it will be timely and acceptable.

What We Believe.

Will you please tell us through the RESTITUTION, what your articles of faith are, if you have any. There are many who do not know just what your views are on points of doctrine.
R.

We believe—"Whatsoever things were written aforetime, were written for our learning, that we through the patience and comfort of the Scriptures might have hope." Rom. xv. 4.

We believe—"Though there be that are called gods, whether in heaven or in earth, (as there be gods many and lords many,) but to us there is but one God, the Father, of whom are all things, and we in him; and one Lord Jesus Christ, by whom are all things, and we by him." 1 Cor. viii. 5-6.

We believe—"Without faith it is impossible to please him; for he that cometh to God must believe that he is, and that he is a rewarder of them that diligently seek him." Heb. xi. 6.

We believe—"The righteous shall inherit the land and dwell therein forever." Psa. xxxvii. 29. "Blessed are the meek; for they shall inherit the earth." Matt. v. 5.

We believe—"The dead praise not the Lord, neither any that go down into silence. Whatsoever thy hand findeth to do, do it with thy might; for there is no work, nor device, nor knowledge, nor wisdom, in the grave whither thou goest." Eccl. ix. 10.

We believe—"If the dead rise not, then is Christ not raised; and if Christ be not raised your faith is vain; ye are yet in your sins. Then they also which are fallen asleep in Christ are perished. If in this life only we have hope in Christ, we are of all men most miserable. But now is Christ risen from the dead, and become the firstfruits of them that slept. For since by man came death by man came also the resurrection of the dead." 1 Cor. xv. 16-21. "Believing all things which are written in the law and in the prophets. And have hope toward God, which they themselves also allow, that there shall be a resurrection of the dead, BOTH OF THE JUST AND THE UNJUST." Acts xxiv. 14-16.

We believe—"The kingdom and dominion, and the greatness of the kingdom, UNDER THE WHOLE HEAVEN, shall be given to the people of the saints of the Most High, whose kingdom is an everlasting kingdom, and all dominions shall serve and obey him." Dan. vii. 27. "Flesh and blood cannot inherit the kingdom of God, neither doth corruption inherit incorruption . . . So when this corruptible shall have put on incorruption; and this mortal shall have put on immortality, then shall be brought to pass the saying that is written, Death is swallowed up in victory, O death, where is thy sting? O grave, where is thy victory!" 1 Cor. xv. 50-56.

We believe—"He shall be great, and shall be called the Son of the Highest: and the Lord God shall give unto him the throne of his father David; and he shall reign over the house of Jacob forever, and of his kingdom there shall be no end." Luke i. 32, 33. See also Matt. xix. 28; Acts ii. 30; xv. 15-17.

We believe—"The fearful, the unbelieving, and the abominable, and murderers, and whoremongers, and sorcerers, and idolaters, and all liars, shall have their part in the lake which burneth with fire and brimstone; which is THE SECOND DEATH. The wicked shall perish, and the enemies of the Lord shall be as the fat of lambs; they shall consume, into smoke shall they consume away." Rev. xxi. 8; Psa. xxxvii. 20. "And shall utterly perish in their own corruption. 1 Peter ii. 12.

We believe—"This same Jesus which is taken up from you into heaven shall SO COME IN LIKE MANNER as ye have seen him go into heaven." Acts i. 11.

We believe—"The grace of God which bringeth salvation, hath appeared to all men, teaching us, that denying ungodliness and worldly lusts, we should live soberly, righteously and godly in this present world; looking for that blessed hope and the glorious appearing of the great God, and our Savior Jesus Christ; who gave himself for us, that he might redeem us from all iniquity, and purify unto himself a peculiar people, zealous of good works. Titus ii. 11-14.

Time would fail us to point out in detail all those blessed promises revealed to us in the oracles of God. We hold to the essential doctrine of repentance toward God, and faith in our Lord Jesus Christ; an immersion into the name of the Anointed, in order to acceptance, and a subsequent walk in all the commands of the King. The glory of the kingdom, eternal life, companionship with angels, inheritors of the throne, reigning with Christ for a thousand years, and beyond, and all other blessings and immunities flowing from a belief in and obedience to the Gospel of the blessed God.

The consummation of this hope is nearing, the day is breaking, and soon the morning without clouds will be ushered in. Glorious prospect! Blessed victory! May we with the heart, believe unto righteousness, and with our lips make confession of Him. Then at his coming we shall have a crown of glory that fadeth not away. "Blessed are all they that put their trust in him."

The Better Resurrection.

Revelation is very clear and explicit in presenting the hope of future and eternal life to the people of God through a resurrection from the dead. It is a theme upon which the prophets dwelt with rapture; one upon which our Lord made some of his sublimest utterances; and one that called forth the most glowing descriptions from apostolic inspiration. A marked feature of "the better resurrection" is—that it is the resurrection from the dead in contra-distinction to the more indefinite expression—the resurrection of the dead. Dan. xii. 2. When literally translated, clearly presents the doctrine of an elective, and class-distinguishing, out-rising from the dead. A literal rendering of the original, after supplying the words that the construction of the sentence demands, according to the laws of the language, reads:—"And many from the sleepers in the earth dust shall awake; these shall be for life everlasting; and those shall be for revilings, for abhorences everlasting."

To paraphrase the exact meaning; "And many from among those who sleep in the dust of the earth shall awake; these—that is, the awakened, —shall have everlasting life; and those—that is the unawakened, who are left behind by those who rise—shall be the objects of abhorence and eternal contempt." In contrast with this eternal abhorence it is said of the righteous; "And they that be wise shall shine as the brightness of the firmament; and they that turn many to righteousness as the stars forever and ever." Our Lord is very definite in regard to the blessings and honors belonging to those who attain this distinguishing and peculiar class-resurrection, which is termed by him, by way of emphasis, as pre-eminently the resurrection, the one from among, or out of, the dead ones." He is showing the Sadducees, that as God is the God of the living, and not of the dead; and that their scriptures teach that he is the God of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, who have died; that, therefore, there must be a resurrection, in order for these patriarchs to sustain that peculiar relationship to God spoken of by Moses. We now give the language of Jesus: Luke xx. 34-36. "The children of this age marry, and are given in marriage; but those accounted worthy to attain to that age, and the resurrection, the one out from the dead ones, neither marry nor are given in marriage; and they cannot die again; for they are angel-equals, and are the children of God being the children of the resurrection." The preposition and genitive case, as used here, show that the resurrection spoken of, is that of a class from the whole, while the repetition of the article shows that it is some definite event that both parties understood. The awakening of the many to eternal life from those that sleep in death, leaving an unawakened multitude behind to become the objects of eternal scorn, is the only place in antecedent revelations that clearly indicates that the resurrection of God's people will be the out-rising of a part of the dead from the innumerable whole. Paul has the same idea in mind as an inspiring hope. In his letter to the Phillipian church he writes:—"So that I may but know him, and the power of the resurrection of him, and the participation of the sufferings of him, being conformed to the death of him, in order that by any means I may attain unto the out-rising from the dead ones." We have rendered literally in order to retain the articles of the original. The apostle compounds the original term for resurrection with a preposition that signifies "out-of,"—the compound term out-rising is the nearest English equivalent.

This compound term, in construction with the genitive plural, shows that the apostle contemplated an "out-rising from among dead-ones," as the coveted prize to be attained as the reward of his toilsome race. The Revelator, speaking of the resurrection of the martyrs and the holy dead says; "And these lived and reigned with Christ a thousand years; but the remainder (literally the remaining-ones of the dead-ones) of those dead revived not till the thousand years ended. This is the resurrection the first. Blessed and holy the one having a share in the resurrection the first. Over these the death the second has not power." Rev. xx. 4-6. Here again the class-resurrection is accurately stated, and the time when it takes place, as well as the length of the day of the Lord that closes with the judgment of all the dead, is also given. This better resurrection is often a theme by itself. "I shall be satisfied when I awake, with thy likeness," expresses all said of the resurrection in one connection. Psa. xvii. 15. Speaking of the flesh resting in hope, with a particular reference to the Messiah, he employs the beautiful expression, "Thou will show me the path of life" to define the egress of God's dear Son from the tomb; and by fair implication, the emergence of all God's children from the sleep of death. Closely connected with the coming of the Lord, and just previous to the punishment of evil doers, Isaiah thus speaks of the resurrection of the Lord's people as an event transpiring alone and by itself. "Thy dead men shall live, together with my dead body shall they arise. Awake and sing, ye that dwell in dust; for thy dew is as the dew of herbs, and the earth shall cast out the dead." Isa. xxvi. 19.

These risen ones immediately ascend to the chambers, and there remain hidden "until the indignation is overpast." Our Lord not only speaks of the resurrection that is the one out from the dead multitude (those dead, all the dead), but he promises that a certain course of benevolence shall not fail of reward. "Thou shalt be recompensed at the resurrection of the just," is his blessed assurance to those that remember the poor. Luke xiv, 14. In another discourse he speaks of a class that is given to him —a class of believers—a class drawn by the Father's love—a class that partake of him as the living bread—to which he makes the four-fold promise, "I will raise him up at the last day" individually. This he effects by the life-giving spirit. John vi. 37-63.

Paul joyfully contemplates the resurrection of those "which sleep in Jesus," and the change of that portion of the church "left over" to the coming of the Lord as a special class-distinguishing event; for all participating in the awakening and change are thenceforth "forever with the Lord." We might enlarge upon this topic but we forbear. This resurrection brings us into the heavenly family. For this "adoption,—this redemption of the body"—not only those that have the first-fruits of the Spirit, but creation itself groans and travails in pain. For our weakness, it brings unfailing vigor; for our deformity, the perfection of beauty; for our mortality, a condition of deathlessness; for our corruption, undecaying forms and features; and exchanges our earthly and Adamic natures for heavenly organizations like the most glorious body of our Lord.

When he who has the keys of death and Hades unbolts the prison house of death, and the church emerges in all the indescribable glories of the resurrection state, "then shall be brought to pass the saying that is written, death is swallowed up in victory. Thanks be to God which giveth us the victory through our Lord Jesus Christ. Therefore, my beloved brethren, be ye steadfast, unmovable, always abounding in the work of the Lord, forasmuch as ye know that your labor is not in vain in the Lord."

"One Idea."

To Elder Burr, Editor A. C. Times:—

In last week's Times, under the caption of "One Idea," I found the following statement: "Christ is the central object" of all "valid faith," with this I most fully agree. But I ask what makes him "the central object of all valid faith."

1st. Because the covenant promises only by the oath of Jehovah confirmed to Abraham, in him, and he thereby made the grand heir to the promised inheritance, and kingdom of God, and the emancipation of his brethren, even all the elect children of Jehovah.

2nd. Because he being the emancipator of Adam, and his race. Death, the penalty of sin was the propter antitype of the sacrifice, that was made by Abraham at the making of the covenant. Hence "the central object" of "the one faith of the gospel."

3rd. Because at his first advent, and the cross, he as the head seed of the covenant, that in a future dispensation is to bless all the nations, and families of the earth, did die, thereby making himself a sacrifice, as the antitype of "the sacrifice" offered by Abraham and his Levitical descendents all the way down from the making of the covenant with Abraham, until the death, and especially the resurrection of Christ our adorable Redeemer, Saviour, and everlasting friend. Well may it be said then, that "Christ is the central object of faith."

4th. Because He being the head seed, and also head heir, is also the heats of the seed," "For if ye be Christ's then are ye Abraham's seed, and heirs according to the promise." These last-named, are the body seed, and the former the "head of the body," and thus the head and body make the "perfect man, Christ Jesus, when fully developed, and the promise and oath having become due. The same seed, then commence the "appointed" judgment, and judge and rule the world thereafter, not only through the coming age of judgment for a thousand years, but also on forever, even forever and ever, Amen, Amen.

5th. Because the testimony of the spirit by the mouth of the prophet David saith, "He shall," (even after his return from his Father's right hand, where he now sits in heaven, and his "enemies" are "made his foot stool," that is, "made subject to him," the [illegible] divine will, and authority,) "reign in the midst of his enemies," and that they "shall bow before" his sovereign power and "lick the dust." Then as the oath of Jehovah to Abraham hath said will He "rule" the cities and villages of his enemies, or in oriental, and ancient language "passes" their "gate," and at the same time "see of the travail of his soul and be satisfied," while all the nations of the earth, willingly submit to his royal sceptre and angels chant the anthems of glory, saying peace on earth and good will to man, for lo, Jesus reigns from shore to shore, and now, the nations "learn war no more." Yes, he is "the central object of all valid faith," for no faith is valid, but the "one faith of the gospel" "covenant," "made with Abraham" in olden times.

6th. Because there is salvation in no other name, person, individual, or source. Therefore "in Him" and "in His name" alone, can any of sinful Adam's race find "peace with God"—But "in Him" God's elect occupy the place of his choice from the beginning, and whosoever comes "to God by him" HELKO, on a penitent faith "working by love," "BAPTISED by the one spirit, into the one body"—may "draw near" and look up to God through him (as one looks through a telescope) "in full assurance" of ("a valid") "faith" believing in his heart, that the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ looketh down upon him through Jesus His Son as the medium, and middle man, and beholds his soul, that was once guilty of sin, while out of Christ and dying in the wicked one now cleansed and washed in his blood, and behold in the eyes of the Father as he sees him now in, and through Christ, the child is pure, is justified, is holy, and without guile, spot, or blemish. Surely then he is the "central object of all valid faith."

7th. Because He as Jehovah's medium, and means of salvation "is able to save to the uttermost," "all that come unto God" in his appointed way, and "by him" as "the way, the truth, and the LIFE," for God hath "chosen us in him," and no one out of him, and as men are "baptised into him," when their faith in him becomes sufficiently "valid," as to render itself operative, and its possessor obedient to the gospel, in baptism first—and afterwards obedient to the words of the Master, as a "central object of valid faith," while in this state of vanity, sorrow and trial.

8th. Because that central faith in Christ, working by love and purifying the heart, life, and practice, is the one faith of the gospel, inhering in the promises, and generating the only valid hope, in every intelligent believer's heart, that first hears, and then does these "sayings" of the Lord Jesus, and is therefore, and thereafter subject to him as Lord, Ruler, Governor, Prophet, Priest, and King forever. Thanks be to God, that we have such "a central object of faith."

9th. Because obedient and practical faith, thus centered in him finds its base in the promise "made of God unto the fathers," and generates the same hope that Paul and the twelve tribes had who served "God day and night," looking for a home on the bounty lands of promise in Eden restored, when Jesus, as the 'promised seed," should reinstate order in this part of Jehovah's realm, and not only "possess the gate of his enemies," but also "reign forever," "where the sun doth his cessele-s courses run, hallelujah, glory to God for such faith, and such hope centering in such a central and divine object, glorious and sure, for for such a faith is "the faith of the gospel of the kingdom of God."

10th. Because that the promise to Abraham "that he and his seed," both head and body, I suppose, "should possess the land," and "heir" "the world," "for an everlasting possession" and "inheritance," was confirmed by the" holy "oath of Jehovah," in our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ, in the following terms, "Thy seed," head and body, I suppose, "shall possess the gate of his enemies, and in thy seed shall all nations be blessed," not blessed, however, with simply an offer of good, as some now say, that they never do in fact possess, obtain or avail themselves of. But with an equitable, glorious, and peaceful administration of government, established and executed by Jesus and his co-heirs the saints, that will ravish the hearts of all mankind, and also honor its author Jehovah, and be in fact a blessing to all the nations and families of his vast and peaceful empire, on all the earth, while they sit under their own vine and fig-tree, and there is none to molest, or make them afraid. For there all will be taught of, and know the Lord, from the least to the greatest of all flesh.

11th. Because He being raised from the dead, as the head seed of the body, must, and will, most surely fulfill the promise and oath, as the two immutable things in which it is impossible for God to lie, by raising from the dead, and changing to incorruption the living saints, and then joining the head forever with the body then prepared, being also made immortal, He appoints them princes in all the earth and by, and under His authority they reign on the earth as kings and priests unto God, and thus the judgment is decreed by Christ and executed by the saints, as the holy spirit has declared by the mouth of the prophet David, and also the apostle Paul.

12th. Because He now as head and forerunner of the body hath already entered through the vail, and is now in heaven itself, there to appear before God for us, as our propitiation, our mediator, our intercessor, and high priest alone, in the antitype of the slain goat, that was offered in sacrifice by Aaron and his Jewish successors in the levitical dispensation and before He come and suffered in the flesh ail of which makes him the central object of the faith of the gospel of the kingdom of God, as established and administered by him as the head of co-heirs, the saints, as his members, and body politic, execute his will and pleasure, among all the nations of the earth, not only in the age of a thousand years to come, but also throughout all ages, world without end.

13th. Because that it is by his loving favor, wisdom, sanctification, and redemption, that he has become, on the behalf of his people that "his fathers," according to the flesh, can hope to be "his children" by the spirit that raised him from the dead, when by the same spirit that raised him, and now leads, and stimulates his people to the obedience of his word he shall raise them also from the dead and "appoint them" his "princes," to execute his will, "in all the earth." These, doubtless are a part of that host that sing in the future, as John heard the new and glorious song, "thou hast redeemed us out of every nation, kindred, tongue, and people by thy blood, and made us unto our God kings and priests, and we shall reign on the earth. No doubt, these as the executioners of the will of their royal head, Jesus, are the redeemed saints that "live and reign with Christ a thousand years," and as this thousand years is God's appointed day of judgment, the saints, as the holy spirit says by the mouth of David, the prophet and also Paul, the apostle, of Christ, "shall judge the world."

14th. Because He is represented by the fit man, to lead the live goat unto the land of separation, (margin) and this happens after He comes out of heaven, as in the type the live goat was unoccupied until the high priest came out of the Holy of Holies. So Christ does not officiate as the Melchisedec priest, until he comes out of heaven, and after he is enthroned in the city of ancient Salem. But now Jerusalem the live goat representing the Melchisedec priests offered to be executed, and Jesus the "fit man" to execute it. The high priest in the type confessed the sins of Israel (as a nation) over the head of the live, or scape goat, as he came out. So Christ in the antitype as He comes out, shall "turn away ungodliness from Jacob," (Israel as a nation) as God covenanted with their fathers, and if so is not He, whether past, present, or future, the central object of faith.

15th. Because when they "look upon him whom they pierced" and "mourn for him," and over their sin, and national blindness in putting him to death. For their fathers, as a nation did, and taught them to say, "away with him, away with him, we will crucify him, we will not have this man to reign over us." This was very cruel in them, to be sure it was. But He said Father forgive them they know not what they do, and now when their blindness is gone, and they repent most devoutly, and sincerely, and from the heart will his tender heart frown upon them, and say away with you, you blind infidels, if he had the heart of some no doubt he would. But as he teaches us to render good for evil, will He not act upon the same rule and principle when He has such a very good opportunity; my whole soul says yes, and as the word of the Lord is, that He will open to them "a fountain for sin and uncleanness," and also that God "pours upon them the spirit of supplication, and of GOOD (favor)" I have no doubts left. But that they will improve the favorable opportunity of embracing their hitherto rejected King, and he, Joseph-like, who was his grand type will save them from the land where they were ready to perish, and I will then restore the kingdom again to Israel, and raising David their ancient king, will make him a prince, as one of his children, by the spirit, and under himself, over them, to execute his will forever, and by this kindness He will show them Jehovah's mercy, as saith the apostle Paul. Rom. ii. 31. "Even so have these," (blind Jews) "also now not believed, that through your" (the gentiles as a nation, or whole) "mercy they," (the blind Jews AS A NATION,) "also MAY" (AT THE RETURN OF THEIR MESSIAH to build up David's ruins,) "OBTAIN MERCY." In this He certainly is "the central object of all valid faith." For without him in his, birth, death, resurrection, ascension, mediation, and second coming to execute it, all would be a total and complete failure, and with such failure much of Jehovah's holy truth would also fail. But by faith in our "central object," we know that all property concerning him must and will be fulfilled. For the holy spirit by his mouth hath said it, and it will all be executed in due time, to the glory of God.

16th. Because when he restores the kingdom again to Israel, and raises David from the dead, He being Emanuel, (that is (God with us will place David a prince, or king of the Jewish nation in the flesh, restored, and the Gentiles hearing of his fame will go to Jerusalem to see his glory. Then will this scripture concerning him be fulfilled; that saith "then shall ten men out of all the languages of the nations, (gentiles) take hold of the skirt of him that is a Jew, saying we will go with you, for we have heard that God, (Emanuel) is with you," O how important is "the central object of all valid faith," even Jesus, in all this. Yes He is the author and finisher of all "valid faith," who when in his future kingdom, He is God to the Jews and the world, will "reign over the Gentiles," as saith the Holy Spirit by the mouth of the Apostle Paul, and also by his own mouth, when He said "all things concerning me (him) in the Scriptures of truth, "must be fulfilled," when one has been taught by the words of the Holy Spirit, and has in his heart believed all these things. He will have a wide range for his thoughtful study, conversation, and private or public teaching, and will not be necessitated to ride any "hobby," or be compelled to always be talking; preaching, or publishing but "one idea," whether he may write, speak or publish on the subject of "justification," "sanctification," "redemption," or "the coming kingdom of God." But not as when one leaves the Bible doctrine, to teach the doctrine of men.

A Sunny Temper.

What a blessing to a household is a merry, cheerful woman—one whose spirits are not affected by wet days, or little disappointments, or whose milk of human kindness does not sour in the sunshine of prosperity. Such a woman in the darkest hours brightens the house like a little piece of sunshiny weather. The magnetism of her smiles and electrical brightness of her looks and movements infect every one. The children go to school with a sense of something great to be achieved; her husband goes into the world with a conqueror's spirit. No matter how people annoy and worry him all day, far off her presence shines, and he whispers to himself, "At home I shall find rest." So day by day she literally renews his strength and energy, and if you know a man with a beaming face, a kind heart, and a prosperous business, in nine cases out of ten you will find he has a wife of this kind.

It is much better to fear the wrath of God than to feel it.

All Things New.

"And God shall wipe away all tears from their eyes; and there shall be no more death, neither sorrow, nor crying, neither shall there be any more pain: for the former things are passed away."—Rev. xxi. 4.

The curse of thorn and plague of pain,
Emblems of death, the bier and hearse
Processions long more o'er the plain,
And yet He's promised—no more curse.

From land and sea there comes the wail
Tidings of death, alarms and fears,
Sorrow lingers o'er hill and vale,
And yet He's promised—no more tears.

The desert wild, the ice-bound shore,
War, famine and the simoon's breath,
Shall waste and blast on earth no more,
For He hath promised—no more death.

Those waves of waters, on whose wave
Conquering feet of bond and free,
Have fought and died, and found their grave
And yet He's promised—no more sea

And He who sits upon the throne,
Who-e blessed promise ever true,
Proclaims from heaven, IT IS DONE.
Behold, He maketh ALL THINGS NEW.

Hell.

Is hell the opposite of heaven? Is it a particular place? Where is And when was it created?

These questions presented th selves to my mind with considera force the other evening, as I sat un a description of the agonies of h as presented by a would-be orthod minister. He said there would eternal war in hell, a continued et of sinning and suffering, and t God Himself would engage pers ally in tormenting the sinner to eternity. That the devil was a p sonal being, and hell was a r place, a prison where sinners wo be imprisoned, not only twenty ye but for eternity. And so he went making one assertion after anoth but failed to give any Scripture, any one an opportunity to inquire light.

The Protestant idea of hell is t it is the opposite of heaven. This a mistake. Such an idea does not pear on the record of creation, neit er is it found anywhere in the Bible. We read, "In the beginning God created the heaven and the earth." Gen. i. 1. Now you have the opposite of heaven. It is earth, not hell. This chapter contains an account of the creation of all things, but does not say one word about the creation of a place called hell. It is said, God finished the creation, and pronounced everything He had made "very good." Did He create a hell to be inhabited by fiends and devils, where wicked men and fallen angels engage in eternal war? If so, why is it that the Bible is silent with reference to its creation and locality?

We might mention four different Lotis, and other supposed places for the confinement and punishment of immortal ghosts, all founded on the same basis, viz: the immortality of the soul. Remove this foundation-stone, and down comes the Pagan, Alcoran, Protestant and Papist hell. Also the Catholic's purgatory and limbo infantia must fall, just as he says old limbus patra fell, at the resurrection of Christ. Purgatory, like limbus patra, is only temporary, and will be destroyed at the judgment, but limbo infantia and hell are eternal. Hell is for the incorrigible sinner. Limbo infantia for all unbaptized infants,—both classes suffer endless misery. What a monstrous idea! We trace it back to the fathers of the immortality of the human soul.

The Pagan hell, by Pagan writers, is located under the ground. Said to be a wide, deep cave, were the inhabitants will suffer a variety of punishments of an endless duration. For a full description of this hell, see Took's Pantheon.

Some of the Mohammedans, those considered the most orthodox hold that the immortal souls of the wicked are confined in a dungeon under a green rock, where they will be tormented until re-united with their bodies, which re-union will take place at the general judgment. The fifth article of their creed is, that mankind, at the resurrection, will be distinguished into three classes—The first go on foot, the second ride, the third creep with their faces to the ground. The first class consists of those believers whose works have been few. The second are those who are perfectly acceptable to God. Of this class Ali affirms, They shall find prepared for them white-winged camels with saddles of gold. The third class are composed of infidels, whom God will compel to travel with their faces on the ground. Thus they collect together, and wait in their ranks for the judgment. With regard to how long they wait they are not agreed. Some believe forty years, others three hundred, and some no less than fifty thousand years. But while in this waiting condition they throng and press upon each other, and the skulls of the wicked will boil like a pot, from the action of sun, it being only a mile from them. Finally God comes, surrounded by his angels, opens the books, and all are judged within the space of half a day, or the twinkling of an eye. Those awarded to Paradise take the right hand way, while those sentenced to hell take the left, both classes must cross the bridge Al Sirat, which extends over the middle of hell, and is said to be finer than a hair, and sharper than the edge of a sword. The wicked in attempting to pass, fall into hell, where their worm dieth not and the fire is not quenched, the body returns to dust as it was and the spirit to God, who gave it; all of which were answered by Brother Foore, to the perfect satisfaction of all the enquirers after truth. Surely Brother Foore has shown himself a workman that needeth no reproof. Earnest in his exhortation, after he has proclaimed boldly and fearlessly the Gospel of the kingdom, with untiring perseverance.

We now number twenty-eight members. There also remaining two who desire to put on Christ soon. Many more are convinced of the One Faith which is in Christ Jesus, and are seeking after the truth that is revealed in God's word.

Notice.

To all men, and especially such as feel another's need, also sympathize with their pressing wants. Dear friends! I am in special want of about fifty dollars, and have the means to get it on condition that I can sell some of my books. Therefore I propose to send post paid, to any one that will send me twenty cents, one of "The History of the Primative Faith," and for thirty-five cents I will send two, and for fifty cents I will add one of "The Tree of Life," and "Colloquy," bound together. For one dollar, I will double the last number and send six; for two dollars I will send thirteen; for four dollars I will send twenty-seven, and for five dollars I will send thirty-four. Brother or Sister, reader, do you not want one or more, if not for youeself, please get at least one for your neighbor, or to give to some poor neglected soul, and thus do good in two ways at once with a very little of your money. In my heart I say, as I send this out, O God, may thy will be done, and I learn to suffer as well as do the same. Please direct to C. F. Sweet, Athion, Orleans county, N. Y.

Another Fraud.

Like all other cities of any pretensions, Chicago has its Katie King, who, for money, will gladly reveal to man all his past, all his future and "materialize," ad libitum, the spirits of the friends he has lost. Last night this Chicago K. K. (how appropriate are these initi ls!) held one of h marvelous seances. She "materi ized" Katie King, the real, old Jo King, the pirate, and nearly all t defunct ancestors of those people pr ent. Then she offered to be e amined, to show that "she had no a paratus or humbuggery about her and coming from her cabinet, a voluntarily repaired to a private roo with two ladies, authorized to mak the inspection. Soon the friends ou side heard a scuffling, and the voi of the quasi Katie in high tones an profane words, upbraiding one of t searchers. Quickly breaking in the apartment, what was seen! T "medium" standing in a threatenin attitude toward one of the ladies, w pluckily stood her ground, holding her hand a lot of rubber faces a arms! And this is the way they "m terialize" in Chicago.—March 16 Chicago Journal.

Notes and Hints.

Believing that the reports of those who labor in "word and doctrine" are interesting to the brotherhood, I herewith send a brief sketch of labors and incidents. It had been with me a favorite idea to devote the entire winter to the proclamation of the Gospel, but circumstances that it is not proper to state here, caused me to abandon the much-desired plan. A review of the past winter, however, discloses the following facts: I have devoted to the cause of truth directly, about fifty days, during which time have spoken in public nearly fifty times. What fruits may result, I am sure I cannot tell, perhaps it is better for me that I cannot know this. The consciousness of having tried to set the truth before the people is to me a gratification. The grateful expressions from those whose minds have been illuminated by the truth, have been of greater value to me than all the noisy adulations that greet the scheming politicians from their blind constituents. It is pleasant to present the truth to those who appreciate it. The pleased look, the intelligent recognition when a truth is unfolded, the approving smile of satisfaction at the reasonableness of Deity's plan, the firm look of conviction of the truth that greets the speaker, these all tend to render this part of a faithful teachers duty a pleasant thing. The other side of the picture has shades that detract from the beauty of the picture of "one of God's teachers abroad." But as each faithful teacher has seen both sides, I refrain from further comment just now. Suffice to say that the sacrifices made by every child of God, who goes forth to battle for the truth are too lightly estimated, some I fear almost esteem it a luxury to be a minister! Oh! think of the ties of affection that must be riven; think of the agonized partings from an affectionate family; think of the anxiety of mind to know how loved ones at home are doing; think of the [illegible] of life that press so heavily upon those who thus devote their lives to God, for it is a truth that wealthy men do not evangelize!! The latter burden is perhaps the hardest to bear. O, brethren, think on these things! and ask yourselves whether you have made corresponding sacrifices on your part. Now I wish to call the attention of the brotherhood to a few things that I fear are overlooked, and knowing that it is as difficult to point out faults without giving offense, as it is to praise one's virtues without exciting vanity, I shall therefore touch lightly. A deep interest taken in the work of an Evangelist, serves as a powerful inducement to him, and is an additional argument to those whom he is laboring to benefit. During recent series of pleasant meetings, an increased interest was given by brethren and sisters, who traveled eight miles and returned, making sixteen miles, and that too, in cold weather. Others came fourteen miles to manifest by their presence the interest they have in the cause; and during a series of meetings recently held in Illinois, two devoted brothers traveled twenty miles to reach the meetings. I think it a safe rule to estimate a persons love for a system by the amount of interest they take in it. This being true, it is safe to say the persons above alluded to, love the truth. It is not with them a secondary matter, but "a seeking first the kingdom of God" through devotion to the truth. But what shall we say of this? It happened once upon a time, that a meeting was appointed for 11 o'clock, on Saturday, (a bad time you know to call out many of the worlds people), and by actual count, men, women and children numbered eighteen, including two speakers, and the numerical strength of the brethren was said to be about fifty! More than one third of the audience unbelievers. After all that might be set down in extenuation by bad roads, bad health, &c., still it shows a want of interest that is sad to contemplate. Brethren, suffer the word of exhortation. We must be in earnest, our religion must be a matter of the highest importance if it would gain the kingdom. We are not our own. We are bought with a price. Let us serve God acceptably. Quit you like men, be strong. Let us love in word and deed. Be yestead*fast*.

Yours in Hope

There are 222 Baptist Churches in Sweden, but owing to the severe legal disabilities under which they labor, they have but few chapels, and are compelled to meet in private houses, barns and often in the open air. Minerva E. Faunt, daughter of John and Elizabeth Richardson. She was born in the state of Illinois, March 16, 1854. Emigrated to Kansas with her parents. After coming to Kansas she was baptised into the Campbellite faith. After hearing the Gospel of the kingdom preached by the writer, she was baptised into Christ, some three years ago. Sister Faunt was married Oct. 21, 1873, and died Jan. 12, 1876, at the age of twenty years and twenty-six days. Leaving a husband and a little babe, father and mother to mourn her loss.

A sermon was preached by the writer, from 1 Thes. iv. 13, to a large and attentive audience, who never heard the truth upon the great life theme before.

Brethren let us prove faithful to the great trust committed into our hands. Our friends are leaving us one by one, but soon the King will call for them, and then the crown of glory. They sleep in Jesus, and will be in the likeness of his resurrection. We mourn not as those who have no hope.

His Coming.

"Watch ye therefore, for ye know not when the Master of the house cometh, at even or at midnight, or at cock-crow, or in the morning." —Mark xiii. 35.

It may be in the evening, when the sunshine is fading away,
When I can sit in the twilight and watch the decline of day,
And the work of the day is ended, when the shadows are growing dim,
And the hour seems quiet and holy, with thoughts I have of him.
When I hear the tread of passers along in the busy street,
Amid those sounding footsteps may come the tread of his feet.
Therefore I am silently waiting, while the shadows are falling fast,
Watching for a token to herald that he is coming at last:
May I always be on my watch, wherever may be my home,
For it may be that in the evening is the time that he will come.

Or it may be in the midnight, when darkness is over the deep,
And I am lying in slumber in a calm and peaceful sleep;
When the sky is overclouded and the gloomy night draws close,
And all is still and lonely when the lights are out in the house,
And the fire in the grate is dying, and the embers smouldering low,
When the clock is loudly ticking, sounding so solemn and slow,
Though tired with the cares of life I sleep sound upon my couch,
Yet when I am awake, I must never forget to "watch,"
Although in the gloom and shadow of my dark and silent room,
For it may be in the midnight is the time that he will come.

He may come at the cockcrow, when the dawn appears in the sky,
While the world is silently waiting for the light that seemeth nigh;
When the morning stars are fading, silently, slowly away,
And the fog is gently rising from the valley, cold and gray,
And the glow of the sky announces the dawn of another day,
Oh! then may I remember the command to "watch therefore,"
For none can tell the moment when the Master will come to the door,
And it may be at daybreak, when the darkness of night is done,
Between the night and the morning that no will come.

It may be in the morning, after the dawn of day,
And the rising sun has driven the shadows far away;
When the little streams are sparkling in the rays of the morning sun,
And the warbling songsters tell me that another day is begun.
When I rise up wearily, thinking of the work there is to do,
And I see through the open door, the sunlight streaming through,
I think that he may be next to enter that open door,
To call me away from my busy work forever forever more,
As I work I must ever watch it still the day is —done,
For it may be "in the morning" that he will come.

Thus I am waiting, watching, quietly ever day;
When the great sun shines brightly, I turn from my work and say —
In my fancy—it is like the glory of his shining face,
As he looks upon the earth from his high and holy place;
And I know he is soon coming from his throne to surround me,
To inherit that pure city from care and sorrow free,
And when a shadow falls across the hills and valleys here,
I lift my head to view the clouds and ask if he is there!
And methinks an angel whispers sweetly from my future home,
"'Tis only a few more shadows and he will come.

The Catacombs of Rome.

Prof. Jules De Launay, who begins a series of articles this week, in our columns, on the Catacombs of Rome, is a native of Paris, born of Jansenist parents, and designed for the Roman priesthood. While pursuing his studies in Rome, has became deeply interested in the symbols and epitaphs of the Catacombs, the great Roman necropolis. Upon these pictorial tablets he read the faith of the early Christians, so strikingly in contrast with that which he was preparing to promulgate. The fact that Romanism is an apostasy from the primitive faith was apparent, and he became a Protestant. Indeed, he went beyond Protestantism as generally understood in contrast with Romanism; for he saw in the posthumous testimony of the martyrs of the first three centuries that they believed not in inherent immorality, not in a conscious intermediate state, but in the sleep of the saints until the morn of the resurrection.

For many years he has been traveling and lecturing in this country before colleges and churches, making them vocal with the testimony of the martyrs. His lectures are illustrated by diagrams, maps and paintings, which make them of thrilling interest. They are well calculated to inspire those who hear them with renewed faith and courage—the martyr spirit. We take pleasure in commending this brother to the churches as worthy of confidence and support. He sets no price upon his lectures, but trusts to the generosity of the churches for remuneration.

The annals of the church at Rome are crimsoned with blood. Two million of her saints fell victims of the ten persecutions. They sleep in the catacombs; the history of their faith is recorded in the rock of their tomb. Mark! the blood of martyrs was the seed of the church. Under Nero, A. D. 65, Christianity was but a speck upon bosom of the Pagan empire, and in 304, under Diocletian, it had become a world. The brethren that had met Paul at the Appii Forum, and the household of Aristobulus and Narcissus, and the few saints with them, became nations, peoples and tongues.

As the traveler advances through the Flaminian way from Florence, his eye singles out the desolate tomb of Nero, Paul's assassin. It marks the first approach of eternal Rome. Next is the memorable Milvian bridge, where was fought the decisive battle between Christianity and Roman Paganism—where Constantine, new Moses, lifted up, not the serpent, but the name of Christ upon the banner of empire; and by the will of this first Christian Cæsar, the blood of the martyrs ceased to flow, and the lions to bound in the Roman Amphitheatre. Here, on his way to Germany from Rome, passed an Augustinian friar, Luther. Here, before crossing the deity river of Rome, he paused, like Cæsar on the Rubicon —and on the last battlement of the bridge he scribbled the following:—

Venditur hic Christus, vendituntur dogmata Petri. Anne vendar ego? Perfida Roma vale!

"Here are sold to the highest bidder Christ and Peter's doctrine. Shall I be bartered too? Apostate Rome, farewell!"

From Nero's tomb and beyond the bridge to the Sabine mountains, expands the "Campagna," sarcophagus of so many Pagan generations. In that Campagna which is honeycombed, sleep twelve generations of immortal Romans, millions that were called "saints;" and the larks over the martyr's tombs are ever singing their songs of the resurrection.

But what are the catacombs, and how came they there? It is well known that Rome's foundations stand upon an extinguished volcano, the Velobrum, once Lake Curtius. Rome's seven hills are offsprings of volcanic fires. Italy itself is an unbroken bed of volcanoes. Its chain extends from the snows of Mount Blanc to Etna's flames. The Roman Campagna is an inexhaustible field of volcanic stone, called the tufa, which is soft and easy to work, and of sufficient consistency for construction. In this the Christians pierced sepulchral chambers and passages.

There early Christians left
Their darlings to their rest,
As mothers leave their little ones,
When the sun is in the west.

There, in the day of persecution, the church secreted her saints as a hen hides under her wings her chickens during the storm. The catacombs extend twenty-two miles in diameter, and reach to a depth of one hundred and fifty feet under Rome, and they form an underground city sixty-five miles in circumference.

The word "catacomb" was found on the tomb of a certain Eusebius Anticenus. It has not been discovered elsewhere. They are more universally known as cemeteries—a word that evokes a sense not of death, not of an intermediate state, but of sleep, and of resurrection, as the following epitaph declares:—

Dormit sed mans resurget.

"He sleeps, but shall arise in the morning."

It expresses a view of hope and immortality, the result of the religion of the Gospel. For a star has arisen on the border of the grave. The Gospel lifts up the veil that hangs over eternity. It announces Christ as the first-born of them that sleep.

In my next I will treat of the view of death by the martyrs asleep in that City of Peace.—Herald of Life.

The Lessons of Death.

How many, how constant, how powerful are they! Beneath us, around us, on every side are the intimations of mortality. We are all dying daily, some more slowly, some more rapidly, but all dying.

The candle of life that is burning is but the physical frame dying; and every day snuffs off a new portion of the wick, and leaves less remaining. In a few days more it will be burned to the socket, and the process of dying will be finished.

Every man is dying daily, but every man does not feel it, is not willing to acknowledge it. Happy are they who do feel it, and who, while day after day drops into the past, are learning to die unto sin, are forming the habit of living unto Christ and in Christ, the habit of that life which is hid with Christ in God. Happy are they, who, as every day declineth, are taking so many blessed steps towards God, for whom, while all behind is shadow, all before is glory, and whose faces gather brightness instead of blackness, as they come towards the Great Day.

But this cannot be a happy state of mind, unless we are relying upon Christ, and living in delightful communion with Him daily. If a man feels himself dying daily without Christ, it is the most gloomy and terrible conviction that can be experienced. But how desirable to have this gloom taken away! None but Christ can take this gloom away. Christ can, and will, and does, for all who put their trust in Him.

Christian Purity.

"Keep yourselves unspotted from the world."

What a saddening, and still what a common sight it is to see those who profess to be followers of the meek and lowly Jesus, so apparently absorbed in the pleasures and frivolities of this world, that it is only by their profession that we learn that their treasure is laid up in heaven, and does not consist in the things of this life.

Oh, let us guard against even the appearance of evil, that our robes, having been washed in the blood of the Lamb, may not trail again in the mire, from which we were cleansed.

How sweet to the believer is the assurance that "ye shall not be tempted above what ye are able to bear." And again, "But when ye are tried ye shall receive a crown of life which the Lord hath promised to those that love him."

Then may we, who have looked into the perfect law of liberty, continue therein, being not forgetful hearers but doers of the work, that we may be blessed therein, knowing that a man is justified by works and not by faith, and not by faith only. Let our light so shine before men that they may glorify our Father who is in heaven.

"Be ye also patient, stablish your hearts, for the coming of the Lord draweth nigh."

MARY E. TUNNELL.

From Sister Tunnell.

The good work begun in this place by Brother Amos Sanford, still goes on, and on every side I hear of those who are searching the Scriptures to see if these things be so. Persons who have begun the search merely to find arguments by which to refute the doctrines of the kingdom, and the nature of man, as presented by him, tell me almost daily, sometimes almost with consternation, "Why, he really has got a great deal of Scripture for his position, and I am almost persuaded that his theory is correct after all. But it is so hard to think that I have been believing errors all my life." And the inquiry, "When will he be here again," is frequently heard and many regrets are expressed when the answer is returned, "Perhaps never." I hope if he cannot be with us again, that some other proclaimer of the Gospel of the kingdom may be sent here, to assist those who are earnestly seeking for the truth. Several have expressed a wish to be baptized, and others I think would be, did they not think that their immersion in the orthodox faith was fulfilling the command.

Though our flock is few in number we are not discouraged, but work in hope of the reward that lieth at the end of the race, even a crown of life.

DEAR BRETHREN:—

I notice by a late number of the RESTITUTION, a movement has commenced in Indiana among the brethren, with a view to relieve some of the suffering in this state, and that it has been inaugurated by some of the old time friends with whom I met and worshipped in days gone by. Little did we think at the time of our last meeting, Brother Reed, that in 1875 you would fill the editorial chair of our much loved paper in Plymouth, Ind., or that we would be among the list of those who would need the charitable assistance of those of "like precious faith" away out on the grassy undulations of the almost western border of civilization in Kansas.

That meeting was, I believe, at the Antioch Conference, in 1872, yet, today, I revisit that blessed reunion, and my heart warms anew, and its pulsations are quicker and more thrilling as I think of that, the last conference meeting I have attended; at the same time wondering if I shall ever be so situated as to enjoy communion sweet in that capacity ere the general conference of the first-born, preparatory to the labors of the judgment age. I notice also the names of Brethren Cyrus Taber, E. Helm and Father Messimore, among those generous ones who have instituted this labor of love. My mind pictures them to me as I saw them last. May you, with them, find in this work, it is more blessed to give than to receive, and eventually partake of the comforting assurance appended to the motto with which you have headed the list. We are isolated from our brethren, on account of distance, scarcity of feed, provisions and suitable clothing in which to appear before the public. Our nearest brethren are distant about thirty miles. We have lived for some time on the bounty of our eastern friends, through what is known as "State Aid," but is commonly reported supplies from this source will soon cease,—if they do, intense suffering will be the result unless they are supplied to the needy in some other way.

I observe the "help needed" by the Cowley County brethren is asked to come through the Kansas Central Relief Committe, at Topeka. My understanding of their way of doing business, gives me the idea that they will be no more likely to receive the goods sent them in that way, (unless they pay the usual freight charges), than myself or any other needy individual. It is understood here, (and I am afraid these brethren will find it true in their case), the K. C. R. Com., stop all goods marked as aid, and distribute them to the several County Committees according to the numerically proportionate destitution of each county, regardless of any "address" on or in the packages, boxes or bales, and that everything designed for an individual or individuals associated together, must be shipped and paid for at the regular rates of local freight. If we are in the wrong in this matter, will some brother please set us right?

Everything seems to bid fair for a good crop this year, and if in this part, we can subsist until harvest, we hope all will be well. Our team and cattle have lived on the prairie range all winter. Hay they would not eat, and grain they could not get, yet both look well, and without work, can continue to live during the remainder of winter. Our chief concern now, is to keep from starvation until next harvest arrives. If the fund you are creating is for individuals or individual families, please remember us in its distribution, unless others shall be found more needy or more worthy.

I am in the hope of the one Gospel, your brother. J. K. THOMPSON.

Preaching on the Kingdom.

The kingdom seems to be to our brethren the most important subject the Bible contains, and indeed, it must be an important subject as all the prophets from Enoch down prophecied concerning it, and even Christ spoke concerning his kingdom saying, that "the gates of hell should not prevail against it," and taught his disciples to take it, the same glorious strain and march forth braving even death, to proclaim to a sinful and dying world, that the kingdom would soon come, but He also told them that an entrance into that kingdom could only be effected by certain rites and not by rites alone, but by faith and good works. O, well, one will say, we are all of one mind with regard to that all by reading, be convinced that it is only by complying with the terms that we can obtain salvation; but we would reply that by reading the Bible carefully they would be convinced of their absolute mortality they could see that their only hope of immortality was centered on the second advent of Christ. You may point man to the kingdom and yet if he does not know what is required of him to obtain a possession in that kingdom he will never be brought to Christ. If the Apostles had not taken the law with them a sinful world would never have been benefitted by their teaching, but wherever they preached the kingdom they preached the law, and thus the Pagan world was made to rejoice, and ever since their day the world has rejoiced through the law and the promise only in the hope of the kingdom.

Will a man serve God by our telling him that God is the blessed and only Potentate, the King of kings, and Lord of lords who only hath immortality dwelling in the light which no man can approach unto, whom no man hath seen or can see? 1. Tim. vi. 16. Unless he is taught to give all diligence and add to his "faith virtue, and to virtue knowledge, and to knowledge temperance, and to temperance patience, and to patience godliness, and to godliness brotherly kindness, and to brotherly kindness charity?" 1. Pet. i; 1. 7. We think not, and then while we try to imprint on his mind the beauties of the kingdom let us point him to the Lamb of God which taketh away the sins of the world, let us tell him of the great love which God has for the world; that he so loved the world that he sent his only begotten Son that whosoever believed on him might not perish but have everlasting life. Let us awaken to him his need of a Savior by showing to him his utter dependence on God, his unworthiness and nothingness in His holy presence, and wherever we preach the kingdom let us preach the way to obtain it; this will be well pleasing in His sight.

A. E. FETLACK.

The Coming One.

We are not now, neither were we ever, in sympathy with those who would set the day and hour of our Lord's appearing. But for about thirty years we have unwaveringly believed that in the most emphatic sense "the end of all things is at hand."

This belief has not all been founded on the opinions of men, but by much prayerful searching of the Scriptures, comparing Scripture with Scripture. Believing that all Scripture is given by inspiration, and is profitable for doctrine, reproof, correction in righteousness, and that the same Spirit that indicted the holy Scripture is given to open its sacred meaning to the humble believer.

To expect to know the day or hour, or even the year, of the coming of Jesus in the clouds of heaven, we have never thought to be within the province of other than the great Eternal. But that the humble Bible student may, by a careful reliance on the teachings of the Word, and observance of the signs of the times, know when the coming of the Lord draweth nigh, and is even at the very doors, is a truth too palpable to require comment. See Matt. xxix. 33.

Dear reader, are you in search after truth in regard to the second Advent of our Lord? That he will come again you know, because there is not a more explicit, uncontrovertable declaration within the lids of the Bible than this.

Why should not christians of the present day be like christians of nearly two thousand years since? So greatly did the christians of Thessalonica long for the speedy coming of their Lord, that instead of putting it off "thousands on thousands of ages hence" (as did a teacher in Israel with whom we were conversing), that their almost impatient desires inclined them to think it must be immediate. Paul corrects their mistake, telling them that day shall not come until certain things (of which we shall hereafter speak,) occur. James also exhorts his suffering brethren to patience, not by telling them that the coming of their Lord was to be protracted "thousand on thousands of ages," but by the most welcome truth, "For the coming of the Lord draweth nigh."

If the joyous anticipations of the return of the Son of man should so fill the mind's vision of the early Church about two thousand years ago, how should the believers of the present day be occupied with the subject. Christians of the present day have the Old and New Testament Scriptures. The Book of books is in the hand of every believer. Not only does it testify of Christ as a Redeemer from sin, but of Christ as a coming One. Oh, yes! with what certainty do the Scriptures tell of Jesus coming again not as an offering for sin! That has been done. How emphatically does Paul speak of Him who was "once offered to bear the sins of many;" and then adds, "Unto them that look for him shall he appear the second time, without sin unto salvation." And Titus also pointing the eye of the brethren upward, says, "Looking for that blessed hope, the glorious appearing of the great God and our Savior Jesus Christ."—Guide to Holiness.

What faith in Christ is able to do.

Comparatively speaking, how few there are in proportion to the vast multitude which throng this world, who rarely give this all-important subject one solemn thought, or one honest moment's reflection. Faith, which our loving Father brings so prominently before the sinner in his word, is seldom thought of, and too often ignorantly despised and set at nought by man. How sad such diversities; how it exposes the insignificance of the creature, in contrast with the sublimity of the Creator. Let us turn to the word of God, which has proved to all who seek earnestly for the deep and inexhaustable treasures contained therein, through the teaching of the Holy Spirit, that spiritual light, which is a lamp unto our feet, and a light unto our path. Ps. 119: 105. The literal meaning of faith, in God's conception of the term, is mentioned in the 11 chap. of Heb., v. 1: and there we find unfolded to our view, from the beginning to the end of the chapter, a catalogue of the patriarchs of old, who triumphed through faith; and experienced a foretaste of that heavenly communion with Christ, "whom having not seen, we love; in whom, though now we see him not, yet believing, ye rejoice with joy unspeakable and full of glory." 1 Pet. 1:8.

Faith is something more than taking God at his word; it is an act of the understanding, whereby we grasp the precious promises of God, and make them ours by appropriation.

Faith is the fountain-head of our spiritual existence; for "the life which I now live in the flesh, I live by the faith of the Son of God." Gal. 2: 20. Faith is the main anchor of the soul, which anchor will alone hold the afflicted and tempest-tossed soul, stable and secure, while the storms of life are raging, while the secret trials assail, and when the dark and gloomy hour of death in all its stern reality approaches. The word of the living God clearly testifies what faith can do for those, who, with child-like simplicity, put implicit confidence and earnest reliance and fidelity in his inspired word. See Scripture proofs. 1. It justifies the soul. Rom. 5: 1. 2. Purifies the heart. Acts 15:9. 3. Works by love. Gal. 5: 6. 4. Overcomes the world. 1 John 5:4. 5. Makes us stand. 2 Cor. 1:24. Now our feelings never could realize such results; because by nature we are too corrupt. Isa. i. 6. But the living faith emanates from God its only true source.

Let our aim be then, to search diligently, to seek repeatedly, and to pray unceasingly for this priceless pearl, this inestimable gift of divine grace, which secured for us a heaven on earth, peace as a river, joy unspeakable, and in the world to come an eternity of everlasting happiness. Observe, faith in Christ is absolutely necessary to salvation. For without faith it is impossible to please God. Heb. xi. 6. It is the connecting link between God and the sinner; it is the medium or channel by which we approach God. Rom. v. 2. Again we find in the sacred volume, what we may boldly claim through simple faith in the blood of Christ, and the results of that faith.

1. WHAT IT GIVES US. Redemption. Col. i. 13. Forgiveness. Eph. i. 7. Reconciliation. ii Cor. v. 18. Justification. Rom. v. 7. Sanctification. Heb. xiii. 12.

2. WHAT IT LEADS TO. Filled with the knowledge of his will. Col. i. 9. Grounded and settled in the faith. Col. i. 23. Established in the faith. Col. ii. 7. Complete in Christ. Col. ii. 10. Therefore, let the soldier of Christ go boldly forward, clothed in the whole armor of God, above all taking the shield of faith, and thus equipped he goes forth, not in his own strength, but in the strength of that faith, which overcomes the world; makes us more than conquerors, and nerves the christian to press "toward the mark, for the prize." Phil. iii. 13, even to the throne of Christ (Rev. iii. 21), and the crown of glory. Rev. ii. 10.—Ed.

The Conflict Between Bismarck and the Jesuits.

The Pope shows no symptoms of abating his hostility to the German government. He has just declared his intention to excommunicate all the Roman Catholic priests who accept appointments to parishes from the Imperial government, as provided by Bismarck's new Ecclesiastical Laws. The Jesuits are plotting to unite France, and Russia and Spain in a war against Prussia, and are hoping to excite the Roman Catholics, who constitute one-third of the forty million Germans, to rise in revolt against Bismarck's Protestant government.

Their unscrupulous effort to compass Bismarck's overthrow, if possible, are strikingly portrayed by the following correspondent of a London newspaper:—

"Not only has Prince Bismarck's yearning for repose, after twenty stormy years of political activity, prompted him to contemplate retirement into private life, but other and very powerful influences have been brought to bear upon him with the same object. His wife and daughter, who are fondly attached to him, have suffered a constant agony of terror, lest his life should again be attempted, ever since he was wounded by Kullman at Kissengen. They incessantly urge him to give up his perilous greatness, quit Berlin, and live quietly with them in the country, the pleasures of which he keenly enjoys. Indeed, these exalted ladies lead but a melancholy life of it here, and profit but little by the wealth, glory and station achieved by their husband and father. The Prince goes not at all into society; the only parties given at his town residence are parliamentary soirees, the invites to which are strangers to his family, and not at all amusing from a feminine point of view.

"The medical attendent, too, who has closely studied his constitution, has repeatedly warned him that the chronic state of excitement in which his nervous system has been kept for the last six months is materially diminishing his vital power, and, to use a conventional expression, shortening his life. It is, moreover, unquestionably the fact that his nerve is taken to an alarming extent. Let us not forget that he receives hundreds of threatening letters every week, many of which contain menaces of the most revolting description; that the police authorities have impressed upon him the urgent necessity of observing all sorts of irksome precautions, at home and abroad, besides exercising a surveillance upon his person which must be all but intolerable to a man of his naturally intrepid and reckless character.

"Three detectives watch his house day and night, aided by the street police, and when he goes outside his door (which is a rare occurrence), follow him, and 'keep their eye upon him.' He has been advised not to drive out in an open carriage, as was his wont for many years past, so he only uses a close carriage and sits well back in it. He has been implored not to ride in the Thiergarten or streets, so he takes equestrian exercise daily for an hour or so in the huge garden of the Ministerium des Auessern.

"All this may be very necessary, in common prudence, considering the danger his life is exposed to at the hands of the furious fanatics and frantic zealots; but it is horribly annoying, vexatious, and depressing. Such conditions of existence must in time undermine the stoutest courage and wear out the boldest temper. It is deplorable that a man who, two years ago, could not show himself without becoming the object of popular ovation, and who is still absolutely worshiped—so far as the German nature is capable of worship—by millions of his fellow-countrymen, should have been worried and badgered until he dare scarcely cross his threshold, lest the assassin's knife or bullet should be aimed at his heart.

"When I saw Bismarck ride in the Konigsplatz, at the inauguration of the Victory Column, in commemoration of the German conquest of France, and witnessed his enthusiastic reception by an untold multitude; had any one told me that, within sixteen months from that day, Bismarck would not venture to walk down the Linden, or canter round the Thiergarten, for fear of being murdered, I am afraid I should have been rude enough to laugh in the face of the person making so apparently ridiculous a statement. But that person would have been perfectly correct in his prognostications. Such are the consequences of the May Laws and Ecclesiastical Penal Statutes.

When Prince Bismarck last year asseverated that he was the worst-hated man in Europe, he knew very well what he was saying; but the most cruel part of the cruel truth he then gave utterence to is the painful fact that he is more bitterly and dangerously hated by Germans, his own compatriots, than he is by Frenchmen, his country's sworn enemies. Eighty per cent. at least of the villainous communications anonymously sent to him are written by German hands. It is probable that many of the enraged Ultramontanists entertain the hope of driving him from power by sheer intimidation. The clerical party is always well informed with respect to what goes on in its enemies' camps; and it is quite aware that a man who has been twice shot at, and had two such terribly narrow escapes of death by assassination as has Prince Bismarck, is, in all human probability, peculiarly susceptible to the effects producible upon the nerves by anonymous threats.

"Nothing more lowering to the spirits can be conceived than the sort of life led in Berlin by this greatest of Germans, and by those nearest and dearest to him. Of what avail all his greatness and his wealth to him, so long as he is constrained to fear that every mouthful he eats or drinks may contain some grain or drop of deadly poison; that every stranger he meets may be seeking his life; that thousands of men, Germans like himself, wish him dead, and are even compassing his death? Which of us would accept princely rank, supreme power, and a million of money, on such terms? Will the most earnest German patriot have any right to reproach him, if he decide upon quitting a career over-weighted with such conditions?"—Signs of Our Times.

The Kingdom Promised to the Saints.

"Fear not, little flock; it is your Father's good pleasure to give you the kingdom."—Luke xii. 32.

The theme of the Bible is the Gospel of the kingdom. The kingdom is the all-controlling motive of the gospel. Without the kingdom there can be no gospel of it; although without the gospel the kingdom might exist. The gospel is good news which is to affect the condition of the kingdom. The necessities of the kingdom measure the provisions of the gospel. To apply the promise in our text to any other kingdom than to the one which was really intended to be given to the saints, would be a total perversion of the promise. Therefore it is of first importance to understand what kingdom is referred to in our text. It is the first thing to be sought for, it is to be the first in our prayers, and it is the final thing promised to the saints. We ask them, with great earnestness,

WHAT KINGDOM IS IT?

It is a kingdom which God has promised to them that love him. It exists separate from the saints, and of which they form no part until it is given to them. The only relation they sustain to it now is that of being heirs to it. "Hearken my beloved brethren, hath not God chosen the poor of this world, rich in faith, and heirs of the kingdom which he has promised to them that love him." James ii. 5.

It is the kingdom that is promised to Christ. "And I appoint unto you a kingdom, as my Father hath appointed unto me," Luke xxii. 29. "To him that overcometh will I grant to sit with me in my throne, even as I also overcame, and am set down with my Father in his throne." Rev. iii. 21. What kingdom will be given to Christ? "When the Son of man shall come in his glory, and all the holy angels with him, then shall he sit upon the throne of his glory, and all nations shall be gathered before him." Matt. xxv. 31. It is the kingdom where all nations dwell. Again, "And there was given him dominion, and glory, and a kingdom, that all people, nations, and languages should serve him." Dan. vii. 14. It is the same kingdom, where all nations dwell. Again, "He shall have dominion from sea to sea, and from the river to the ends of the earth." Psa. lxxii. 8. Once more, "And the Lord shall be King over all the earth." Zech. xiv. 9. Then, the kingdom that will be given to Christ will be the kingdom over all the earth, where all nations dwell. The saints being joint heirs with Christ will receive the same kingdom. When Christ was returned having received the kingdom, He called the saints and gave to one authority over ten cities, and to another he said be thou over five cities. He also appointed to the twelve apostles to sit upon twelve thrones, and to judge the twelve tribes of Israel. "If the saints suffer with him, they will also reign with him." They will sit down with Him in his throne, and have power over the nations. Those who have been redeemed to God by the blood of Christ out of every kindred, and tongue, and people, and nations, will be make kings and priests unto God, and they will reign on the earth. They will reign over the same earth that Christ will reign over. "And the kingdom and dominion, and the greatness of the kingdom under the whole heaven shall be given to the people of the saints of the Most High." Thus it is that the same kingdom that will be given to Christ will also be given to the saints. They will occupy the same throne, reign over the same all nations, and over all the earth.

THE SAVIOR'S DESCRIPTION OF THE KINGDOM.

When the Lord returns from heaven, having received the kingdom, He will stop in the region of the clouds, and raise the saints from the dead, and change the righteous living, and they together will be caught up in the clouds to meet him in the air. And after a little while the Lord will come from the place where the saints met him to the earth, and all the saints with Him and his feet will stand upon the mount of Olives, and then He will take possession of the kingdom that He received from his Father, and the saints will sit down with Him in his throne, and with Him have power over the nations, to judge them, and reward them. And the Lord will say unto the righteous of the nations, "Come ye blessed of my Father, inherit the kingdom." What kingdom? The kingdom that was set up at the day of Pentecost? No, there is nothing said about that that kingdom. Is it the kingdom that has been established in the hearts of God's people? There is no mention made of it. Is it the kingdom which is the church? No, the Savior did not so understand it. Is it the kingdom which is in heaven? No, for nothing is said about that kingdom. Well, if it is none of these kingdoms, about which there has been so much said in the church, what kingdom is it that the righteous will inherit? The Savior said, "Come, ye blessed of my Father, inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world." This is the kingdom that Christ went to heaven to receive for himself, and this is the kingdom which God has promised to them that love Him. This kingdom has always been, since the creation, and always will be the kingdom which was prepared when the world was made. In the beginning God prepared the kingdom. He made the earth to be its territory forever. He made an earthly man to be the head of a race of earthly people, to be its subjects forever. He gave him a law that was to have jurisdiction over him forever. This preparation for the kingdom He said was very good. Subsequent to that both died and rose, and revived, (lived again) that he might be Lord both of the dead and living."

But allow the writer's theory true, then how is God to judge the world in righteousness by Jesus Christ? Acts xvii. 31; Rom. ii. 16; 2 Tim. iv. 1; John v. 22, 27. If Christ never died in their behalf, if He be not "a ransom for all, to be testified in due time," (1 Tim. ii. 6,) by what means, in what name, and on what ground does He "now command all men everywhere to repent," and how are men everywhere to pray, lifting up holy hands without wrath and doubting. If they have no "propitiation for their sins," how can they "be reconciled?" If no "blood has been shed for them," how can they "have remission of sins?" If they have no "acceptable sacrifice," how can they "come to God?" If they have no "mediator," how can they "make covenant with God?" If there be no "new and living way" for them, how can they have confidence concerning the entrance to the holiest, and how shall they "draw near to God with true hearts in full assurance of faith, having their hearts sprinkled from an evil conscience," and no "blood of sprinkling for them." If no salvation has been provided for them, how can they be in fault if not saved? and if Christ has done nothing for them, on what principle of righteousness can He become their true judge, and why should they come into condemnation for not believing into Him who was never given for them? In short, what business would He have with such a class of men in any way? Surely they then might say with justice and propriety, "Thou art an austere man; thou takest up that thou layest not down, and reapest that thou didst not sow."

Our good Brother, "it seems to me," with many others, has overlooked one very important consideration, given in Rom. v. 10. "If, being enemies, we were reconciled to God through the death of his Son (stated in verses 8, 9,) by how much more, having become reconciled, shall we be saved by his life." 2 Cor. v. 19, "God was in Christ, reconciling the world unto himself, not imputing their trespasses unto them."

The whole human race unquestionably would have perished long ago in Adam's one transgression, had not God foreordained that Christ's one obedience should counterwork that disobedience. Consequently we read in Rom. v. 12, "As through one man sin entered into the world, (in whom all sinned,) and through sin, death; so also death passed upon all men, (verse 18,) Therefore, indeed, as through one offence, sentence came on all men to condemnation; so also, through one righteous act, sentence came on all men to justification of life, (verse 19,) for as through the disobedience of one man, the many were constituted sinners, so even through the obedience of the one (man, Christ Jesus,) the many (the same many) will be constituted righteous."—Diaglott.

There! that is what may be called emphatically, square work! That is simple justice, that is God's righteousness. Now, having been put squarely on you feet again. Stand up! Stand for your own individual self, and see well to it that you stand surely, and take heed lest you fall! Having an acceptable offering, Jesus Christ, offered once for all, having a loving Jesus, who is officiating as mediator between God and you, who having been perfected, has become the author of salvation to all that obey Him, and who is able to save all that come unto God by Him, and having these glad tidings preached unto you, in which you have the promise of remission of sins in his name, and eternal life with the kingdom for an inheritance, with a superabundant and eternal weight of glory, heed the message, and repent you, of all your personal sins, believe and obey the gospel. "Return unto the Lord and he will have mercy upon you, and unto our God and he will abundantly pardon." "Look unto me, and be ye saved, all the ends of the earth." "Incline your ear, and come unto me; hear, and your soul shall live; and I will make an everlasting covenant with you, . . for I am God and there is none else." Then, after that, you will have an advocate with the Father, Jesus Christ the righteous one, who, if you be overcome in temptation and sin, will make intercession for you, through the eternal spirit, and your sin will be remembered no more against you. We love Him because He first loved us, and while we were yet sinners He died for us. "And he died for all, that they which live, should not henceforth live unto themselves, but unto him who died for them and rose again." 2 Cor. v. 15. The declarations of the Apostle in Rom. v. 12; xviii. 19, are precisely the same, in substance, as those in 1 Cor. xv. 21, 22, i. e., By Adam's disobedience came death, by Christ's obedience came the resurrection of the dead, for as in Adam's disobedience all die, even so in Christ's obedience shall all be made alive. Consider well the last half of Phil. iii, 21, and "find wisdom."

Curious.

What will not mens theories carry them into? In the RESTITUTION of March 10, the question is raised, "For whom did Jesus die?" and in answer to his own question, the queriet gravely informs us that "His blood was shed for the ecclesia, or body of Christ," but "not for all the offsprings of Adam," except by the limitation of the "all men," to the members of "Christ's body." But Paul says in Rom. v. 6, "Christ died for the ungodly." In 1 Cor. xv. 3, "Christ died for our sins." In 1 John ii. 2, "He is the propitiation for our sins, and not for ours only, but ALSO for the sins of the whole world." In 2 Cor. v. 14, "If one died for all, then were all dead." In 1 John v. 19, "We know . . . . . that the whole world lieth in wickedness," under the evil one. iii. 8, "For this purpose the Son of God was manifested, that he might destroy the works of the devil." iv. 14, "And we have seen do testify that the Father sent the Son to be the Savior of the world." John iii. 16, "For God so loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life." Verse 18, "God sent not his Son into the world to condemn the world, but that the world through him might be saved." In Rom. xiv. 9, "For to this end Christ both died and rose and revived, that he might be Lord both of the dead and living." 1 Cor. xv. 3, "Christ died for our sins according to the scriptures." 2 Cor. v. 15, "And that he died for all, that they which live should not henceforth live unto themselves, but unto him which died for them and rose again." 1 Thess. iv. 14, "For if we believe that Jesus died and rose again, even so them also which sleep in Jesus will God bring with him." Rev. i. 18, "I am he that liveth, and was dead; and behold I am alive forevermore, Amen." Now, reader, what will you do with these scriptures? Will you believe them, or will you believe the theories of men? Will you believe that Christ died for all men, or will you believe that he died for only a few? Will you believe that he died for the world, or will you believe that he died for only the church? Will you believe that he died for the ungodly, or will you believe that he died for only the godly? Will you believe that he died for sinners, or will you believe that he died for only saints? Will you believe that he died for enemies, or will you believe that he died for only friends? Will you believe that he died for the whole world, or will you believe that he died for only a part of the world? Will you believe that he died for all that were dead in sins, or will you believe that he died for only a few that were dead in sins? Will you believe that he died for all that were dead, or will you believe that he died for only a few that were dead? Will you believe that he died for all that were dead in sins, or will you believe that he died for only a few that were dead in sins? Will you believe that he died for all that were dead, or will you believe that he died for only a few that were dead? Will you believe that he died for all that were dead in sins, or will you believe that he died for only a few that were dead in sins?

Spiritualising.

The proper use of language is the communication to others of what we feel, think, or purpose; the words we speak are the symbols of what we think or feel; and, in order that the means may accomplish the end contemplated, it is indispensably necessary that there be a common understanding between speaker and hearer, or writer and reader, as the case may be, regarding the import of the terms employed.

In conversation any defect in this matter can be remedied by explanation, but written language, to convey the idea of the writer correctly, must be used and understood in a sense that is settled by usage and common consent; otherwise it would be impossible to have the conviction that we understood what the writer meant to express. These observations, of course, are as true of the language of Holy Scripture as that of any other writings; yet it is simply by acting otherwise that there are so many conflicting meanings put upon words spoken by the messengers of God to men.

If the Bible is a revelation of the mind and purposes of God, we surely ought to understand its terms in the same sense we would understand the same terms in any other book; yet strange to tell, men, apparently by common consent, treat the words of Scripture as if they were those of an enigma, rather than those of a revelation; and modes of interpretation the most capricious, empirical, and fanciful, have been applied to the blessed book; hence those whom it was meant to enlighten and save have been perplexed, bewildered, and led astray.

There are only two senses in which ordinary language is understood, namely, the literal and the figurative; but interpreters of the Bible affirm that its language is sometimes used in a third sense, which they call "the spiritual,"—a sense never sought for in the language of any other book. And what is meant by the spiritual sense? Not the figurative, which is as apparent, where it is used, as the literal; for where language is used figuratively the figure is either expressed or implied, and every term is [illegible] signification; because [illegible] of speech does not consist in the terms of a sentence, but in their application to subjects to which they do not properly belong. . . .

Were the Lord to return to our world just now, how truly would he find his words verified: "When the Son of man cometh, shall he find faith on the earth?" Faith in the hopes of the Gospel is rare indeed, and even where it exists is sadly mixed with fancy. Brethren in Christ, beware! Even among believers of the Gospel of the kingdom of God the spiritualising process finds too much favor. "Hold fast that form of sound words," given for your instruction, in the Bible. Let each of us be able to say, in the face of all men, "There is no article of my faith and hope which I cannot express correctly in the unaltered words of Scripture; and, whatever others do, I am determined, God helping me, to cling firmly thereto."—W. LAING, in Rainbow.

Gleanings.

DEAR BRETHREN:—

Since my last report through the RESTITUTION, I have held meetings in Fountain, Warren, Hancock and Clinton counties with good results. My last meeting in Clinton county, resulted in the obedience of three to the truth; they were immersed into the name of Jesus Christ. The brethren and sisters encouraged to go on their way rejoicing. The church has sustained quite a loss in the death of Brother John Frier, but they sorrow not as others who have no hope. He was one of the faithful ones, attended all the meetings of the brethren, and was there to fill his place. But he rests now from his labors.

Dear brethren, I for one would be glad to see more from our brethren of like precious faith, in our paper, and less from the Rev. D. D.s. I would like to see reports from our brethren every week, let us all be up and doing the time is short.

Yours for the truth.
J. S. HATCH.

We are surrounded with all sorts of isms, spiritualists, seventh-day Sabbath Adventists, atheists and almost all kinds of Protestants. The seventh-day keepers have lately come among us, but we will contend for the faith once delivered to the saints. We feel sure we have the true knowledge, and that the exceeding great and precious promises belong to us.

EDITORIAL DEPARTMENT

—Dr. Chas. L. Ives, late professor in Yale College, and author of the "Bible Doctrine of the Soul," has become connected as a special contributor, with the "Bible Banner." The Dr. is fully alive to the great question of life only through Christ.

—Dr. Holland, an Episcopal minister in Missouri, has been preaching against the doctrine of endless torment. His bishop has mildly rebuked him, and says that the subject seems "purposely to have been left in a certain degree of obscurity."

The idea of eternal torment is rapidly fading from the professed church of Christ. Men can never reconcile the character of God, as a Father, with the doctrine of endless pain for a vast majority of mankind.

Dr. Dekoven, who was recently elected Bishop of Illinois, has not been confirmed, a majority of the states having voted against him. It is stated that he is one of the most ultra high church advocates in this country, and leans too much toward the Catholic church. It is stated that he retains in his public worship many of the Catholic ceremonies. Whether he has too many lighted tapers, wears robes too long, or paints his eggs for Easter too high-colored, it is not stated. High church or low church would sound strangely in Paul's day.

Pitch In!

Yes, pitch in. That's it. Pitch in. Pitch in to what? Why everything and every body. If a man writes something that you do not believe, pitch in. If he fall by the wayside, pitch in. Let every body pitch in. There is material enough out of which to save the few, and its all just as well—so pitch in. If an editor does not publish your article just as you have written it, pitch into him. Show him up. He has become domineering and popish.

There, you will say, that is not right. We should not pitch in. We should be kind, courteous and of a good spirit. Exactly, but then, what [illegible] pitch [illegible]? There [illegible] have room, and attention —or a fuss!

If some men see D. D. to a man's name that is enough to damn all he ever said or can say. Poor man. How frail is humanity. But I'll stop right here, lest some one may say, "He's pitching into me! I don't mean you, but those who do pitch in without thinking that other folks have rights as well as yourself.

The Spared Remnant.

"And it shall come to pass in that day that the Lord shall set his hand again the second time to recover the remnant of his people which shall be left."—Isa. xi. 11.

The history of God's people is a history of remnants. At the time of the flood the mass were destroyed, but a remnant was saved. When the cities of the plain were overthrown by fire and flame, a remnant was spared from destruction. Only a remnant of the Israel in Egyptian bondage entered Canaan. The same was true of the Babylonish captivity.

In connection with the closing scenes of the times of the Gentiles, there are two remnants which God has promised to spare from destruction. The one is the remnant of the church, and the other the remnant of Israel. In Rev. xii. the former is plainly pointed out. "And the dragon was wroth with the woman, and went to make war with the remnant of her seed, which keep the commandments of God, and have the testimony of Jesus." The commandments of God kept by the remnant are those given through his Son Jesus Messiah. "This is my beloved Son in whom I am well pleased, hear ye him." "The the testimony of Jesus is the spirit of prophecy." God's children in the closing years of the age that now is will be characterized by obedience to the Divine will, and possess the testimony of prophecy, which will bring out the full meaning of that saying of Jesus, "When ye see all these things come to pass, know ye that the kingdom of God is nigh at hand." This remnant will be a peculiar people, zealous of good works, and believing all things which are written in the law and in the prophets." In other parts of the Word they are styled the "elect" or called-out ones, whose redemption is rapidly approaching in connection with the great crisis, known among the wise of this world as the "Eastern question." The salvation of this remnant has no reference to the remnant of Israel, which is everywhere in prophecy kept distinct from the church or body of Christ. The text at the head of this article, is specific in its reference to the left of Israel at the time when the Ensign of the nations commences his reign. Micah refers to this same remnant in chapter ii. "I will surely assemble, O Jacob, all of thee; I will surely gather the remnant of Israel; I will put them together as the sheep of Bozrah, as a flock in the midst of their fold, ... and their king shall pass before them, and the Lord on the head of them." Verse 12. This gathered remnant will prove a great blessing to the nations of the future age, under the reign of David's royal Son. Says Micah: "And the remnant of Jacob shall be in the midst of many people as a dew from the Lord, as the showers upon the grass, that tarrieth not for man, nor waiteth for the sons of men." Micah v. 7. But of those nations, who will not yield obedience to the King of Zion, and worship the Lord of hosts, it is stated that this remnant shall become as the young lion among the sheep, "which teareth in pieces and none can deliver." See Mic h v. 7–15.

Loyalty to the King of Israel will be a necessity in those days, when Jehovah takes to himself his great power and reigns. Israel will have attained the righteousness which is of faith, and will trust the Lord their God. Says Zephaniah: "The remnant of Israel shall not do iniquity, nor speak lies; neither shall a deceitful tongue be found in their mouth; for they shall feed and lie down, and none shall make them afraid." Zeph. iii. 13–20.

This will be the result of Messiah's coming to Zion, at which time he will turn away ungodliness from Jacob, and save Israel in the day of his glory. Let us be watchful of those events which foreshadow the approaching crisis, among the nations of the Roman earth. Keeping in view this, the work of saving the remnant of the church, is the first and special work of our Lord at his coming, we should be ever mindful of our duties, and be ready for the day of his return, "For in such an hour as ye think not, the Son of man cometh!" "Watch ye, therefore for ye know not when the time is."

Design of the Gospel.

"That I might by all means save some."—Paul.

"The design of the Gospel of the grace of God" is the salvation of our fellow men. It has its principles and its final results. Freedom from condemnation, or the remission of sins, is conditioned on our faith, repentance and obedience. In our reconciled, pardoned, and accepted state, we become the acknowledged children of God, and the prospective heirs of his heavenly kingdom. This is a present salvation. Subsequently to our embracing christianity we are subjected to trial and discipline, that, like the great Captain of our salvation, we may be "made perfect through sufferings,"—in order to share in his future glory;—for "if we suffer with him we shall also reign with him." A full, complete, and everlasting salvation, as a grand result and fruition of the Gospel hope, consists in attaining eternal life through the resurrection from the dead, as the gift of God through Jesus Christ our Lord, and a share with Him, as joint heirs, in all the honors, and glories of God's everlasting kingdom when it shall be established under the whole heaven, and the whole earth be filled with the glory of God and all flesh see it together. The commission was given that the Gospel might be preached in all the world, that men might hear, believe, obey, and be saved. The apostles realized the importance and magnitude of their office. The eternal interests of all were at stake. All were sinners and under sentence of death. They were the accredited bearers of a message of peace, pardon, life, and eternal deliverance from all the effects and consequences of sin to a lost world. Their position was one of awful responsibility. "Woe is me if I preach not the Gospel" was the deep-seated impression pervading their hearts, and actuating their whole lives. Now how did these inspired preachers demean themselves? With what spirit, and in what manner did they present the words of life to perishing multitudes as they addressed them on the all-important themes of life and death? Their brethren, according to the flesh, had rejected Christ,—despised all his teachings,—and finally procured his death;—and when the apostles came, and demonstrated his claims to the Messiahship from the very circumstances of his life and death, as fulfillments of the sure word of prophecy, and met the same violent opposition, what disposition of mind did these holy men manifest toward their national kinsmen, and what style of language did they employ in their continued efforts to bring them to a knowledge of the truth? In addition to the most willful rejection of evidence brought to prove the divine character and mission of Jesus Christ, the great leading sects had adopted the most erroneous views in regard to human destiny and future life, and the apostles might have employed the shafts of ridicule, and burlesqued their unfounded opinions and beliefs; they might have used harsh epithets, and called them opprobrious names, but they did no such thing. Notwithstanding their cruel opposition; notwithstanding their most inexcusable rejection of all the testimony, these messengers of salvation [illegible] in proof of the Gospel themes, the language of the apostles was conciliatory and argumentative. The intense desire for the salvation of their Jewish brethren was never supplanted by that bitter feeling of alienation and hatred that would lead the apostles to the manifestation of any spirit, or the employment of any language but that of love and good will. Though the faith of the opposition was most unscriptural, and the course of conduct the most indefensible and outrageous, "men and brethren" was the kind greeting with which Christ's apostles introduced their discourses to this class of hearers. They were ever ready to compromise things indifferent and of small moment. To the Jew, the Apostle Paul says, "I became as a Jew that I might gain the Jews; to them that are under the law, as under the law, that I might gain them that are under the law. To them that are without law, as without law, (being not without law to God, but under the law to Christ,) that I might gain them that are without law. To the weak became I as weak, that I might gain the weak; I am made all things to all men, that I might by all means save some." Hence Paul, in condescension to Jewish prejudices, would join in the rites and ceremonies of the temple worship, even where a sacrificial offering must be made to gain the Jews, although resulting in the most dreadful consequences to himself. Acts xxi. 17, to xxvii. 31.

Even while a prisoner at Rome, the result of Jewish hatred, he [illegible] endeavors to persuade his countrymen of the truth of the christian religion, and only turns from the unbelieving with a sorrowful quotation from the prophet to address himself to the Gentile world.

In his addresses to the Gentiles he is as conciliatory as the nature of the case will admit. An inscription upon an altar, and a quotation from a heathen poet, are made to serve his turn. By argument alone, he shows the impropriety of idolotry and the reasonableness of the worship of the great Creator, God. Acts xvii. 16–29. The town clerk even pleaded in their defense, that the apostles and early ministers were not blasphemers of the cherished idol "Diana of the Ephesians," Acts xix. 37. Now the apostles contended earnestly for the faith, and pleaded zealously for the hope of the gospel; but they never shocked the prejudices, or injured the feelings of their mistaken auditors, by any unwarranted, and injurious statement of the many errors they held. These heaven-inspired men delivered the solemn utterances of revealed truth, in love, though in spirit and in power, and there rested the important matter.

In our day there are many errors to confront. Truth seems to be divided into fragments, and parceled out among the professed followers of Christ, and, these portions of truth are often so blended with mistaken ideas about other portions of [illegible] as to lose all their native and inherent beauty. And some of the most important doctrines of the Holy Oracles are ignored altogether. We, though making the claim, are very far from being all brethren of one faith in every particular. Indeed, in some very important particulars, in relation to the future destiny of the race, there is a very marked difference of opinion. Now it is very desirable for all to come into "the unity of the faith." To bring this desirable state of things about, so far as it is possible, we must "hold forth the word of life." When we conclusively show from the scriptures that incorruptibility and immorrality are attributes belonging to a redeemed, heavenly, family, and are bestowed only through Jesus Christ upon those who form a vital union with him, we set aside at once all that is said or written upon natural immorality.

If eternal life be the gift of God, through his Son, to believers only, it is a supernatural endowment, and, consequently, not an inherent principle of the natural organization. It is for us to demonstrate this, and other kindred doctrines, by fair, manly, dignified, scriptural, argument. Blustering ridicule, contemptuous sneering, or stinging invective, will never accomplish anything but to disgust the minds of those whose are thus addressed.

There is no eternal life out of Jesus Christ, and men are dying—no eternal inheritance promised to any but to the joint heirs with God's dear Son in the everlasting kingdom, and millions are failing to secure the shadow of a title to it—the Lord is soon coming, and this accepted time and day of salvation will close forever—and what shall we do? Our position is one of fearful accountibility. We should by all means try to save some.

"He that winneth souls is wise;" "And they that be wise, shall shine as the brightness of the firmament, and they that turn many to righteousness as the stars forever and ever." Let ours be a work of faith—a labor of love—in all the patience of hope—let us by all means endeavor to save some.

The Christian's Hope.

Synopsis of the Sermon preached on the funeral occasion of Brother Thos. McDonald, March 28, 1875, at Plymouth, Ind.

BY THE EDITOR.

"For ye are dead, and your life is hid with Christ in God. When Christ who is our life shall appear, then shall ye also appear with him in glory." Col. iii. 3, 4.

The Scriptures present two lives. The life that now is, and that which is to come. The present life is temporal, the future eternal. In this life we have sorrow, separations and death, in that which is to come there shall be no sorrow, pain, nor death, for the former things are passed away. Men can destroy this life, disease can waste it, but the life which is in Christ is beyond the reach of human power, and cannot be destroyed. It is now the hidden life. Christ is now hidden in the invisible world with God, and our life is in Him. Our Lord has passed into the heavens, where He is the great High Priest, and who can be touched with the feelings of our infirmities. During his sojourn in the Invisible, his people are in the midst of sorrow, and death; it is the time of waiting, of cross-bearing, and of hope. During this time of waiting we have only the Adamic life, which is temporal, the time of bestowing the new life having not yet arrived. In[illegible] eternal life comes not until Christ, who is OUR LIFE APPEARS. Then this mortal is to put on immortality, and this corruptible incorruption. Then will come true the saying of the prophet: "O death! I will be thy plagues, O grave I will be thy destruction."

The appearing of our Lord and the resurrection of the holy dead, were events longed for by the Apostles and the early church. Aside from these they had no hope and expected no crown. The whole drift of Revelation tends to confirm this view. Every event deemed sacred to the Christian heart is associated with our Lord's coming again. Who does not desire a crown of glory? This is to be given when Jesus comes. Says the apostle: "There is laid up for me a crown of righteousness, which the Lord the righteous judge shall give me at that day, and not to me only, but unto all of them also that love his appearing." "And when the Chief Shepherd shall appear, ye shall receive a crown of glory that fadeth not away." 2 Tim. iv. 8; 1 Peter v. 4.

Again: The Christian hopes for eternal life. Says Jesus: "He that believeth on me I will give everlasting life, and raise him up at the last day." This is the time when our bodies shall be changed, and made like the glorious body of our risen Lord. "For our conversation is in heaven, from whence also we look for the Savior, the Lord Jesus Christ, who shall change our vile body, that it may be fashioned like unto his glorious body." Phil. iii. 20, 21.

God's children are in living expectation of a kingdom which shall be everlasting. We have divine assurance that this blessed era will come when He who is our life appears. For it is written: "When the Son of man shall come in his glory, and all the holy angels with him, then shall he sit upon the throne of his glory. . . . Then shall the King say unto them on his right hand, Come ye blessed of my Father, inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world." Matt. xxv. 31–40.

The throne of glory, the resurrection, the judgment of the dead, immortality, the kingdom of God, the reunion of the scattered church, the world to come, the new city, the new life, and that blessed state when there shall be no more death, all stand associated with our Lord's coming again. The precious promises were as an anchor of the soul, to our brother who now sleeps in death.

Those who sleep in Christ are resting in hope, and will awake and sing victory over death, when the voice of God shall wake the dead. Death is an enemy, but his power shall be broken, by Him who has the keys of death and of the grave. It is written among the blessed promises of our Father: "Thy dead men shall live, together with my dead body shall they arise, and thy dew shall be as the dew of herbs, and the earth shall cast out her dead." The Psalmist sings sweetly of that morning when the dead shall awake from the sleep of years. "I shall be satisfied when I awake with thy likeness." To be like the immortal King, to live where He lives, to reign where He reigns, and be in his city, and enjoy the honors of an untarnished crown. It is enough,—we ask for no more.

Well might Paul say, "Thanks be unto God who giveth us the victory through our Lord Jesus Christ." Victory is nearing. Tidings of his return who is Our Life ring through the land. He's coming to destroy death, to end war, to bless the world. Soon may He come! In the language of Bonar, whose words are so applicable to this occasion:

"Where the faded flower shall freshen,
Freshen never more to fade,
Where the faded sky shall brighten,
Brighten nevermore to shade,
Where the sun-beam never scorches,
Where the star-beams cease to chill,
Where no tempest stirs the echoes
Of the Wood, or wave or hill,
Where no streamer shall wave in gladness,
And the moon the joy prolong;
Where the daylight dies in fragrance
Mid the burst of holy song.

Brother, we shall meet and rest,
Mid the holy and the blest.

Where no shadow shall be sadder,
Where life's vista parade is o'er,
Where the sleep of sin is broken,
Where the dreamer dreams no more,
Where the bond is never severed,
Partings, claspings, sob and moan;
Midnight wailing, twilight weeping,
Heavy noontide—all are done.
Where the child has found its mother,
Where the mother finds her child;
Where dear families are gathered,
That were scattered on the wild.

Brother, we shall meet and rest,
Mid the holy and the blest.

Our brother has fallen asleep, but not as others who have no hope. His life record, his noble deeds, and Christian faith, all point to that better resurrection and the glory beyond. May we be found worthy to meet him in that day of earth's glory.

REMARKS BY BROTHER CHAPLIN.

Brother Thomas McDonald was born in Butler county, Ohio, Jan. 10, 1803. He came to Marshall county, Ind., March 28, 1836, 39 years to a day before the day of the burial. He embraced the gospel hope and was baptised by Brother E. Miller about 1848 or 1850—So far as personal reminiscences are concerned, my acquaintance with him commenced on the third Lord's day in January 1850, at the time of my first visit to Marshall county as a minister of the gospel. Of no one composing the numerous audience on that occasion have I a more vivid recollection. But the times change, and we change with them. The membership composing that church have, one by one, been vacating their places in the house of the Lord, till but a mere remnant is left to connect the devoted worshipers of that fast vanishing generation with those of the present time, who are holding forth the word of life to the world. Of the excellences of our brother, as a citizen it is needless to speak. The responsible positions in which he has been placed testify to the appreciation of his abilities, integrity, and worth, that his fellow-citizens had of him and his character. In his death the church has sustained a severe loss. Though not a demonstrative as many, he was a tireless worker for its welfare. In the darkest periods of its history he never gave way to despondling. When adverse influences were distracting and scattering, his conservative efforts availed much in restoring harmony and maintaining peace. As a parent, he was the very personification of affection and love;—and we may safely predict that his memory will be fondly cherished in the hearts of surviving relatives till those hearts too stand still in death.

The hope of future and eternal life through Jesus Christ,—to be attained through the resurrection from the dead, was the hope that inspired him in life, and sustained him as his footsteps neared the dark waters of death. Faith had fixed his view upon the incorruptible, undefiled, and fadeless inheritance; and we trust that his present deep repose is only that sweet sleep in Jesus from which none ever wakes to weep. We leave him in the house prepared for all living to rest from all his labors till the voice of the archangel and the trump of God shall call him forth with all the redeemed to be therefor h—FOREVER WITH THE LORD.

News Miscellany.

The excitement over the newly discovered silver mines at Newburyport, Mass., continues. A very respectable amount of rich ore has already been taken out, and the work of sinking shafts and crushing the rock goes satisfactorily forward.

The Italian consul at Yokohama has sent to the Italian government a box of tea seed from the province of Yamasciro. This seed will be distributed to the different farming institutions for the purpose of experimenting on the growth of the plant in Italy.

A special to the Erie Dispatch says that oil was struck at a depth of 654 feet on the farm of Daniel Beatty, at Warren, Pa., on Saturday morning, 19th. The gas forced the petroleum above the top of the derrick, but the capacity of the well is not yet determined. This strike develops an entirely new belt of oil territory.

The Galveston News' special from Corpus Christi, of the 20th, 8 o'clock p. m., says a large body of armed Mexicans attacked several ranches about seven miles from the city this evening, robbed one store, taking several Americans prisoners. An invasion of this city is apprehended. The excitement is intense. All the citizens are in arms.

Castelar writes to Spain that the country flocked around Alfonso XII., because it was assured that Alfonso meant peace, but the people have found out their mistake. War is raging more bitterly than ever; the Carlists have gained several important advantages, and are continuing to raise taxes. There is no symptom of the end of the struggle.

Prince Bismarck seems to have pressed his wish to retire from office on the score of age and necessary rest; but the emperor, in a personal interview, referred to the fact that he was himself eighteen years older than the prince, and yet could not retire, but must always hold himself subject to the obligations of duty and honor. Thus urged, the prince gave his promise to retain his post.

A terrible accident happened at Woodville, Ohio, recently. Two young men, named Weichman and Hogelmeyer, were unloading grain at Brun's grain warehouse, when the walls of the building, which were of brick, gave way and fell upon the young men and their horses. Weichman, when dug out of the debris, was still alive, but dangerously injured. The other man was quite dead. One of the horses was also quite dead.

The wild animals in the forests of the Eulengebilge, in Germany, are put to great straits for want of food. The snow is not only deep but hard frozen, and many of the poor creatures almost destroy themselves in their efforts to penetrate through the ice to the grass below. Steps are being taken to supply them with food. Eagles, taking advantage of the weakness and exhaustion of the deer, attack them while still alive.

Recent explorations show that the great Australian trees exceed in height, though not in circumference, the giants of California. A fallen tree in the recesses of Dandenong, Victoria, was measured not long since, and found to be 420 feet long; another on the Black Spur, ten miles from Healesville, measured 480 feet. The highest trees on the Sierra Nevada, Cal., yet discovered reach only 450 feet, the average size being from 200 to 400 feet in height, and from 24 to 34 feet in diameter.

Eighty convicts in the Jeffersonville, Ind., state prison, at work in the foundry, made a bold and desperate attempt to escape at 3 o'clock last Friday afternoon. They suddenly quit work, overpowered the guards, tied and blinded them, and succeeded in partially cutting a hole in the outer wall, when a general alarm was given. The outside guards rushed to the rescue and on top of the walls, forced the convicts, at the muzzle of their Spencer rifles, to desist further attempts to escape. The leaders were promptly dealt with, and all is quiet.

New Heavens, New Earth, New City.

New heaven, where day serenest gleams,
Whose sun with seven fold splendor beams;
And Luna's orb, that rules the night
Glows as our day's most lustrous light.

No black robed storms deform the skies,
Whose arches bless span Paradise;
No thunders burst, no lightnings glare,
Nor poisonous vapors taint the air.

The earth is new, where grew the brier,
The bramble, thorn, and thistle dire;
The bor, and dr, and myrtle shade,
Where sterile wastes are Elcos made.

The desert blossoms as the rose,
Through arid sands the streamlet flows;
And earth, by sinless millions trod,
Is one vast garden of our God.

A city new, whose holy towers
In grandeur tower from Beulah's plains,
God's Mountain Home, 'tis built of gems
More choice than grace earth's diadems.

O, countless are the mansions there,
Those blest abodes God's children share.
No pain, no death, no tear-drops fall,
Our God shall then be all in all.

The Lord's Supper.

As there are various times for the observance of this institution among the different sects in Christendom, I now offer a few thoughts to all candid Bible students for their consideration. Some observe it three times a year, some four, some monthly, some weekly, and some every time they meet. As none but the weekly communicants claim Scripture testimony for time, I will first notice their testimony, and see if it does not teach something besides what they use it for.

Acts ii. 42; xx. 7, are the main texts they rely on. But do they prove it. We think not, and will give our reasons. Their argument is founded on the definite article "the," and the expression "break bread." In Acts ii. 42, it is said the believers continued steadfastly in the apostle's doctrine and fellowship, and in "breaking bread." I now ask weekly communicants, Does the expression "brake bread," prove they ate the Lord's supper? If it does, then verse 46 proves they ate it daily, for it is said, "They continued daily with one accord in the temple, breaking bread from house to house." It is evident, as we will show from the Scriptures, that the phrase "break bread," was used to express the idea of eating a common meal. Ir Matt. xiv. 19; Mark vi. 41; Luke ix. 16; an account is given of Jesus feeding the multitude. "He took the five loaves and two fishes, and looked up to heaven, and blessed and brake them." Notice the form of expression, "He blessed and brake the loaves, and gave them to his disciples." And in Acts xxvii. 35, we read that Paul "took bread, and gave thanks to God in the presence of them all, and when he had broken it he began to eat." Here were two hundred and seventy-six souls that ate of the broken bread. Was this a common meal, or the Lord's supper? Again, in Luke xxiv. we have an account of Jesus appearing to two of his disciples on their way to Emmaus, and while "He sat at meat with them, he took bread, and blessed, and brake, and gave to them. Then they knew him." So they returned to Jerusalem, and told their brethren what was done in the way, and how He was made known to them in breaking bread. This event took place on the first day of the week. We ask, Did Jesus eat the Lord's supper? No. See Matt. xxiv. 29. Said Jesus, "I will drink no more until that day when I drink it new with you in my Father's kingdom." Acts xx. 7. "And upon the first day (day is not in the original, but inserted by the translators) of the week, when the disciples came together to break bread." Was this the Lord's supper, spoken of here? I think not. It lacks one thing to satisfy my mind, i. e: there is not one word said about wine, the fruit of the vine. This is a great omission, for it does seem to me that in order to make out a clear case, the fruit of the vine, the cup, should be mentioned, because it represents the blood that was shed, the bread the broken body.

"And there were many lights in the upper chamber, where they were gathered together. And there sat in a window a certain young man, named Eutychus, being fallen into a deep sleep, and as Paul was long preaching he sunk down with sleep, and fell down from the third loft, and was taken up dead. And Paul went down, and fell upon him, and embracing him, said: Trouble not yourselves, for his life is in him. When he therefore was come up again, and had broken bread, and eaten." Was this the Lord's supper spoken of here in verse 11? You see it is the same form of expression as used in verse 7, and on the ship, and by Jesus with his two disciples, and also on other occasions. And as there is nothing said in Acts xx. 7, of the fruit of the vine, and in Acts ii. 42, the same omission is made, we therefore conclude that neither text has any allusion to eating the Lord's supper.

But if this was a feast of charity, given for the benefit of the poor, and I am inclined to believe it was, so there is no dispute between us on the article "the."

The phrase "break bread" is not applicable to the Lord's supper, but to common and social meals, as I think I have shown. Therefore the phrase "break bread," is of no weight in settling this question.

According to the popular doctrine, Friday would be the proper day to celebrate the death of Christ, and the first day, his resurrection. Although it is said in Acts xx. 7–11, the disciples came together to break bread, it is also positively stated that Paul preached until midnight, and the young man fell down from the third loft, and Paul went down and restored him to life. Then it is added, when it was at a late hour of the night, near day, that the breaking of bread occurred. Now if this was a social feast of charity, (Jude 12: 2 Peter. ii. 13,) the breaking of bread might have occurred when they met, and when they parted, for they were together all night.

But some say when driven from the above texts, We can eat it as often as we please, for Paul says, "As often as you eat this bread, and drink this cup, you show the Lord's death till he comes." This is only a loose way of holding up a tottering theory, when men can do no better. I ask, Was there ever a commemorative institution given by God, under any religious economy, that had not a fixed time for its observance? No, Such a thing you never heard or read of in the Bible.

I now come to the main question. In order to settle the time of eating the Lord's supper, Paul says in 1 Cor. v. 7, 8, "for even Christ our (the Christian) passover is sacrificed for us. Therefore let us keep the feast, not with old leaven, (not as it was formerly kept, but keep it according to the direction of Jesus) neither with the leaven of malice and wickedness." Now as Christ is represented as the Christian's passover, we must understand how the passover was kept, and also what change Jesus made when He ate the last passover with his disciples. Therefore we must go back to Exodus xii. for a starting point. Verse 2, declares the beginning of the year to Israel, which commences at the new moon, near the spring equinox. Verses 5–11, command them to take a lamb without blemish . . . and kill it on the fourteenth day of the first month, in the evening, ... to strike the blood of the lamb on the two side posts of the houses wherein they eat it. They were to eat it the same night, roasted with fire, and unleavened bread, and bitter herbs. They were to eat it in haste, for it is the Lord's passover. Verses 45, 48, says, "A foreigner and a hirest servant shall not eat thereof." Not a bone of the lamb was to be broken. This pointed directly to Christ. "Thou shalt keep this ordinance in his season, from year to year, which is on the fourteenth day of the first month." Ashb. It is plain to be seen from testimony, that the passover was kept yearly on the fourteenth day of the first month, in the evening. No Bible student will deny this. Says Luke ii. 41, 42, "Now his parents (Joseph and Mary) went to Jerusalem every year, at the feast of the passover. And when he (Jesus) was twelve years old, they went up to Jerusalem, after the custom of the feast." At this feast no doubt Jesus ate the passover, for He was waxed strong in spirit, and filled with wisdom, and the grace of God was upon Him. Now if Jesus did eat at this passover feast, He continued it through his life yearly, and if He was thirty-three years old when crucified, He ate at the passover twenty-one times. John gives an account of his keeping the feast several times. John ii. 13. Now when Jesus came to eat the passover the last time, He sent Peter and John, saying, "Go and prepare us the passover, that we may eat it." And He sent them into the city, and told them they would meet a man carrying a pitcher of water, that he would show them a large upper room furnished, there make ready the passover. And when the hour was come He sat down, and the twelve apostles with Him. And He said unto them, "With desire I have desired to eat this passover with you before I suffer, for I will not eat any more thereof until it be fulfilled in the kingdom of God. Neither will I drink of the fruit of the vine until the kingdom of God shall come." Here Jesus ate the Passover the last time with his disciples, in remembrance of the deliverance of the children of Israel from Egyptian bondage. After eating the passover supper, He makes a change in the elements to be used by his disciples until He returned. He takes a loaf of unleavened bread, and gave thanks and break it, and gave unto them saying, "This is my body which is given for you. Likewise also he took the cup, saying, This is the new testament in my blood, which is shed for you." He then tells them to do this in remembrance of Him until his return. Do what? Eat the unleavened bread in remembrance of his broken body, and drink of this cup, in remembrance of his shed blood. From henceforth you need not kill another lamb at your feasts, for I am to be sacrificed as the antitypical lamb. So all you need do hereafter is to use unleavened bread and the fruit of the vine, to show my death until the kingdom of God shall come.

Now, as this institution was given at a yearly feast, or passover feast, as is plainly shown, and seeing that Jesus made no change in the time, is it not plain that celebration should be kept once a year in remembrance of our Lord's death? Jesus evidently kept the passover with his disciples for several years, and at the last feast He made a change in the elements, but not in the time, and plainly tells his disciples to observe it—"do this in remembrance of me"—in its altered condition, until I return.

Now, suppose yourself and family had been delivered from some great calamity, and you had kept a yearly feast with them for many years, in remembrance of that great deliverance, but from some cause you have to leave your family for a great while, but at the last feast you eat with them, before you leave, you make a change in the elements, and commanded them to keep it as you altered it, until your return, in remembrance of you. Would not your family observe the feast once a year, as you had altered it, although you say nothing about time? They certainly would if they loved you, and they would have a cry, and great mourning, and long and pray for you to come home again. This is a fair illustration of the Lord's supper. When our Lord was on earth, He taught us plainly that He was the bridegroom, and was going away. Mark ii. 19, 20; Matt. ix. 14, 15. He kept a feast with his disciples for many years, who are represented as his espoused bride, see 2 Cor. xi. 2, 3; in remembrance of the deliverance of the children of Israel from Egyptian bondage. This feast was kept yearly, on the 14th day of the first month, in the evening, but at the last feast He ate with them, He made a change in the elements. They were only to use unleavened bread, and the fruit of the vine, they were to observe it in remembrance of his death and sufferings, until He return. Just as the woman would observe her feast as her lord had altered it, weep, mourn and cry for her lord's return, just so will every true disciple of Jesus do. They will weep, mourn and pray for the return of their beloved Lord and Master. Lord Jesus come quickly, and take thy waiting ones to thyself, and give them immortality, and crown them with that glory promised them.

This is an institution given by our Lord, when rightly observed, that will touch the loveliest and tenderest cords of the human heart. May God help all his faithful ones to appreciate this solemn feast more fully, and observe it in accordance with the divine teachings of our Lord and Master.

Again, the Corinthian church had left the true time and manner of celebrating the Lord's death in Paul's day. And he condemns them in their practice, by saying: When we come together into one place, is not to eat the Lord's supper? That is, you need not expect to celebrate the Lord's death in the manner you are trying to do it. Then lay the truth before them on this subject, by saying, "I received of the Lord that which also I delivered unto you, that the Lord Jesus, the night in which He was betrayed, took bread." What night was it? It was the night of the 14th of the first month, or else Jesus did not keep the law while under it.

Jesus ate the passover feast at the right time with his disciples, and that same night He was betrayed. But the Jews ate the passover the next evening, which was one day too late, for God's lamb was slain before their supper come on. The type had given away for the antitype. Yet the Jews thought they were keeping the feast on the 14th of the month; but they made a mistake one day; and killed the lamb of God, the christian passover. For Paul says: "Christ, our passover, is sacrificed for us, and exhorts the disciples to keep the feast. Jesus is the lamb of the feast whom God has provided. Not a bone of Him was broken. His blood was sprinkled not upon the door-posts of houses, as it was done in Egypt, but upon the doors of believers' hearts, by faith in his spilled blood. As Jehovah's first born was saved by the blood of the lamb in Egypt, so the believer is saved in the kingdom of God by the blood of Christ. From what Jesus says in Matt. xxvi. 29. Luke xxii. 16, 17–29 30, there will be another passover supper eaten in the kingdom of God. The Christ will be there, also the apostles, Abraham, Isaac and Jacob with all the holy prophets and many from the four winds of heaven. What a glorious time there will be. It will be the marriage supper of the lamb. I long to be one in that number. There all the redeemed from the earth, saved by the blood of the true paschal lamb of God, will find themselves in Canaan, celebrating their own redemption, and the overthrow of all their enemies. The bread and wine of the Lord's supper were the remains of the passover, which are to be shared by the circumcised in heart when Christ comes in power and great glory. Faith in the lamb of God supplies the absence of the lamb in the Lord's supper. The broken bread and poured out wine memorials His sacrifice for believers. This do in remembrance of me, until I come, keep alive the hope of His coming, and kingdom. But when hope becomes a reality, the Lord's supper will give place to that great passover in the kingdom of God.

Dear brethren, we must close, but of all the days in the week to break bread on in commemoration of the Lord's death let the day of his resurrection be the last one, unless you want to celebrate his resurrection day instead of His death, and the feast you can do or say, let the feast be a supper, not a dinner.

The Kingdom of God.

The following shows how much truth can be packed together on a postal card:

ED. RESTITUTION.—

I pen a few words on the future kingdom of Christ. I will remark first, however, that a kingdom is God's divine government on the earth, we once had such a government. 1 Chron. xxviii. 4–7. This government was called the kingdom of Israel. This kingdom or divine government was to continue forever by faithful obedience to the will of God, but those to whom was entrusted the government or kingdom proved unfaithful rulers. 1 Kings ii. 4; ix. 2–9, and by reference to Ezek. xxi. 25, we learn that this kingdom was overturned, and will remain overturned until he comes whose right it is and I will give it him. Reference is here made to the Christ who is the rightful heir to the Throne of David. Isaiah ix. 6. Luke i. 32. Acts ii. 30. It is a plain fact that the throne and kingdom is now in ruins, Acts i. 6. but will be rebuilt when the Lord returns to earth again. Acts xv. 16. Amos ix. 11. At this time the nations will be governed with a righteous government on the earth. Psa. lxvii. 4; xxii. 28. Then and not till then will Matt. vi. 10 be fulfilled, Thy kingdom come thy will be done in earth as it is in heaven. Then the redeemed will sing the song We shall reign on the earth Rev. v. 10 At that time Christ will take unto himself his great power and reign. Rev. xi. 15–18. At that time he will execute judgment and justice in the land, Jer. xxiii, 5. God's people will then inherit the earth Matt. v. 5 and dwell therein forever. Psa. xxxvii. 29. That the kingdom of Christ is still future and will be set up when the Lord returns is further proven by the following scriptures: Thy kingdom come Matt. vi. 10 Those who are blessed inherit the kingdom when Christ takes the throne, which he will not do until he returns. Matt. xxv. 31. When the last signs appear the kingdom is then future. Luke xxi. 31. Christ will judge the living and the dead when the kingdom comes. 2 Tim. iv. 1. The overcomer will enter the kingdom when born from the dead. 2 Peter i. 11. Blessed hope, so may it be.

From Brother Harris.

DEAR BROTHER:—

Although not a member of your church, yet I feel that we are brethren in Christ. Your paper and tracts have fully convinced me of the error of my way. Brother Halstead preached here last fall. He created quite an excitement, and I think some good was done. His explanation of the Divine Word caused a great load to be taken off me. I could never reconcile "eternal punishment" with happiness after death, and with the judgment. And such non-reconciliation nearly caused me to be an Infidel. But thanks to Almighty God, my eyes are opened, my ears are unstopped, and my sense of duty toward God is greatly increased. I should like for you or some brother to come and preach to us. I feel there could be great good accomplished here.

THE RESTITUTION

Railroad Song.

BY REQUEST.

The Gospel train is coming,
I hear it just at hand;
I hear the car wheels moving,
And rumbling through the land;
I hear the bell and whistle,
The're coming round the curve;
She's plying all her steam and power,
And straining ev'ry nerve.

CHORUS.—Get on board, get on board,
There's room for many more.

O see the Gospel engine,
She's bearing now in sight;
Her steam valves they are groaning,
The pressure is so great;
No signal for another train
To follow on the line;
O sinner, you're forever lost,
If once you're left behind.

O see the engine banner,
She's fluttering in the breeze;
She's sprinkled in the Savior's blood,
But still she floats with ease.
This is the Gospel banner,
The motto's new and old;
Salvation and Repentance
Are burnished there in gold.

She's nearing now the station;
O sinner, don't be vain,
But come and get your ticket,
And be ready for the train.
The fare is cheap, and all can go,
The rich, the poor are there;
No second class on board the train,
No difference in the fare.

I think she'll make a little halt,
To wood up on the line,
And give you all a chance to go,
But yet she'll make her time.
She's coming round the mountain,
By the rivers and the lake;
The Savior, he's on board the train,
Controlling steam and brake.

We soon shall reach the station,
O how we then shall sing!
With all the heavenly army,
We'll make the welkin ring.
We'll shout o'er all our sorrows,
And sing forevermore,
With Christ and all his army,
On that celestial shore.

"I Pray Thee Have Me Excused."

A. Good morning, B. come in. Glad to see you.

B. Came over to see if I could borrow a dollar. My wife is sick and we have no provision in the house.

A. I am very sorry for you; but "I pray thee have me excused" I have no money to lend, for it is very close times just now, and interest is exceedingly high. Pray to God, Brother B. He is kind and will answer our petition, "Be ye warmed and filled." Good day, Mr. B., I shall think of you often."

C. Good morning, Mr. A. Could I hire a hundred dollars of you this morning.

A. Certainly, sir; any amount desired.

C. What interest do you charge?

A. Twenty per cent., sir; that is the least I charge. By the way, could I not persuade you to join our church. We have such a good minister, and besides our church is becoming quite popular. The expense is out a trifle. I have been a member over twenty years, and it has not cost me over five dollars. Our minister is but little expense to us.

C. I should want to lay up in the great treasury of heaven more than five dollars in twenty years. Mr. B. is a member of your church, is he not?

A. Yes, and a faithful christian too.

C. As I passed B. at your gate, this morning; he told me his wife was very sick, and had nothing in the house to eat. Said, too, he had been to see if he could borrow a dollar of you to get some bread, but did not get it, so I gave it to him.

A. I could not spare it; there being such a call for money, and interest running so high. But I prayed to God that he might be blessed and how soon He heard and answered my petition.

C. Better have relieved his wants, as such a profession as yours would demand.

C. Good morning, A. I thought I would go and hear your minister this morning. Going down?

A. Well, no; I hardly think I will. It looks so much like rain, "I pray thee have me excused," for it will not do for me to get wet. But go, friend C., for I think you will be much pleased with the speaker; and besides I believe they are to take up a public collection for him, and your mite would help greatly, as he is in great need just now, as the mortgage which I hold on his house I must foreclose in a few days unless I receive the money from him. By the way, are you going down to widow D.'s sale, to-morrow? You had better go; things will go very cheap, I believe, as she is in great need of money, and must sell.

C. Perhaps I may. But I must go, as that is the last bell.

A. C., going down with me to the sale.

C. It rains so hard, I think it hardly worth the while.

A. What! a little rain will not hurt you, will it? I have driven my team all day in a harder rain than this to collect and make dividends of money out, and no harm came from it.

C. Yes, I will go, for I think the poor woman is in need of wood and fire. I saw she had but little wood, yesterday, as I passed on my way to church.

A. Well, I am not surprised at the result of the sale. I made it exceedingly profitable going, things went so low.

C. I should have thought it more charitable like for you to have gone for the purpose of relieving her wants, than to have added to her distresses. I believe the poor woman to be a true christian. How faithful she has ever been to the cause of charity. How very kind and true she was to the poor when she was in more prosperous days. She turned none empty away. But now she is not long for this world; but how bright are her prospects in the future.

Although there are those who "for pretense, make long prayers, and to be seen of men give alms," yet there are those who are true and noble. There can be no counterfeit without a true coin, and such as widow D. will be gathered at last as jewels of God.

C. A., going to widow D.'s funeral, this morning?

A. Well, no; "I pray thee have me excused. I have some hay out I wish to secure to-day."

With sadness and many tears, the child of God is laid in her last resting place, and she quietly slumbers on, free from pain and want, waiting the resurrection morn to be clothed with life eternal. Only a rude stone marks her resting place, but the eye of God is upon it.

C. Neighbor B., going to A.'s funeral, this morning?

B. Yes; it is the last act of kindness we can do for him. His wealth could not prolong his days, nor give peace to his mind; and I fear will not prove any advantage in the realization of that hope of future blessedness which he so long professed.

With much parade the man of the world has passed to his long home. A costly monument is raised to mark his resting place, and he too slumbers on awaiting his reward.

The bright morn of the resurrection bursts upon our world. The reapers come to gather the jewels of earth. They enter the silent city of the dead, and the costly marble which marks the resting place of the rich and noble is passed unnoticed. At last the angel pauses before a lone and sunken grave with nothing to mark the sacred spot save the wild flowers; no footprints of friends are seen; the spot has long since been forgotten by man, but a jewel for God is resting there. The earth parts asunder and the long forgotten widow rises and stands before her God, and the Lord speaks unto her, saying, "Come ye blessed of my Father, inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the foundations of the world. (Why?) For I was an hungered and ye gave me meat, I was thirsty and ye gave me drink, I was a stranger and ye took me in." Then shall the righteous answer him saying, "Lord when saw we thee an hungered and fed thee, or thirsty and gave thee drink, or saw thee a stranger and took thee in, or saw thee naked and clothed thee? In as much as ye have done it unto one of the least of these my brethren, ye have done it unto me." Matt. xxv. 31–40.

Again the reapers go forth to gather the vintage of the earth, and he who amid his riches was placed beneath the costly monument comes to life and knocks for admittance to God's kingdom saying, "Lord, Lord, have we not prophecied in thy name, and in thy name have cast out devils, and in thy name done many wonderful works? And then will I profess unto them I never knew you (as being what they professed) depart from me ye that work iniquity." Matt. vii. 22–23. Why? "For I was an hungered and ye gave me no meat, I was thirsty and ye gave me no drink, I was a stranger and ye took me not in, naked and ye clothed me not, sick and in prison and ye visited me not. When saw we thee an hungered, or thirsty, or a stranger, or naked, or sick, or in prison, and did not minister unto thee. In as much as ye did it not to one of the least of these, my brethren, ye did it not to me." Matt. xxv. 42–45.

How easy is it for us to say, "I pray thee have me excused." One exclaims, "I have bought a piece of ground; I must needs go and see it, I pray thee have me excused." For the love of gain and the addition of lands to lands, he desired to be excused from the great feast prepared, proving the words of Jesus to be true, when he said, "How hard it is for them that are rich to enter into the kingdom of God." Mark x. 24. Why? Because "they that will be rich fall into temptation and a snare, and into many foolish and hurtful lusts which drown men in destruction and perdition." 1 Tim. vi. 9.

May these words be a warning to us all that our treasures may be laid up in heaven where they cannot, as in this world, fade away, and where thieves cannot break through and steal. Another said, "I have married a wife, and cannot come." Deeming this reason an insurmountable one, he absented himself from the supper to which he was called. But why should this have been given as an excuse. Had he chosen for his companion one of the world's worshippers who was placing before him the pleasures of this life, which last but a moment and are forever gone, leaving no shadow of a bright future beyond? If this be the reason, how blessed it is to heed Paul's words when he says, "Be ye not unequally yoked together with unbelievers. 2 Cor. vi. 14.

Yet another says, "I have bought five yoke of oxen, and I go to prove them; I pray thee have me excused." Fearing lest he had been deceived in the transaction, and wishing to know whether a good investment had been secured, he wished to be excused. Who of us will fail here? There are investments we can make, about the result of which we need have no concern.

"The poor ye have always with you." Empty thy hoarded coffers to them. Pay it to the Lord and thy investments are good and thy dividend will be received at the morn of the resurrection. Luke xiv. 13–14. It is those then who so often ask to be excused from doing their duty will be forever excused and denied the blessings of God's kingdom, and that reward which await all those who have borne the burden and the heat of the day which precede the joy and crown.

When Christ shall come to lift the dark curse from the earth and mantle it once again with beauty, clothing it as at the dawn of creation, casting its present mantle of shadows, tears, sickness, pain, death, filling it with joy, smiles, life, and perpetual health, rewarding the world for their deeds "whether they be good or bad." It is then that he will realize that his excuses and neglect has carried him through the summer of life, and beyond the harvest, and he will then, with a bitter cry, exclaim "I am not saved."

May we so live that this will not be our portion at last. But may we take the cross now, that at the last great day a crown of life eternal may deck our brow.

Catacombs of Rome.—No. 2.

PROF. JULES DE LAUNAY.

STATE OF THE DEAD.

Christians in apostolic ages, taking a cheerful view of death, named their burial ground "Cemetery," or Place of Repose—the German "City of Peace," or Friedenstadt, the Saxon "God's Acre."

"Yes; I love that ancient Saxon phrase, which calls
The burial ground 'God's Acre.' It is just.
* * * * * * * * *
"God's acre!" yes, that blessed name imparts
Comfort to those who in the grave have sown
The seed that they had garnered in their hearts,
Their bread of life—alas! no more their own!"

That new word cemetery, so expressive of sleep, rest, repose, stamped for the ages to come the view the first believers had of the state of the dead in Christ till the morning of the resurrection. The cemeterial epigraphy of those catacombs everywhere impress the mind with the view of the unconsciousness of the intermediate state. Thus we read:—

LYCINA DORMIT IN PACE—
"Lucina sleeps in peace."
DORMITIO ELPIDIS—
"The sleeping place of Elpis."
DORMITIO SYLVESTRI—
"The sleeping place of Sylvester."
CŒLIUS HIC DORMIT
ET DECRIA
OVANDO DEUS VOLVERIT—
"Here sleeps Cœlius, also Decria (his wife,)
Till the Lord calls them from sleep."
ZOTICUS HIC DORMIENSVM—
"Zoticus is here sleeping."
LAURENTIA QVAE CREDIDIT
RESURRECTIONEM—
"Laurentia who believed the resurrection."

Yes; they here all sleep in silent repose only to be broken by the Lord himself when He shall descend from heaven with a shout, with the voice of the archangel and the trump of God. "Zoticus is here!" Here in the catacomb of St. Zoticus, not there in heaven; so here, here are Cœlius and Decria, not with one eye sleeping and the other awake; but like grains of corn, bodies and souls, germs and grains, until the Dayspring from on high shall melt the icy shackles of death, when the saints in their chrysalis state shall from their graves mount up on wings of starry gold to meet the Savior in the air of the new Jerusalem that is to come from above.

The Priscilla and Aquila, nor the beloved Epenetus, nor Andronicus and Sunia, nor Apelles, nor Amplius, nor Asyncritus, Phlegon, Hermas, Patrobus, Hermas and the brethren with them, were ever directed by Paul to pray to Abraham, Moses, David, Isaiah or Daniel; nor were the martyrs of the tenth persecution to invoke the apostles or the martyrs of the reign of Nero, or of that of Decius or Severus, or Caracalla. Why did not the martyrs, any more than the Jews of the old dispensation, pray to their departed heroes, the prophets and the apostles? Nine hundred miles of catacombs echo the answer—"They sleep!" Is it not an absurdity to invoke them that are sleeping? The Jews prayed not to their prophets, for the doctrine of an intermediate state or of a beatific state of the soul in death was not a part of their creed. The Popes (mark this) never directed the prayers of the faithful to those holy men before Christ. It is after the era of Constantine that the intercession of the departed was sought for. The Pagans who pressed into the church by baptism, clung to the intermediate apotheosis of their heroes, and they deserted the altars of Saturn, Jupiter, Bacchus, Diana, Vesta, Romulus, etc., for the tombs of Peter and Paul, of Sebastian, Laurence, Agnes, Cecilia, etc. Then began under Pascal and the subsequent Popes of the fifth, sixth and seventh centuries the practice of disinterring the relics of the martyrs to be deposited under the new altars. The tombs of the non-martyred saints were also stripped of their marbles to serve as stone flags of the new Basilicas; and thus perished many precious fragments of the purest ages of faith.

Twelve thousand cemeterical epitaphs had been collected from the glorious necropolis at the close of 1856. One thousand slabs with epitaphs, entire or in fragments, used to flag the modern churches, have been gathered; and with one thousand more in the catacombs themselves, they are stored up among the walls of the Vatican, being three thousand inscriptions from Pagan sepulchers. God wise and silent providence has so permitted that the sepulchral stones of the martyrs should be preserved, that priests should have collected them, and that the roofs of the Vatican should cover them as a standing evidence of the doctrine of the apostles, once obeyed from the heart amidst the glare of blood-red persecutions. Let the priests of Rome deny their departure from that obedience of faith of Priscilla and Aquila, and those saluted by the great Apostle, Rom. xvi. and the stones of their tombs would immediately cry out.—Herald of Life.

"Sound Doctrine."

Titus ii. 1. That is contrary to sound doctrine. 1 Tim. i. 10. Will not endure sound doctrine. 2 Tim. iv. 3. By sound doctrine, Titus, i. 9. What is sound doctrine? Where do we find it? Do we find it in the creeds of the day? Do we find it in the papers put out by the sects? What say you? I have now finished reading the RESTITUTION, and I find under the head of editorial, sound doctrine; I find Sister Reed's article sound doctrine; I read Brother Stephenson's article, I find sound doctrine; Brother A. F. Dugger's, all sound, and Brother S. A. Chaplin's sound doctrine. I find in the same paper unsound doctrine, plenty of it. Now, dear brethren, is this as it should be? I have succeeded this winter in getting some new subscribers for the paper, and it would be hard for them to determine what we do believe, after reading our paper. Now let us see, what do we find in the last paper? Let us see, and dear brethren, I am not the only one that is finding fault, but as far as I know, it is quite general among the brethren. I find the brethren are writing for the paper, but many of their articles do not appear. But on the other hand, articles from the sects are filling up the paper. But to the unsound doctrine of Bishop Wiley. He says: "Here is the touch of heaven. * * Follow it and it will lead to God and heaven; it shines out of the Father's door, and the doorway is ajar; follow the light for it leads to heaven and to God." Now, dear brethren, do you believe that God stands in heaven, with the door open, and inviting us to heaven and to God? I for one do not believe, and Brother Reed's article will not endorse it. Now are we so hard pressed for matter for our paper, that we have to resort to such stuff? If so, let us quit and take a paper of the Methodists or any other sect. Another article on "Wind Up," by the Baptist Union. It says: "We shall keep our souls wound up when, as by instinct, we study the Bible, when we ought and as we ought. * * Give money to save souls or relieve distress." Saying and filling souls for heaven, and God's door standing open in heaven, is very thin doctrine for a man or woman who has made the Bible a study. Again Mr. J. R. Birkes, speaking of "degrees of glory." "They are members of one mystical body." Where does the Bible speak of the mystical body? This is all sectarian trash. Now, Dear Editor, if you do not think best to give place for this in our paper, you need not do so. I am a great stickler for the truth; it is not for any ill will to any brother that I write thus, but for the love of the truth. I do love the truth with all my heart, and I will defend it to the best of my ability. Then hear me patiently. Would be glad to see this in our paper. I have written several times, but have not heard from anything that I have written. I am spending all my time in defense of the truth. Yours in the love of the truth.

The Partial Resurrection Theory Examined.

"Thou art weighed in the balances and art found wanting." Dan. v. 7.

Luke xx. 36. "But they which shall be accounted worthy to obtain that world, and the resurrection from the dead, neither marry nor are given in marriage; neither can they die any more." From this it is inferred that the unjust will never be raised; but we shall see that it is an unwarranted inference. In the Diaglott this text reads as follows: "But those deemed worthy to obtain that age, and that resurrection from the dead, &c." What resurrection? Evidently the first resurrection, of which it is said, "Blessed and holy is he that hath part in it." This is the resurrection to which Paul wished to attain; a resurrection out from among the dead. We do not claim that the wicked will be accounted worthy to have part in that resurrection. Every man must come in his own order, or company. We see then that this passage does not afford the slightest proof that the wicked will never be resurrected.

John iii. 36. "He that believeth not the Son shall not see life, but the wrath of God abideth on him." The error of applying this to the non-resurrection of the wicked dead, will be seen when we consider that the author of the passage was speaking of the present consequences of belief and unbelief, and not of the final condition of man. "He that believeth on the Son, hath everlasting life; you hath he quickened who were dead in trespasses and sin." Again, Jesus says, "Except ye eat the flesh of the Son of man and drink his blood, you have no life in you." This certainly does not mean that they were literally dead at that time, but that they had not eternal life. And now let us read John iii. 36. "In the same manner He that believeth not the Son, shall not see eternal life." The reason is plain; life is obtained by faith, and, consequently, the unbeliever cannot see or enjoy it,—only he that believes has life, for he that disbelieves, is condemned already, and the wrath of God abideth on him. Believers were by nature the children of wrath, even as others. But may not the unbeliever of to-day be the believer of to-morrow? All that can be proved from the text is, that while mankind remain in unbelief, they remain under condemnation. Again it is claimed that the wicked perish in death, but the righteous only have their vital functions suspended; but this position is contrary to the plain declarations of scripture. "The righteous perish, and no man layeth it to heart." Isa. lvii. 1. "There is a just man that perishes in his righteousness." Eccl. vii. 15. "That the blood of all the prophets from the blood of Abel unto the blood of Zacharias which perished between the altar and the temple." Luke xi. 50, 51. "For it cannot be that a prophet perish out of Jerusalem." Chapter xiii. 33.

Having weighed their arguments in the balance and found them wanting, we shall now see how they contradict the plainest declarations of Scripture, in order to sustain their theory. That all mankind are to be raised, is a fact so fully and distinctly taught in the Scriptures, that it seems strange any should ever have called it in question. The Apostle Paul has placed this beyond all doubt in his first letter to the Corinthians. He argues against the opinion which it seems had been advanced by some of them—that mankind would not be raised, and all the terms he employs show most positively that he taught the resurrection of all. "Wind Up," by the Baptist Union. It says: "We shall keep our souls wound up when, as by instinct, we study the Bible, when we ought and as we ought. * * Give money to save souls or relieve distress." Saying and filling souls for heaven, and God's door standing open in heaven, is very thin doctrine for a man or woman who has made the Bible a study. Again Mr. J. R. not the Lord, neither any that go down into silence." The Prophet Isaiah declares that God will remove the veil that is spread over all nations and swallow up death in victory, Isa. xxv. 78. And the Apostle Paul says that God will have all men live and come to the knowledge of the truth, because Christ tasted death for every man, and gave himself a ransom for all. 1 Tim. ii. 4; Heb. ii. 9. But it is objected that the expression "God will have all men to be saved" (or to live), simply denotes the desire of the Almighty; but this does not change the matter in the least, for since it is admitted that God desires that all men should be saved and come to the knowledge of the truth, we must either concede that all men will be saved, or deny that the desire of the righteous shall be granted. Now it appears to me, that "He who openeth his hand and satisfieth the desire of every living thing," will certainly so arrange matters as to satisfy his own. Besides how does it consist with true theology, to allege that the supreme God desires a consummation which He has not purposed to effect, or that He wills a result which He does not desire.

Another proof of the doctrine of the resurrection of the unjust, is found in Acts xxiv. where Paul in his defence before Felix, represents the doctrine of the resurrection as an object of hope. "And have hope towards God which they themselves also allow that there shall be a resurrection of the dead, both of the just and unjust." This passage needs no explanation, it is as plain as language can make it. The apostle's hope embraced the resurrection of both the just and unjust. There is no avoiding this conclusion, except by ignoring all language, and rendering ourselves not only open to criticism, but adopting a rule of interpretation, which, if carried out, would deny the whole Bible. Every attempt to avoid the force of this plain, positive testimony, is only an evasion. We might multiply proofs, but as our article is already rather lengthy, we must conclude. We trust that sufficient evidence has been presented to satisfy any unbiased mind that the Bible plainly teaches the doctrine of a universal resurrection.

DEAR BRETHREN:—

Allow me to note that Roman imagery in prophecy belongs to Roman territory, and not to the other modern nationalities outside, however analogous. Russia is a modern power; and as such is about twice as old as the United States of America.

The blood and bandage of Israel and "of the saints" (of this age) lies to the charge of Rome; and nothing like Russia can intervene between Rome and her foretold doom. Then there are, among many others, THREE introductory events that must open the judgment on the beast and its dependencies, as seen in Revelation. See chapter xi. 15–18; xv. 1–5; xvi. 1–17. "The time of wrath," including "the battle of the great day" will fill their place, according to the prophecy. Then, "AT the last trump—the seventh—the dead in Christ will rise, and with him take the kingdom." Psa. lxxii. 98; 1 Cor. xv. 51; Rev. xi. 15; xvii. 14; Dan. vii. 18; Isa. xxvi. 19–21.

The grand scene will open "after the manner of Egypt." Micah vii. 15–21; Dan. xii. 1–3. "The plagues" are described in language derived mainly from those in the judgment on Egypt. In fact, the language of "Revelation" is drawn from the Old Testament generally. Then the "one thousand years" reign—"the times of restitution"—His TIMES "who is the Blessed and only Potentate"—the sabbatismos ("rest") that "remaineth to the people of God"—will come in their divinely-appointed order! All ultimates in the new heavens and new earth. It is best to keep in "the way, the truth, and the life"—i. e., Jesus in "his whole work."—The Crisis.

"The Two Advents of Christ."

Every one who receives the testimony of the Scriptures believes that "JESUS CHRIST hath come in the flesh," 1 John iv. 2. and also that he is coming in the flesh." 2 John 6. There are two advents; the first is past, the second is future. At his first advent he appeared to the Jewish people as a root out of a dry ground—the disposed representative of a line that had long sunk into obscurity, having no form or comliness to make him desirable—the powerless heir of a fallen throne. At his second advent, he will far transcend in the glory of his condition and the greatness of his power all that they had conceived respecting him. Amidst the obscurity and meanness of his surroundings at his first advent there were not wanting indications of his real estate as the Son of GOD. The angelic announciation—the appearance of the angels to the shepherds of Bethlehem—the star which led the wise men to the place of his birth—his converse with the doctors—the dove-like symbol and the heavenly voice at his baptism—the transfiguration on Mount Tabor, and the wonderful miracles he wrought, bespoke him more than man, proclaimed him Son of God. He also frequently referred, in his teachings, to a glory he had previously sustained, and spoke of his coming again in that glory. After telling his disciple of the sufferings he should endure in accomplishing the object of his first advent, and that they would also be called to suffer for his name's sake; he depicted to their minds the glory of his second manifestation, and promised them a share in that exalted condition. He said "The Son of man shall come in the glory of his Father, with his angels; and then he shall reward every man according to his works.

He came the first time, in accordance with the purpose of God to put away sin by the sacrifice of himself. He will come the second time, according to the same purpose, to complete the work of redemption, to save and glorify his elect church, and subdue and reconcile all things to God under his government. There is abundant evidence in the Old Testament Scriptures that Christ must come twice to fulfill the purpose of God. Take the first declaration of redemption made to fallen man, in the doom pronounced upon the serpent, the devil, who beguiled Eve. "I will put enmity between thee and the woman and between thy seed and her seed. He shall bruise thy head, and thou shalt bruise his heel." Christ is the woman's seed, and the bruising of his heel indicates a condition of suffering, to be succeeded by a triumph in bruising the serpent's head. The first advent fulfilled the predicted sufferings; the second shall fulfill the predicted triumph. Isaiah contemplates the Messiah in two different conditions. In one he is as a plant out of a dry ground, destitute of worldly rank or power; of sorrowful mein and compassionate heart; relieving the sufferings and healing the sicknesses of mankind and by his stripes giving health and cure to the fallen and depraved. In the other he is a glorious prince, distinguished by the most exalted titles, sitting upon the throne of David and reigning over the house of Jacob. It is evident that these two conditions cannot be predicted of the same person at the same time; and since they both belong to Christ they belong to different manifestations, and require two advents for their accomplishment. These two conditions are seen in all the prophets and Psalms, showing that Christ must first suffer and afterwards enter into his glory. The first class of these predictions has been literally accomplished in the first advent of the Son of God; and the second class will also be most completely and literally fulfilled in its season. The advent and humiliation and suffering was the most improbable of the two; and yet strange and incongruous as it was that the Son of God should take the form of a servant in the likeness of sinful flesh and suffer the death of the cross, it was exactly fulfilled; and shall not the advent of power and glory which is consonant with his nature and relations be also literally fulfilled? Surely he who came forth out of Bethlehem as the seed of the woman in the incarnation, will come again in the clouds of heaven, as the Ancient of days, in glorified humanity, in that very body, with which he ascended into heaven. For the angels of the ascension testified to the gazing disciples, saying, "Ye men of Galilee, why stand ye gazing up into heaven? This same Jesus which is taken up from you into heaven, shall so come in like manner as ye have seen him go into heaven." —J. G. W. in Prophetic Times.

The New Jerusalem.

In ancient times, cities were always surrounded by walls; and the more important the city, the higher and stronger were the walls built, which were designed as a defense against all enemies. Having walls, it was necessary to have gates also, to furnish ingress and engress to the inhabitants; these must be in charge of faithful guardians, who would have authority to open and shut them according to the regulations of the city. In accordance with these ideas the new Jerusalem is represented, "It had a wall great and high," the strong defense and security of Zion, her impregnable fortifications, within which she could dwell in perfect peace, far from all alarms and dangers. The three gates on each side represent the full and free access had to the city from every quarter. It was customary to give names to the gates, as we do to our streets; and these of the holy city were named after the twelve tribes, which embraced all of God's ancient covenant people, and here denotes the completeness of the millennial church as composed of all the spiritual Israel. The twelve angels stationed at the gates denote that the city was under the immediate protection and guardianship of God. Perhaps the idea of the most perfect security is also intended. The porter or keeper of a city gate was an office of great importance, the guardianship of all within being put into his hands. It was necessary that he should be eminently vigilant and trustworthy, to give notice of any approaching danger, and keep the gates closed against every enemy. With angels, then as the sleepless, faithful porters of the New Jerusalem, the inhabitants might ever dwell in security, fearing the approach of no enemy.—Wickes on the Apocalypse.

"Famine in Divers Places."

Among the signs of "the end," foretold by the Savior, are "famines in divers places." Those who see in passing events signs of the nearer approach of the millennium are confirmed in their views by the desolating famines which have prevailed in distant parts of the world. Two years ago the people of Persia, were held for more than a year on the verge of extinction for lack of food. The destruction of a still vaster population in India has just been averted by the most vigorous exertions and lavish outlay on the part of the British government. And still more recently the same scourge has fallen upon Asia Minor. Late letters from missionaries of the American board at Cesarea, present an appalling picture of the suffering which prevails. In a region nearly as large as New England, embracing ancient Galatia and Cappadocia, in consequence of a drought last season, cutting off the grain crop, followed by an unusually long and severe winter, supplies of all kinds for man and domestic animals have been, in many places wholly exhausted. Flocks and herds have been greatly reduced or wholly destroyed. Men, women and children, fleeing from their homes, have perished on the roadside, and sometimes in the streets of the cities to which they fled for food. The missionaries in Cesarea, at the last advices, were distributing bread and soup to hundreds of all classes who come to them for help.—Christian Statesman.

A Great Man's Opinion.

Mr. Gladstone says, "There is a fixed purpose among the secret inspirers of Roman policy to pursue, by the road of force, upon the arrival of any favorable opportunity, the favorite project of re-erecting the terrestial throne of the Popedom, even if it can only be re-erected on the ashes of the city Homes and amidst the whitening bones of the people."

Adventists are considered by others as alarmists, as given to the marvelous, etc. Perhaps some may thus regard Mr. Gladstone; but certainly not from the same causes. It is not likely that he draws the above conclusion from a diligent study of the prophecies. He judges from present indications, judged in the light of the history of the past. No one can read the history of the church of Rome, and not know that she will make every effort to regain lost power. The thought is contrary to her character. Hence, judging simply from a human standpoint, we may look for every effort on her part to reinstate herself.

The hatred of Papacy to Germany is evident from the fact that the Pope permits the priests to obey the ecclesiastical laws of Austria, while he forbids them to obey similar laws in Germany. And this course only intensifies Bismarck's opposition. He is well called the Man of Iron. Nothing can intimidate him; he pushes every purpose to accomplishment. The following dispatch from Berlin, March 18, records his answer to the Pope's last encyclical.

"In the Landtag to-day, the main clauses of the bill withdrawing the state grants from Roman Catholic bishops, were passed by overwhelming majorities.

An ultramontane member, amid loud protests, read the Papal Encyclical.

Prince Bismarck took part in the discussion. He insisted that it was the 'imperative duty of the state not to pay tomenters of insurrection.'"

It is not wonderful that men should regard a conflict as certain when they see two such powerful antagonists approaching each other. But we have not only the present indications which naturally lead to these conclusions, but the prophecies which point directly to it. The difference between Mr. Gladstone and ourselves is that, while the events which indicate the conflict do not show what the result will be, the prophecies plainly declare it. Babylon shall go down to rise no more, and the Prince of peace shall come to begin his eternal reign.—Herald of Life.

The Days of Itching Ears.

"For the time will [illegible] they will not endure sound doctrine; but after their own lusts shall heap to themselves teachers, having itching ears. 2 Tim. iv. 3.

We would by no means confine the application of this prophecy to the days in which we live. It is far-reaching. But there are times when the state of things before us is of such a character as to bring the prediction very vividly before the mind. The Rev. E. J. Drinkhouse, D. D., editor of the Methodist Protestant published in Baltimore, Md., obviously thought so when in a recent article on Methodism, he remarked:—

"The annual defections from Methodism in such multitudes, are due to two causes: One, the art that gathers them in, the other, the want of ballast to keep them there.

"There is, at the present period, the most deplorable ignorance of evangelical truths among large masses of Methodist church members, and this ignorance is due to the fact that those truths are seldom presented in the pulpit in such a form as to find a lodgment in the intelligence of these people.

"Masses of church members will no longer tolerate expository, didactic, or argumentative preaching. The day of itching ears are certainly upon us."

This witness ought to know whereof he affirms, and the reason he gives for the "multitudes" of "annual defections" in the denomination with which he is connected deserves to be pondered. The "art" that gathers many into all our churches is often unlike the simplicity of apostolic times, while the "ballast" of truth is suffered to remain in the Holy Scriptures instead of being shoveled into the hold of the professor's heart.—Messiah's Herald.

Choose Whom Ye Will Serve.

"To give wicked men in this life the assurance that they will be saved in some future age, is to set at naught the whole drift of revelation, and offer hope in open defiance of the word of God."

The above has the true ring, and to my mind is a logical conclusion drawn from the teachings of Christ and his apostles, in which they offer life to all; but leaves everyone free to choose for himself. And it also harmonizes with the teachings of the Old Testament—"Choose ye this day whom ye will serve."

To say that God is responsible for the general ignorance concerning his plan—and for all the idolatry and false conceptions that men may have of Him, is blasphemy. Who does this? The man who says that God is responsible for the remotest results growing out of his plan. To take this position, is to deny the operation of the will of man, and make him a mere automaton, which is predestination without a grain of free grace to season it.

The bad results growing out of his plan, are on the account of disobedience, which is man's will as opposed to God's will—these two wills coming in contact from the history of the world. God's will is that man shall obey, man's to disobey; hence the bad results which appear to grow out of this plan temporarily.

To say that God could have projected a plan to save man, and not introduce his (man's) will into the programme, is to say that He could do that which He has not done. To prove this it is only necessary to show that he has always consulted man's salvation. "Turn turn, for ye will die, O house of Israel." But unto Israel he saith, all day long have I stretched forth my hand unto a disobedient and gain-saying people. Here God's willingness is presented in his outstretched hand, which is to say, come unto me and be ye saved—again ye will not come unto me that ye might, etc. The expression "ye will not come," shows stubbornness on the part of man, and entirely on the part of God, which could not be the case if man's will were not consulted. And if he refuses to fall in with the entreatjel of God, which are manifested through love, in this age, where is the evidence that he will comply in another. Evidence is against the view; the oftener the mind comes in contact with righteous principles, and refuses to be governed by them, the less likely it is that it will ever become obedient.

Then to say that God's plan is to save all that he can in this age, and the balance in another, and more glorious one, is to say that his plan is to save everybody, which is to deny the right of man to choose their own destiny by living in obedience to certain just laws, made for the purpose of separating the obedient from the disobedient—by acts of their own choice.

God is not in love with flesh and blood because it is such, but because it is obedient to the "law of the spirit," and thus it rises above the law of the flesh and shows its willingness to be saved. In the beginning God conferred man to eat of the tree of life. He chose to eat of the tree of good and evil, and thus, in opposition to God's will, introduced death. God does not remove the temptation, but allows it to remain, and thus gives scope for the exercise of the choice of man, to choose life or death.

I think that his plan, as deduced from the above, is, that he intends to save all the obedient, and allow the remainder to perish. If man's will were taken into account in the plan, it must have scope for exercise, and how could his will be exercised if his salvation were absolute, and not contingent. God is not responsible for results growing out of his plan, where the will of man comes in as the immediate cause: God's will has always been for man to obey, but man has disobeyed, and where results have grown out of this disobedience, man is the responsible one.

To say that "the endless future was before God when he arranged his plan, and that, therefore, he is responsible for the remotest results growing out of it," is not true, for God's will in his plan is that all should arrange themselves on the side of truth, but the majority of men will not; now for any results growing out of the disobedience of man, man alone is responsible, for he has introduced a new element,—that of disobedience. While the plan of God was so arranged that disobedience might result disasterously to those who disobeyed, yet could not thwart his purpose so far as the obedient were concerned. Man has a purpose in sowing a field of wheat, it is that he may harvest a crop—it is no part of his plan to raise chaff—yet it is necessary to the growth and protection of the kernel, and the chaff is often the greatest pile of the two.

It is no part of God's plan to save sinners, but saints; yet he must have sinners to make saints out of, and those sinners that will not become saints answer the purpose of chaff to the wheat.

The question of Peter seems no longer doubtful,—where will the sinner and ungodly appear? Why they will be saved to!! Oh, no; they have had their chance, and refused, they can't be saved. But ain't they men? And don't Paul say that "God will have all men to be saved.

A. B. ALLEXTON.

Dawn Talcaur.

This poetic name has been assumed as the name of an island in Lake Champlain, which has been for a few months the home of a community of spiritualists and free lovers. It was heralded through Bhalt's "Crucible" and many other papers of the same stripe as a refuge from the troubles of life, a quiet, lovely home where the marriage covenant could be constantly ignored without being obliged to meet the criticisms of the world upon their conduct. The land was to be given for the purpose and those who entered this halcyon retreat were to pay a stipulated sum for expenses of which all things were to be common, everybody were to do as they pleased, and perfect bliss was expected to crown the enterprise. They boasted that the waters around them fenced out the world of agitation and left them to the enjoyment of perfect happiness. The poor creatures forgot that when they left the world to find peace that they took not only themselves but kindred spirits with them and the result was as might be expected—a general row. These immaculated creatures were accountable to nobody, they committed crime with impunity and everything was lovely until they began to make raids upon each others pockets. But this was a phase of the disease that they could not bear with fortitude. It appears from an article in the Boston "Herald," one of the leading spirits of the enterprise who is known to mortals by the name of Wilcox appropriated about seventy dollars of money belonging to one Shipman. Said Shipman had donated the land to the community and taken the money from the members. He was enthusiastic in the idea of being shut out from the cruel world, but when Wilcox entered the sacred domain of his finance he promptly materialized himself and appealing to the cruel world he had the offender arrested and put in jail. The prisoner is still in durance vile but is revenging himself by telling tales. He claims that Shipman is a confidence man and double dealer,—charges him with cruelty to his children, and says that foreclosures and attachments are coming in thick and fast upon the property. Other members of this happy family have resolved that Shipman is a fraud and has obtained money under false pretences. They have procured a warrant for his arrest and he dare not set his foot into the state of New York for fear it will be served upon him. Thus the community has broken up in a general unpleasantness after a few short months, and before half the congenial spirits reached its shores. We highly approve of the island plan and think it is a valuable idea to have them separated by deep water from the rest of the world, but we would suggest to them in their future operations that the only way for them to live in peace is for each one to have an island to himself.

An Ancient City.

The City of Nice, once so famous in church history, it seems, is one of the most beautiful cities in Europe. Colonel Forney writes one of his letters from that place, and says that a lovelier spot never came more fully finished from the hands of nature, and never was more gratefully adorned by the genius of man. A settled population of 60,000, increased by annual visitors during the winter and early spring to 80,000; its situation on the Mediterranean, with a splendid background of hills, the snow-claw mountains, more than one hundred miles off, clearly visible on a cloudless day, it seems to lie in a crescent, unvisited by fogs, and rarely by clouds, its valleys clothed with olive, orange, fig, and lemon trees, with here and there the palm and the pine. This is the 10th of February, but the floral is already exuberant. Walking through these clean and level streets, we pass elegant villas bounded with hedges of cactus, oleanders, aloes, and castor-oil trees, with tea roses in bloom, while the very air is heavy with the fragrance of mimosa and orange blossoms.

"Seasoned with Salt."

The anecdote told of a minister, who when asked by a lady "If teachers ought always to be talking about religion," answered precipitately, "No, no! let your speech be seasoned with salt, madam, not a whole mouthful," is worthy of thought here. The expression "seasoned with salt," is very suggestive. If one uses salt at all, he wants it well mixed with the food; so if our speech is not always of grace it ought to be always with grace. As salt seasons all the food, so grace should affect all our conversation. "Even the smallest leaf of the believer should be full of the sap of the Holy Spirit (Jer. xvii. 7–8); his conversation cheerful without levity, serious without gloom." How important is that command, "Let your speech be always with grace." Alas! how many professed christians never seem to think of it. Do we?—Sel.

From Brother Myers.

BROTHER REED:—

Since writing to you last, though not many weeks since, the world has been moving on. I have had three public discussions, besides many private ones. The first was at Columbus, Kansas, with Elder J. A. Murray, of the Christian church, which commenced Jan. 13th. The second was with Elder J. W. Randall, of Montgomery county, held in the country in the south-western part of this county (Crawford), commencing Jan. 25th. The third was held here, with Elder J. A. Murray, commencing Feb. 16th. The Nature of Man was the point under discussion.

This morning I start for Montgomery county, to hold a discussion with Elder Baider, of the Christian church. The points to be discussed, are the Nature of Man, and the Time of the Organization of the Kingdom.

April 19th, I will commence a discussion with Elder R. E. Swaim, of Ft. Scott, to be held in the country, a few miles east of Ft. Scott, and continue for six evenings. The propositions for discussion are as follows:

1. Resolved, That man in death, loses his conscious intelligence.

1. Resolved, That the Kingdom of Jesus Christ was set up on the first Pentecost after the crucifixion.

There are several brethren in the vicinity of Ft. Scott, and any one from a distance, desiring to attend the discussion will be cared for.

I have a discussion in contemplation, with a Baptist minister, at no distant day, on the Design of Baptism, to be held in the north-east part of this county. So the war between truth and error moves on.

G. M. MYERS.

Girard, Kansas, March 22, 1875.

Nothing Hid.

The disclosure of transgression is sooner or later inevitable. There can be no burial of it so deep that in due time it will not have a resurrection. The voice that tells is somewere. The stain is somewhere. The sore and shame are somewhere. The avenger is somewhere. The eternal right is over all. Out of the darkness and silence; out of the misguided seat of friends; out of the eagerness of the guilty to seem indifferent and unconscious; out of the patience and sufferings of the wronged; out of the very emphasis of denial fortified by favorable public opinion; out of all concealments and subterfuges, will come eventually the revelations, the confession. The divine order brings it as sure as the rotting corpse comes to the surface of the water; as sure as the subterraneau fires are in all the earth; as sure as the movement of the universe goes on. There is no special miracle in all this, however singular seems the disclosure, but an eternal miracle through the righteousness and perfect methods of God. It is one of the insanities of the sinner to think that for him, at least, there may be an immunity; that in his case the infinitely wise and gracious constitution of things may be modified. But there is no allowance made for him, be he prince or peasant. Just as certainly as sufficient arsenic kills, so does guilt finally appear.

Earnestness.

Rowland Hill, in once addressing the people of Wotton-under-Edge, raising himself, exclaimed, "Because I am in earnest, men call me an enthusiast. When I first came into this part of the country, I was walking on yonder hill, and saw a gravel-pit fall in and bury three human beings alive. I lifted up my voice for help so loud that I was heard in the town below, at a distance of near a mile; help came, and rescued two of the sufferers. No one called me an enthusiast then; and when I see eternal destruction ready to fall on poor sinners, and about to entomb them irrecoverably in an eternal mass of woe, and call aloud on them to escape, shall I be called an enthusiast now? No, sinner, I am no enthusiast in so doing; and I call on thee aloud to fly for refuge to the hope set before thee in the Gospel."—Christian Standard.

—The famine in Asia Minor is terrible. In one district of 52,000 population, 22,060 have died from want of food.

—The statistics of the famine in Persia are truly appalling. In a town near Teheran, only 290 families remain out of 1,000, and in Teheran itself, 200 persons died weekly of starvation and disease. In six districts the deaths are reported at 170,000.

EDITORIAL DEPARTMENT.

The Great Pyramid.

The reader will find the article in this number, relating to the Great Pyramid, very interesting. Professor Smyth, Astronomer-Royal of Scotland, has brought out some strange and important facts bearing upon the sacred character of the Pyramids. It is claimed by him that Melchizedek was the builder of those magnificent structures which have withstood the ages of war and ruin. It also appears that the year 1881 is to be a year of great events in connection with the land of Israel. This mystic date of the Pyramid points to the same time as that of Daniel, in his celebrated prophecy of the 2300 days. But we shall have occasion to speak of these matters more in detail, hereafter. In the meantime, we trust our readers will examine with care the subject presented in the article above referred to. It is much longer than we desired, but its importance justifies its publication. If the points brought out in this article are true, it is one of the strongest and most convincing proofs of the authenticity of the Bible, and also shows that we are nearing the consummation.

The Approaching Crisis.

That we are approaching an eventful crisis there can be no question. Men of thought, statesmen, and philosophers, as well as theologians, are looking for great and important changes in human history. Everything in morals, politics and religion is in the terrible crucible, and the throes of revolution are portentous. It is useless for men to cry peace in the midst of events like those which surround us. Men are not at rest; they are dissatisfied with the present state of affairs, and long for some permanent and lasting change. That prophet who cries peace will receive the applause of the masses until the unexpected storm breaks in upon the world. Then will come the hour of confusion, dismay and death. Society is sick. The nations are busy preparing for war; religion has the form of godliness but denies the power; the great heart of humanity aches in view of the awful deeds of crime; betrayal and wickedness now everywhere filling the air. Forgeries, defalcations, briberies, wickedness in high places, disrespect to parents and a strange, irreverent spirit, amounting to open unbelief, pervades the masses, and yet the cry is "peace and safety" in the very midst of those awful events which drive the pure in heart to the closet and the altar.

Six million men, taken from their homes and firesides are now armed to the teeth, by the different nations of Europe. The whole German confederation presents the magnificent spectacle of a military camp. Italy is in the midst of enemies who threaten her very life. France is making bright her sword for another bloody conflict. Russia is reaching out for Constantinople, nearly two million able-bodied men await the sounding of the clarion of war. If we look at the religious condition of Europe it is no better. Catholicism is wounded but not dead. The latent spirit of hate and revenge, only awaits the moment to strike for supremacy. The emissaries of the Pope, in all the countries of Europe, are busy in shaping the impending conflict, so that the Roman Pontiff may ride upon the red waves of revolution, and be enabled once more to reign upon the seven hills. Bismarck is a great war chief, and holds the Catholic faith in derision, and esteems Protestantism as no better. Germany, the cradle of religious freedom in modern times, the birthplace of Luther, and battle field of the Reformation, is now led by a man who is bold and defiant, and who denies all faith. Indeed the whole world is now passing through great changes. Truly we are living in a grand and awful time, when to be living is sublime.

The moral, the physical, and the political world, is rocked by adverse waves. "Men's hearts are failing them for fear." Gladly would we draw a curtain over this scene of blood and battle, but we cannot. The moan of approaching events is in the very air. The world itself has become old, and groans beneath the burdens of war and misrule.

But beyond all this there rises a scene of resplendent beauty and grandeur. The war clouds shall be driven from the sky of nations; the earth shall be robed in white beyond the age of blood and death. The long night of suffering shall give way, the prayer of the waiting church shall be answered. The tidings of everlasting peace shall ring from the hills of Judea. The morning of joy shall break in with everlasting brightness. Swords shall be made into plowshares, nations shall learn war no more. Pence that is final shall rest in the valleys and dwell on the hills. Our Lord will come to reign, and fill the earth with gladness. Then earth shall rejoice with heaven, and the blessed day foretold in prophecy, and prayed for by all true hearts, will come.

The approaching crisis is just upon us. Let every soul be upon the watch tower. The day of release and of victory is soon to come. Happy are they who are ready.

Report of Travels.

A brief journal, from memory, of my labors in the proclamation of the gospel during the past three months.

Leaving out dates and details I will confine my narratives to the places and results of my labors—the status of the cause, etc. The warm reception, and the kind treatment I have received from my kind brethren and sisters everywhere, has been a source of great pleasure and personal enjoyment during the cold and dreary winter which is just past. I could not avoid contrasting the cold winds and drifted snows with the calm mild winters of California and Oregon. It has been pleasant and refreshing after having been absent for nearly three years to meet so many long cherished and warm hearted brethren and sisters in Christ among whom I had labored in former years.

My first appointment was at Lanark. Notice of the meeting had been well circulated, and the attendance during eight successive meetings was quite fair. Good interest was manifested from first to last. The little congregation of believers keep up regular meetings; and thus obey the apostolic injunction, not to forsake the assembling of themselves together as the manner of some is. As the result, they keep the fires of interest in the cause of Christ burning. They have a snug church in which to hold their meetings. By their godly walk and conversation they exert a healthy influence upon those with whom they are associated. Our Sunday there was a general gathering of brethren and sisters from Plum River, Black Wolf, and other localities. It seemed like old times to meet so many old pioneers in the cause of truth once more and feel the warm gripe of their hands. It was encouraging to learn that the interest of these brethren and sisters had not in the last abated, also to learn that the large accession of young people to the church East Pum River still maintained their integrity to Christ. May they continue faithful to the end. Accompanied by brother and sister Renner, and brother Gans and Gollifilly, I went in brother Renner's spring wagon to brother Middlekauff's house. After we had rested and partaking of refreshments prepared by sister M——, brother Gans, Mitchell and I took passage with brother Arnolt for Antioch, brother Renner and the rest of our company having to remain until the next day on account of one of brother Renner's mules being sick. We found a large congregation assembled, and waiting for our arrival, there being no one present to preach the word. It was one of the very best conferences I have been privileged to attend at Antioch. The house was well filled with attentive, and I may say apparently interested listeners of the word preached, during all the meetings. It has never been my misfortune to attend an uninteresting conference meeting at Antioch. When the weather will permit and the appointments are well circulated the congregations are generally large. Prejudice in that community is fast breaking away. As usual the interest increased up to the close of the meeting. Forbearance on points of diffrence and brotherly love abounded in all our public meetings, and private interviews. Such meetings are a blessing to all who may attend, and have a good influence in the communities in which they are held. The ecclesia in that place keep up their weekly meetings. Their interest in the blessed truth of the gospel is unabated. We greatly missed sister Myers in the meetings, and at their quiet, hospitable, and otherwise happy home. She died in the triumphs of a living faith, that she will meet her husband, children, brethren, sisters—all who shall be prepared in the last great gathering in the kingdom of God.

The next Friday I reached West Irving, where I endeavored to preach the word every evening until the next Thursday evening. Brethren and sisters were assembled from different parts of the state of Iowa, to attend their annual conference. There was not a general attendence of brethren and sisters from a distance. I missed a number of brethren whom I expected to see at those meetings—among whom I would mention brother Hipher and Briser. During these meetings I had the pleasure of listening to the exposition of the word by brethren, Hill, Braten, and Prune. I also had the privilege of renewing my acquaintance with that old pioneer in the cause, brother White. And while speaking of brother White, I will make my apology for not fulfilling my promise to attend the recent conference near Cole in Iowa. I was detained in consequence of the cars being blockaded with snow drifts until too late to reach the conference. I think from the accounts given by the papers, in reference to the continued snow storms, that the conference was a failure. To return to West Irving. I had the pleasure of forming the acquaintance of a number of brethren and sisters who had been brought into the fold of Christ during my sojourn on the coast. They are an intelligent band of believers who are zealous of good works. They are epistles read and know of all with whom they are associated. They have a house of their own in which to hold their meetings. The house was well filled on Sunday and at all the evening meetings. The best of interest was manifested throughout. I next visited Rochester, Minnesota, where I delivered ten discourses. We occupied a hall in the city on Friday, Saturday, and Sunday evenings, and the Universalist church each evening during the subsequent week. We occupied the hall on the second Sunday morning and evening, and Mr. Blisses' office on Monday evening. We had fair congregations when the weather was not too intensely cold for the people to come out. While the Universalists opened their house, most of them closed their minds against investigation by staying away from the meetings. There were, however, quite a number who attended regularly, and seemed interested in what they heard. There was a wave of excitement, however, caused by a proposition, from some of the leading Universalists, that I should debate with Mr. Crawford, one of their champion's. But when they found that we were willing they backed fairly and squarely out. I promised to return sometime during the spring, when some expect to be immersed. Brother and sister Higbee, and their two daughters, (sister Bliss and Wing), brother Wing, brother and sister Wilsie, are the only obedient believers I know of in that part of Minnesota. Brother Higbee became so impatient in waiting for some one to visit Minnesota who was accustomed to preaching the word of faith that he put on the gospel armor and has been doing efficient work ever since. His invalid daughter is gradually recovering, and they entertain hope that she may partially recover, although she will doubtless be crippled for life. Brother Higbee is afflicted with bronchitis Rouge River Valley, in Oregon, near the California line, is the nearest a specific for lung diseases I know of on the Ammerican Continent. Brother Higbee has a pleasant home, and all the comforts of life, if he can only manage to keep in check this insidious disease during the long cold winter seasons. The climate of Minnesota is said to be delightful during the summer. I avail myself of this opportunity to express my thanks for the kindness and hospitality of Mr. Bliss (whom I hope to be able to call brother ere long) and his amiable companion during my stay with them. I am glad to be able to say that wherever I have labored my brethren have contributed liberally of their means to enable me to continue in the field, and yet discharge all the duties devolving upon me. I can truly say that I have never felt more consecrated to Christ and his blessed cause than at the present time. Never have the glorious promises of the gospel appeared more precious. Never have I realized more sensibly the paramount importance of giving all diligence to make my calling and election sure. May we all be found so doing when our Lord shall return to make up his jewels, Amen.

The End.

What shall be the end of these things? Daniel.

All things earthly have an end. Days end, seasons end, and human life has its terminations. Nations have their prescribed duration, and dispensations their allotted course. The utterances of prophecy are predictions of coming changes, and the records of history are only the memorials of things that have passed away. Deep-graven on the many-folded strata of our globe, and written on the granitic leaves of its age-lasting rocks, are the histories of evolutions, and revolutions, that, under the guidance of created wisdom, resulted in the formation of this earth, as the abode of an order of intelligencies capable of worshipping the Creator, and possessing the rich inheritance a heavenly Father had prepared for his obedient creatures. Sin entered; creation was smitten with a curse, and its possessors with disease and death, and what shall be the end of all the moral and physical disorder under which creation groans and frail humanity decays and perishes? Analogy and history teach impressive lessons; and revelation displays the terrific future from its unfolding scrolls, written within and without, in characters of "lamentation and mourning, and woe."

All earthly dominions are nearing a predestined end. Analogy and history are here in accord with divine revelation. The mighty empires and kingdoms of antiquity had their times of growth, maturity, decay, and dissolution, and now where the palaces and temples,—the princely residences and sumptuous abodes of wealth, made up the magnificence of cities that were the wonder of the world, and where surrounding countries teemed with population and riches,—the contemplative traveller stops amid frightful desolations, and as he stands in the great graveyards where the multitudes of buried nations sleep below, he writes the epitaph of the entombed past in his "Ruins of Empires."

Prophecy pre-doomed these kingdoms to the ruin with which they were finally overtaken. Babylon was once "the glory of kingdoms, the beauty of the Chaldees' excellency,"—but her "broad walls have been broken down, and her high gates burned in the fire." The satyr dances where the idolatrous multitudes disported, and the doleful creature burrows under the ruins of the once golden city.

Thebes, the city of vast treasures, with its hundred gates, from which the trumpet-blast of war was wont to summon 20,000 armed chariots,—"that was situate among the rivers, and whose rampart was the sea" fell under the maledictions of the holy seers. "The Lord of Hosts, the God of Israel, saith, Behold I will punish the multitude of No, and Pharaoh, and Egypt, with their gods and their kings;" and the historian records that "the Persian invader completed the destruction that the Babylonian had begun; the hammer of Cambyses leveled the proud statue of Rameses, his torch consumed the temples and palaces of the city of the hundred gates." The Arab pitches his tent today amid its crumbling columns, and drifting sands cover the ruins of its former magnificence. History is said to repeat itself. Dispensations have closed in judgment; and the great epochs of history teach by analogies. The deluge, and the destruction of Jerusalem, are historical lessons teaching us how the present age will end. The overthrow of the guilty cities of the plain, prefigure the destruction of modern Sodoms, and, especially, of that great metropolis of crime and abomination,—that seat and center of spiritual iniquity,—detestable Rome.

This dispensation will close in all the horrors and calamities of the most destructive wars among the nations of the Roman world. The arbitrament of the Italian and Eastern questions will be rendered on the battle field, and the sword will cut the knots that diplomacy has not the skill to untie. France is making every effort to regain her position as the leading, dictating, government of Europe. Germany has foes without and more deadly foes within. The noxious virus of Vaticanism is destroying every sentiment of loyality that ever, existed in the hearts of the Catholic population, and the allegience due the German Kaiser, is transferred to the Pontifical Tiara. Ultramontane hatred levels its deadly shafts at Bismarck, and between progressionists, socialists, democrats, ultramontanes, and old conservatives, the Prince Premier leads a harrassed life that fast wears away a constitution of iron. England orders her Eastern forces to be ready for the most sudden emergency; and while intensely anxious to guard her rich Indian possessions from becoming the prey of a mighty, overshadowing power, Gladstone finds a serpent of formidable dimensions coiled up in Brittania's bosom, ready to strike its poisonous fangs into the bosom that has warmed it into life. The Russian bear, and the Roman viper distract her attention, and to preserve her provinces from the depredations of the former, and her domestic peace from the intolerant aggressions of the latter, taxes the ingenuity of her wisest statesmen to the utmost.

France is devoting all her available resources to the creation and equipment of an immense army. A long coveted prize has hitherto eluded the grasp of the Northern Autocrat. For its acquisition a carefully planned scheme is about ready for execution. The Turk's days in Europe are about numbered, and Constantinople, the "key of the world," is about to be wrested from the hands of the Moslem. As to Italy, an expression of Gladstone's will suffice to show upon what a precarious throne Victor Emmanuel is seated. He says, speaking of the tone of the papal organs: "It leads many to the painful and revolting conclusion that there is a fixed purpose among the secret inspirers of Roman policy, to pursue by the road of force, upon the arrival of any favorable opportunity, their favorite project of re-erecting the terrestrial throne of the popedom, even if it can only be re-erected on the ashes of the city and amidst the whitening bones of the people." In the late massacre at Acapulco, the bloodthirsty spirit of Jesuitism cropped out, and it was there shown how ready the mother of Harlots is to put down all worship founded on the Word of God, and by her old arguments of fire and fagots compel the disciples of Jesus to abandon the Bible for her corrupt and hateful dogmas. All these things are warnings of that approaching time of trouble, such as has never been paralleled in all human history.

Europe is becoming one vast armed military encampment. The preparations for aggressive and defensive war will, it is calculated, bring an aggregate of six to eight millions of men into the ranks of warfare, armed with the most effective and destructive weapons, and trained and disciplined in the most scientific manner. The portentious clouds of the coming revolutionary storm darken the whole political horizon. The mighty men are awakening; the armories are forging the implements of death; and the shocks and onsets o. the Armageddon collisions will shake the foundations of every throne in Europe.

In the coming revolutions, the elements composing the Great Image will be ground to powder, and scattered as the chaff of the summer threshing floors by the whirlwind tornadoes of wrath. The body of the fourth beast, that frightful nondescript, that terrible megatherium, that symbolizes Rome with all its pagan and papal appendages, will finally be destroyed and given to the burning flame. The 2300 days, symbolically years, are about to terminate. A certain definite portion of this period was allotted to the Jewish nation after their complete restoration under Nehemiah. The length of this period was 490 years; and it expired at the destruction of Jerusalem, A. D. 70 or 71. The remaining part, or 1810 years, spans the time of the Gentiles, and terminates 1880 or 1881. A grand crisis in national history is imminent. The prophetical periods measure the duration of kingdoms, and were given for this purpose. None of them give the time of Christ's second coming. He comes somewhere amid the scenes of strife and trouble and brings peace and rest to the world. For that coming we must watch, as the day and hour of the second advent are hidden from the ken of mortals. Let us go forth with girded robes, and shining lamps, and labor faithfully with the church in its last work. So that when our Lord comes we may be found of Him in peace, and share the honors and glories of the everlasting kingdom.

Fellowship.

EDITOR OF THE POST:—

Your correspondent, Dr. Graves, in a late number of the "Post," has made a very injurious defence of what is commonly called "close communion." It is on the ground of the difference between "church fellowship" and "christian fellowship." He fellowships all christians of every sect with a christian fellowship on account of their faith in Christ, which is an internal act. But his church fellowship is limited to members of his own church, and is founded upon an agreement in a certain external rite, i. e., baptism, or immersion. Now, if we "go to the law and testimony," or to the Bible, as he advises, we discover no distinction whatever between church and christian fellowship. When men became christians, they at the same time became members of the church of Christ, and fellowshipped each other as christians and at the same time, as members of the christian church. Their christian fellowship was founded upon obedience to the first great command of baptism, and other commands of Christ,—as upon their common faith in Christ,—indeed, the act of the will necessary to baptism is as really internal as faith. It is not therefore proper, to rear a superstructure of christian fellowship upon faith as internal, and build church fellowship upon obedience to Christ as external. Among apostolic christians there was but one fellowship. When Peter's hearers on the day of Pentecost cried out, "men and brethren what shall we do?" he answered, "repent and be baptised every one of you for the remission of sins." "Then, they that gladly received his word, were baptized, and the same day there were added unto them about three thousand souls." How were these persons added to the church? Through a cordial reception or belief of the word preached, repentance and baptism. Baptism, in this inspired record, preceded remission of sins, as truly as faith and repentance. "And they continued steadfastly in the apostle's doctrine and fellowship." This was the church and christian fellowship of baptized believers alone. It was preceded, it is true, by a genuine baptism, but, the remission or forgiveness of sins too, was always preceded by baptism. Ananias said to Saul, "Arise and be baptized and wash away your sins." Here, the forgiveness of sins follows baptism. Will you extend christian fellowship to the unforgiven and unreleased? Believers "are buried with Christ by baptism into his death." How gain the benefits of his death without this baptismal burial? "Planted in the likeness of his death that ye may be in the likeness of his resurrection." Rom. vi. Again Paul says, Gal. iii. 27, "As many of you as were baptized into Christ,—have put on Christ." We can not get into Christ,—into his body which is the church—without baptism, or put Him on in any other way.

Can you recognize as christians those not baptized into Christ—those who have not put Him on? Said Jesus, "Preach the gospel to every creature, he that believeth (the gospel) and is baptized shall be saved." Suppose they are not baptized, will they be saved? But many, it is said, adopt a "substitute" for baptism. Will a "substitute" save or be obedience to the Divine command? And how are the disobedient just as good christians as anybody? If those, who refuse or neglect to be baptized for, (or in order to) the remission of their sins, "are the dear children of God, and as dear to the heart of Jesus as any of his great family," then, they are good enough to come to the table of the Lord! Shall mortal man assume the responsibility of excluding from his table the many who are so dear to Him? Consistency requires that real baptism be esteemed essential, not only to church fellowship, but to forgiveness, christian character, and ultimate salvation, or that it is of little or no consequence.

Brother Reed, the above was written in answer to any article in the "Saturday Evening Post," of this city, (Grand Rapids). The article was by Dr. Graves, a Baptist minister. It was declined by the "Post," because its doctrine was not popular. If you think it is adopted to other latitudes beside this, you can publish in the RESTITUTION.

Kind Words.

Kind words are easily and quickly spoken, they neither burn nor blast, and we have never heard of any mental trouble arising from them. Though they do not cost much, yet they accomplish much. They help one's own good nature and good will. Soft words soften our own soul. Angry words are fuel to the flames of wrath, and make them blaze more fiercely.

Kind words make other people good-natured. Cold words freeze people, and hot words scorch them, and bitter words make them bitter, and wrathful words make them wrathful. There is such a rush of all other words, in our days, that it seems desirable to give kind words a chance among them. There are vain words, and idle words, and hasty words, and spiteful words, and silly words, and empty words, and boisterous words, and warlike words. Kind words also produce their own image in men's souls. And a beautiful image it is. They soothe, and quiet, and comfort the hearer. They shame him out of his sour, morose, unkind feelings. We have not yet begun to use kind words in such abundance as they ought to be used.

From Brother Lyon.

BROTHER REED:—

I have spent three months in Canada the past winter, preaching the word of the Gospel. Congregations in many places quite large and intelligent. Quite a number embraced the truth. I return again by the urgent request of the lovers of truth, in May next. Quite a number will then be immersed into the name of the Anointed One, for the remission of sins.

My time was spent mostly in the region where I commenced to labor twenty-four years ago the coming summer; a more pleasant reception I would not wish for. A deep interest was awakened in the minds of quite a number who had never heard us before. Sold quite a number of my works to those belonging to the nominal churches.

But my heart was made sad from the fact, that death was holding in his cold embrace some fourteen who were the fruits of my labors. Among the number was Wm. Moses, M. D., Alexander Story and John Gambell, elders of the church—men of worth. At the time I left to labor in this new field, some thirteen years ago, we could count on some seventy. I have immersed some since, but death and the removal of a number of families into other parts, has made the number thin. However the gathering day will come. Amen.

A Curious Emblem.

One of the emblems in the coat-of-arms of the city of Glasgow, Scotland, is a fish with a ring in its mouth. Its origin is thus explained: An old man made his young wife very unhappy by his continual jealousy and upbraidings. One day in a fit of desperation, she drew her wedding ring from her finger while crossing one of the bridges, and threw it into the stream, saying, "If I am virtuous and true, this ring will come back to me." A few days after the aged gentleman bought a salmon and carried it home for his dinner. The cook, on preparing it for the table, found the ring.

Faithful Abraham.

BY REQUEST.

The morning sun rose bright and clear,
On Abram's tent it gaily shone.
While all was bright and cheerful there—
All save the patriarch's heart alone.

While God's command arose to view,
It forced into his eye a tear:
For all a father's love was there,
And nature fondly lingered near.

The simple morning feast was spread,
And Sarah at the banquet smiled;
Joy o'er her face its lustre shed,
For near her sat her only child.

The charms that please a monarch's heart,
Upon his brow had left their trace;
His highly anguished destiny
Was written on his furrowed face.

But lo! the father turned away,
And walked the lonely tent apart;
He felt his fortitude give way,
For nature whispered in his heart

Of most the son to whom was given
The promise of the blessed land,
Heir to the choicest gift of heaven,
Be slain by a fond father's hand?

Arise, my son, the cruel fill,
And stare the scrip with due supply;
For we must seek Moriah's hill,
And offer there a sacrifice.

The mother raised a sp'rkling eye,
For all a mother's love was there;
She feared the desert dr ar and dry,
she feared the savage lurking there.

Abram beheld, and made reply—
"On him from whom all blessings flow,"
My sister, e'er by faith rely;
'Tis God's command, and we must go

The smitten son, in haste obeyed.
The scrip was filled, the mules prepared,
And with the third day's twilight shade
Moriah's lofty hill appeared.

The servants at a distance wait—
Alone ascend the son and sire.
The wood on Isaac's shoulders laid;
The wood to build his funeral pyre!

While on the mountain brow they stood,
In childish wonder, Isaac cries
My father, lo! the fire and wood,
But where's the lamb for sacrifice?

No passion swayed th monarch's mind.
O! hear his answer, low and calm,
With meekly voice and look resigned—
God will himself provide a lamb.

But lo! the father bound his son,
And laid him on the funeral pile,
And then stretched forth his trembling hand
And took the knife to slay his child.

While Abram raised the blade full high,
So execute his God's command,
An angel's voice as from the sky,
Cried, Abram, spare thine only son!

But let no pen profane, like mine,
On holiest theme too rashly dare;
Turn to the Book of Books divine,
And read the faithful story there.

The above beautiful poetry, whose author is not known, I send at request of brethren for publication. "Your brother in Christ,

"For the RESTITUTION."

"The Nature of Adam."

To me it is passing strange that there should be any disagreement among men of thought, and especially those of a philosophic turn of mind. For as has been said, in wisdom, that if Adam had been made immortal, why, then it would have been sheer nonsense to have subjected him to a probation under a law, the penalty of which was death. "Truly spoken," says another. "But had Adam been created mortal, he would have died as a necessary consequence of his creation." We answer yes, unless the author of his being interposes a remedy. But says the objector: "We are taught in the word of truth that his death was the result of his disobedience;" yes that was the proximate cause. But the remote cause was he "was made subject to vanity," (or decomposition), when he came from the plastic hand of his creator. Being made in this condition, and out of the garden of Eden, where in the wisdom of God only, the tree of life was made to grow. The Lord took the man, mortal as he was, and put him into the garden. A remedial scheme was now accessable for his mortal wants, and he might avoid death by obedience or incur it by "disobedience." But as the law of God that man violated, was of a moral nature, and did not in itself effect man physically at all. If the penalty of the law was ever literally executed upon the physical mass, as God had said it should be, it is very apparent that he must be removed from access to the tree of life, as the remedy for his mortal dying nature as a physical being, while he was obedient to his creator, as a moral governor. Therefore he must be, and was expelled from the infallible panacea for all his mortal wants, when by his creator he was driven out of the garden of Eden, lest he continue to eat and live forever, and so he drove him out and also kept him out. I am reminded while reading the philosophic, and as they suppose, very logical productions of some of our brethren on the above subject, of a circumstance that transpired years ago in Carbondale City, Penn. I had but just finished my discourse and also closed the meeting, when I was a little surprised by a fine looking, apparently well educated, and very bold gentleman, stepping forward and looking intently at me and saying "Sir, I understand you to say that sin was the cause of death." I responded, "Sir, I quoted the words of the apostle Paul in Romans where he says that "sin entered the world of death by sin," "yes," said he, "and do you call that inspiration, sir!" "I do sir," said I. "Very well" said he, "I can show from that same book that death attains entirely from another cause." I immediately handed him the book saying "do it sir, if you please." He hastily took the book and turned to Gen. iii. 19, and read. "For dust thou art and unto dust shalt thou return." "Now sir," said he defiantly, "if there is any meaning at all in that language, and statement, it is that the man should go to dust, because he came from dust, and not because he had sinned, and now reconcile it sir with your quotations from Romans if you can." "O," said I, "that is easy if one only knows how." Then in a brief and comprehensive way I showed him that man being made by his creator a decaying and dying animal, as a physical and material being. His maker shielded him from the attacks of nature's laws, while obedient, by an access to, and the privilege of eating of the tree of life. But when Adam violated Jehovah's moral precept, that forbade him to eat of the tree of the knowledge of good and evil, that in order in the execution of the penalty, death, Jehovah had to, and did, remove the man out of the garden, and away from the tree of life, and the result was man was, as a physical and material being, in the very same condition that he would have been, if his creator had have made him, as he did, and then left him to himself without moral government, and without access to the tree of life as a preventive of decay and death by the laws of his own animal nature. "Oh," said he, "I see you make the two causes produce the one effect." Most certainly said I, and he dropp'd his eyes to the floor and in a silent, meditative mood, walked out of the house, and to say the least, he was evidently convinced that the Bible, taking that view of the subject, was certainly a common sense book. Now suppose, that when that learned infidel, and spiritualist, for I learned afterwards that this was his religious belief, and character, in this public manner had attacked me, and assailed the authenticity of the sound scriptures as he did, if I had been bedagged with the notion that Adam was not mortal only by, and after his disobedience. What a war of words there very likely would have been, on my part growing out of my ignorance, and on his part, growing out of the lack of knowledge. Yes a war of words as we often see where infidels, spiritualists, and very zealous professors. But not highly qualified to expand the sound books, thus jangle, and both are offended, disgusted, and all for the reason that neither have, or know "the truth." O how important are James' words, "My brethren be not many masters, for in many things we offend all," that is, "we all err." May God by the gentleness of His wisdom, and spirit, lead us all into "the truth."

C. F. SWEET.

Look Up!

Church of the living God! the Master says "look up," Luke xxi. 28. Do you ask me why? The soul-inspiring answer is, "because your redemption draweth nigh." Yes; eternal redemption at the putting on of immortality at Christ's glorious appearing.

Now the bowed head is the symbol of sorrow, but the uplifted head betokens joy. "Look up and lift up your heads" he commands. Or, as one renders it, "Raise yourselves, and lift up your heads." Or, as Wickliffe phrases it, "Behold ye, and raise ye your heads." Looking down begets weakness and savors of "the earth, earthy," looking up inspires courage, hope, and might. Indicates the watchful spirit, and tells the world that the heart is in heaven from whence you expect the Deliverer. You cannot fail to do this without proving disobedient to the Lord. "Raise yourselves, droop no longer, arise and be strong, have certain knowledge of the approach of the great day!" he cries. Will you do it? For centuries the bride of the Lamb has been a prey to death. Her foes have been countless, sleepless, and unrelenting; she walking her bloody, lonely path with bowed head and eyes cast down in sorrow. The grave has ever been before her, yawning to devour. But as if in expectation of a strong deliverer from the skies, she has buried her dead with their faces turned upward, and the eyes in the right direction,—up. These on opening at his bidding shall catch speedily the sight of the descending King. For the trumpet shall sound, and the good, translated skyward to meet him, shall then be like him forever. Now he is soon to arrive. We have witnessed the predicted signs. We know the proper and plainly revealed final position,—let us take it. It is the posture of expectant joy. It is the glorious privilege as well as the sacred duty of the last generation of christians, to go about with their heads lifted up. It will be their happy privilege to stand at the bar of judgment with their heads lifted, for the shame of sin will be exchanged for the boldness of holiness. It will be theirs to march through the golden gates with their heads up. "Thou, O Lord, art a shield for me, my glory, and the lifter up of my head." Psa. iii. 3. O christians, can we afford to become guilty by disregarding the express orders of our King, in refusing at the proper time to look towards the door of the heavenly tabernacle, about to swing back on its hinges and let forth the Bridegroom! The time has assuredly come. In the broad clear light of the breaking day there is no excuse for the recreant, the indifferent, the cold-hearted.

What an unfailing well of joy in trial; what a source of strength against the forces of sin and evil, what a weapon of warfare against Satan, this belief would everywhere prove to the dear church of God, if she would but open her eyes and perceive and embrace it. What an all-absorbing joy, what an unfailing hope as the conflict deepens, and the fierce, evil powers enhance its intensity. The great heart of christendom would be stirred with a mighty gladness; an exultant shout would ring out through all the camp of the weary hosts; the enemy would hear the pean of victory sounded in sonance, while the multitude of believers, united in the "one hope," would be girdled as with invincible strength from the everlasting arm of the Almighty. Then lift the head, O weary watcher. Turn the eyes to perceive the angel courers of the returning Redeemer. With ears intent, wait to catch the first signal of the mighty trumpet's blast. Look up, behold it soundeth speedily, and the bell that marks the incoming of eternity is about to strike, ONE! To the last minute do as the Lord bids, and look up. Keep the head erect, and with it the heart clean, it at the end you would be "caught up to join the Lord in the air." Watters, watchers, workers, HEADS UP!—D. T. Taylor.

Nature and the Bible.

Nature and the Bible: A Course of Lectures Delivered in New York in December, 1874, on the Moree Foundation of the Union Theological Seminary. By J. L. Dawson, L. L. D., F. R. S., F. G. S., Principal and Vice Chancellor of McGill University, Author of "Archaia," etc. 12mo., pp. 256. New York: Robert Carter & Brothers.

Dr. Dawson represents that portion of the school of modern science that adheres with unshaken fidelity to a belief in the plenary inspiration of the Scriptures; to the literal word of the Old and New Testaments; in the descent of mankind from the primitive pair in the Garden of Eden; in the divinity of Christ; in the authenticity of miracles, and in the efficacy of prayer. The argument running through the six lectures enclosed in the present volume endeavors to show that the Bible is in perfect harmony with the latest revelations of science; that wherever it refers to natural facts for illustrations of spiritual truths, its accuracy is remarkable,—unexampled in any other literature.

The great apparent contradiction between the Biblical narrative of the earth, and the history of its origin as determined by geology, is dissipated, according to Dr. Dawson, but the explanation that the creative days of the first chapters of Genesis really mean zons, and should have been so rendered by the translator. The reasoning by which this harmony between Genesis and geology is established is not new to the intelligent reader. It has been presented so many times that all the various propositions and deductions made use of are already well known. The table presenting concisely the parallelism of the Biblical cosmogony with the physical and geological history of the earth will be examined with interest, however, and we therefore give it entire:

BIBLICAL EPOCH.	CORRELATED PERIODS.
The Beginning. The earth without form, and void. Darkness on the face of the abyss.	Creation of Matter and Force. Condensation of nebulous and other matter to form the solar system. The earth a vaporous mass.
Day One. Creation of light (Or, institution of Day and Night.	Refused light in the solar system. The earth has a photosphere. Condensation of incoherent matter within the earth's orbit. Decay of terrestrial photosphere.
Day Second. Universal ocean. The expanse placed in the midst of the waters.	Water condensed on the earth's crust, and covered with a dense mass of vapors. The imitation of the arrangements of the atmosphere as now existing.
Day Third. The dry land appears. Vegetation introduced.	The earth's crust thrown into folds. The first continents. Pre-Laurentian vegetation, known only Paleozoic.
Day Fourth. Luminaries arranged in relation to the earth.	Beginning of the Archæan or Pre-Eozoic age of geology. Completion of existing state of the solar system.
Day Fifth. Creation of the invertebrates and fishes (chevalrin of the waters. Creation of great Tanalmia, or reptilian animals, and Birds.	Paleozoic Time, or age of invertebrates. Mesozoic Time, or age of reptiles.
Day Sixth. Introduction of mammalia as dominant. Creation of man and of the Edenic animals.	Neozoic or Tertiary Time—Culmination of mammals. Close of Tertiary and introduction of the Human Period.
Day Seventh. The rest of the Creator. Historical Human Period.	Modern Time—Age of Man.
Day Eighth. Immortality of the saints. The new Heavens and the new earth.	In the Future.

Dr. Dawson agrees with science as to the antiquity of man, accepting the testimony of geology to his existence at the period when the mammoth ranged through the forests of the Old and New Worlds. According to Pictet, ninety-eight mammals are known by their remains to have been contemporary in Europe with primitive man. Of these, fifty-seven still survive. In Britian, Dawkins estimates that fifty-three species of mammals were coeval with the mammoth. Twenty-eight of these now inhabit Britain, and fourteen have become wholly extinct. "It would thus seem," remarks Dr. Dawson, "that man entered Europe at a time when its mammalian fauna was richer than now, and when it was a densely wooded region, into which he straggled from his Edenic center of creation, with a few of the animals connected with him there."

With regard to the Bible miracles, Dr. Dawson declares that they "do not involve the suspension of natural laws, but only arrangements under these laws, or the operation of unknown laws: which, however, may be as inexplicable to us as if they were contraventions of law. Prayer, in the Scriptural sense of it, is an appeal to One whose knowledge and power over his own works are capable of effecting results to us not only impossible, but inconceivable. In maintaining the possibility of miracle and the power of prayer, along with the unchangeable law of God, the Bible is thus on higher scientific ground than that of any of those who call these in question."

"Probation."

What are we to understand constitutes human probation? Is it simply mortal life irrespective of mental, moral or religious culture? Webster defines it "moral trial," the state of man in the present life in which he has the opportunity of proving his character, and being qualified for a happier state. Does human life under all circumstances constitute probation? If so heathen, idiots, and infants have their day of grace and trial, regardless of moral or religious light, and pass away as supernumeraries of the race, and in the event of no future probation might rest in eternal oblivion.

But no. "All that are in their graves shall hear his voice, and come forth, some to everlasting life, and some to everlasting contempt." Are there but two classes included in this promiscuous assemblage? We read that they that are Christ's at his coming, (1 Cor. xv. 23,) will be the first resurrection (of saints) and that the rest of the dead live not again until the thousand years are finished. Now is it reasonable and scriptural to conclude that all after the first resurrection will be obdurate sinners, who have rejected the truth? or will not the greater number of them be those to whom the law had never come, and consequently not amenable, for "where there is no law there is no transgression." Rom. iv. 15. God is no respecter of persons, and hence to deal equally with all, the Gospel must needs be preached to all, or a state of probation seems justly due to all men, and if providential necessity has shut out the light of divine truth in the present life, can they be judged as probationers? This is a "desideratum" of great moment, in judging how much light is necessary to constitute one's life a probationary one. There needs no a capacity to entertain truth and then such means employed as shall present truth to the understanding.

We hear it sometimes asked if there can be two probations to one person? So far as I understand the age to come brethren, they only claim one, which will be either in this life or the life to come. Let us therefore strive to make our calling and election sure, that we may not be ashamed at his coming.

R. WILLARD.

Haddonfield, N. J., March 21, 1875.

The Question.

And now for my question: Men and brethren, will you rally around me, and stand by me, whilst holding up the doctrine of life only in the Son of God, or will you not? That is the question which I now put before you, and I ask for your decision? I know full well the prejudices in favor of doctrines we have received in childhood. I received them in the most sigit school; but now I am committed to this glorious truth, that there is eternal life only in Christ. I have sacrificed much—at least, it was much to me, and thereby I have at least proved my sincerity—to maintain this doctrine in the pulpit and through the press, and I am ready to sacrifice all, for what I believe to be divinely true. If you stand by me, and cheer me in this trial, the day may come when you will thank God for it; but if you think right to desert me, as some have done, and others threaten to do, do it, and may God go with you! But my position is taken. Here, as elsewhere, I have argued this with my voice and with my pen, and I emphatically state to you my firm determination that I shall continue to declare what I have this night maintained, respecting the living and the dead, the past and the future, and all that we owe to our Savior, Jesus Christ. If you stand by me, and encourage me, it is well; but if you think it right to do otherwise, perhaps it will be well, too. My course is taken, and that course I will follow, by the help of my glorious Master, who only hath immortality, and whom to know is life eternal. Amen.—Dr. Lacake.

THE RESTITUTION

The Great Pyramid.

Professor C. Piazzi Smyth, Astronomer-Royal for Scotland, has, within the last few months, published a remarkably work of over five hundred pages, with seventeen explanatory plates, entitled "Our Inheritance in the Great Pyramid," which appears to have a remarkable bearing on science, as well as some of the leading prophetic events of the world, but more especially in connection with Israel.

Professor Smyth, in a small pamphlet recently issued, containing some correspondence with the Royal Society of London, says: "The Great Pyramid is the highest and holiest subject that can ever occupy a scientific society, supposed now, according to an increased body of evidence, to have been erected under the eye of Melchizedek, and according to a design furnished to him by Divine Inspiration."

The Great Pyramid stands in latitude 30°, at the centre of an arc which sweeps the Delta of Lower Egypt. Isaiah appears to allude to this massive monument in the following language: "In that day shall there be an Altar to the Lord in the midst of the land of Egypt, and a pillar at the border thereof to the Lord. And it shall be for a sign, and for a witness unto the Lord of hosts in the land of Egypt." Isa. xix. 19, 20. This witness testimony of the Great Pyramid, according to the Astronomer-Royal, was only to be made manifest in the Latter Days, and in accordance with what God had purposed upon mankind.

The Great Pyramid also stands in the geographical centre of all the land portions of the globe. Its base covers over thirteen square acres, and it is built upon a rock levelled for the purpose. The four corner stones are let into the main rock, and the four sides of the building face exactly the four cardinal points of the heavens.

THE SACRED CUBIT.

The ten-millionth part of the earth's semi-axis of rotation is 25 Pyramid inches, or 25·026 British inches; which was suggested by Sir Isaac Newton, in his days, to be about the correct length of the Sacred Cubit employed by Moses. Prof. Piazzi Smyth regards it as more than probable that the British inch was once the exact 25th part of the Sacred Cubit, and precisely the same as the Pyramid inch, but that through centuries it has deteriorated in length by a very small decimal.

The length of the base side of the Great Pyramid is 9,130 Pyramid inches; and this number divided by the Sacred Cubit, or 25, gives exactly the number of days, hours and minutes in the solar year; and by measuring the four sides, it gives the leap-year, there being precisely that difference in the length of one of those base sides.

HEIGHT OF THE PYRAMID.

The vertical of the Great Pyramid being 5,813 Pyramid inches (484 feet) is the radius of a theoretical circle, the length of whose curved circumference is exactly equal to the sum of the lengths of the four straight sides of the actual and practical square base of the building; and as the date of its building has been determined, by its star-pointings, as well as by internal measurements in Pyramid inches, to be 2170 B. C., it therefore displays science three thousand years in advance of its own time.

The blocks of white limestone casing-stones, which once covered its entire four sides, forming a level and smooth surface, were nearly five feet in height, eight feet in breadth, and twelve feet in length, and joined together with a film of cement no thicker than a sheet of silver paper.

Prof. Smyth supposes that the founder of the Great Pyramid knew both the size and shape of the earth exactly, and intentionally chose the unique diameter of its axis of rotation as a reference for the standard of measure in that building.

DISTANCE TO THE SUN.

Mr. Wm. Petrie, C. E., has computed from the Great Pyramid, the distance to the Sun at 91,840,000 miles; while, a few years ago, one group of astronomers computed the distance to be 91,500,000, and another group give it as 92,500,000; thus the Pyramid sun-distance, falling between the computations of those two groups of modern astronomers, is perhaps as nearly correct as human science will ever determine.

The mouth of the entrance-passage is about 49 feet above the ground on that side, and descends by a very small bore, leading in a straight line to a subterranean rock-chamber 100 feet below the centre of the base of the whole built monument. This subterranean chamber is 46 feet long by 28 broad, the sides and ceiling of which are finished, but there is no attempt at a finish of the bottom.

The ascending-passage, leading from the entrance-passage to the Grand Gallery, has its junction with the entrance-passage at the distance of about 1,046 inches from its mouth, and is 47 inches in height, and 44 inches in breadth, and is at an elevation of 26 degrees. The Grand Gallery being 28 feet in height, is seven times the height of the passage leading thereto, and is also at an elevation of 26 degrees.

Near the entrance of the Grand Gallery, there is a hole or passage, which descends almost perpendicularly to a natural grotto in the rock beneath the Pyramid's base, and from thence the passage descends still lower until it forms a junction with the descending entrance-passage, a short distance above where the entrance-passage leads into the subterranean rock-chamber, which chamber is over 140 feet beneath the lower end of the Grand Gallery.

The Grand Gallery leads to the Ante-Chamber adjoining the King's Chamber. The doorway into the Ante-Chamber from the Grand Gallery is only 42 inches high, as is also the height of the doorway entering the King's Chamber from the Ante-Chamber, while the wall of the doorway into the King's Chamber is 100 inches thick.

THE ANTE-CHAMBER.

The Ante-Chamber is 116 Pyramid inches in length, 65 inches in breadth from east to west, and 148 inches in height. The grand symbol in this little chamber on the south wall is its division into five perpendicular spaces, while on the east and west walls there is a granite leaf, with a boss on each leaf. Here we have the Sacred, or the Great Pyramid's own, Cubit divided into five in the shape of this boss on the granite leaf, just five inches broad. "And further, that fifth part of that cubit of the Great Pyramid's symbolical design is divided before our eyes into five again; for the thickness of this remarkable boss is one-fifth of its breadth. So there you have the division of the Sacred Cubit into five times five inches."

THE KING'S CHAMBER.

The King's Chamber is shielded from the outside heat and cold, by a thickness of nowhere less than 180 feet of solid masonry. The principle of fives is a grand tendency in the Pyramid, and is carried out even in its temperature; that is one-fifth the distance between the freezing and boiling points of water above the former. The temperature of the King's Chamber is 50 degrees, which is the mean temperature both of all lands inhabited by man, and the most suitable degree to man.

The size of the King's Chamber, in Pyramid inches, is 412 in length, 206 in breadth, and 230 in height. In this chamber there is a stone coffer of the same commensurable capacity as the sacred Ark of the Covenant, the fourth part of the cubic contents of which is equivalent to the quarter corn measure of the British farmer.

The division into five, of the wall-courses of the King's Chamber of granite, sized to an equal height, strikes the eye of the traveler, as he enters the low doorway into that magnificently finished room, which is equal to fine jewelry polish. Each course round the room is about four feet in height, except the lowest course which sinks one-tenth below the floor, so that the top of the lowest course is on a level with the top of the granite coffer. Two separate sets of measured numbers in Pyramid inches, for the length, breadth and height of the lowest course, give when divided by the coffer's contents, 50. So we have the multiple of five times five equals 25, and twice 25 equals 50. Now 50 is a prophetic or Jubilee number; and it is somewhat striking that the King's Chamber stands on the 50th course of masonry from the Pyramid's base, whereon also stands the granite coffer, a vessel with commensurable capacity proportions between its inside and out, and wall and floor in a room with five courses composed of 100 stones, and with a capacity proportion of 50 to the five of these courses.

THE QUEEN'S CHAMBER.

Fifty Pyramid inches form the one ten-millionth of the earth's axis of rotation, and consequently the one ten-millionth of the semi-axis is 25 Pyramid inches, the exact length, as already stated, of the sacred cubit. So we see that the King's Chamber is the standard of 50, or of two cubits length, while the Queen's Chamber is the standard of 25, or one cubit length, for it stands on the 25 courses of masonry composing the Pyramid. The passage which enters the Queen's Chamber is a horizontal one, leading from near the lower end of the Grand Gallery. The one grand architectural feature of the Queen's Chamber is the niche in the east wall, which symbolizes, by its amount of eccentric displacement in the room, just one cubit.

We might expect to find that one ten-millions of cubit inches are indicated by this room's contents, as against the two ten-millions of the King's Chamber, which is almost exactly the case.

WHAT JOSEPHUS SAYS.

The statement is made by Josephus that the descendants of Seth, in whose line afterwards came Noah, Shem, Melchizedek, Abraham and Moses, betook themselves to studying astronomy, with the special approval and help of Almighty God; and when they had perfected their discoveries, they set forth from their own land, (which was probably Mesopotamia) to the land of Siriad or Egypt, and inscribed their discoveries there in two pillars, one of stone, and one of brick.

SACRED ARK OF THE COVENANT.

The Ark was kept in the Holiest of Holies, and with other things, contained the Divine Autograph of the Law of God written on stone. The Ark had a crown of gold round about the rim, and there was placed over it a lid made of pure gold, called the mercy-seat, representing the throne of God. The size of the Ark, as given by Moses, is two and a half cubits long, one and a half high, and one and a half broad, outside measure; which being reduced to Pyramid inches, on Sir Isaac Newton's and Prof. Smyth's evolution of the sacred cubit, and allowing one and three-fourths inches for thickness of sides and ends, and two inches for the bottom, would yield for the inside cubical contents, 71,213 cubic Pyramid inches; which corresponds with the cubical contents of the inside measure of the granite coffer in the King's Chamber in the Great Pyramid.

"Such, then, looked at in the light of science, three thousand three hundred years after its day of construction, must have been the sacred Ark of the Covenant, built according to the inspiration command received by Moses, after he had left Egypt for ever."

SOLOMON'S MOLTEN SEA.

Both the Molten Sea of Solomon's Temple, and the Ark of the Covenant were what science in that day, could not possibly have devised, that is to have made them earth commensurable. The Molten Sea contained 2,000 baths, or 50 times as much as the laver, and also exactly 50 times as much as the internal cubic contents of the Sacred Ark of Moses.

It is remarkable that the lower course of the King's Chamber has been so adjusted in height, by the removal from sight of its lower five inches, that the cubic contents of that lower course amount to 50 times the coffers contents, and exactly equals the cubic contents of Solomon's Molten Sea.

"Whence, then," asks the Astronomer-Royal, "came the metreological ideas common to three individuals in three different ages; and involving reference to deep cosmical attributes of the earth, understood by the best and highest of human learning at none of those times? The answer," says he, "can hardly be other than that the God of Israel, who liveth forever, equally inspired to this end the Seth-descended architect of the Great Pyramid, the prophet Moses, and king Solomon."

SACRED AND PROPHETIC TIME.

The symbolic feature of the Grand Gallery most attractive to travelers, next after its commanding height, is the seven overlappings of its walls. This may be intended to typify the Sabbatical week. Another noticeable feature of the number seven is to be found in the passage leading to the Queen's Chamber. The last part of that passage is found to be nearly one half greater in depth than the rest; and the length of that deeper part is one-seventh of the whole length of the floor from the beginning of the Grand Gallery up to the Queen's Chamber wall itself. Also, if we take the mean in height of the passage which enters the north end of the Grand Gallery, and of the passage which exits from the south end, we find that that quantity goes seven times exactly to the hundredth, into 339.2, which is the vertical height of the Grand Gallery at a mean of 15 points in its whole length.

There appears to be a certain amount of connection between the Queen's Chamber and the Grand Gallery; for while the Queen's Chamber with its cubit-defining niche, contains cubic inches to the typical number for that cubit of ten-millionth earth reference. The Grand Gallery contains 36 millions of cubic inches, or one million to every one of the 36 inclined stones forming its long sloping roof.

ASTRONOMY OF THE ENTRANCE PASSAGE.

"In the year 2170 B. C. the Pole-star, Draconis, was three degrees and 42 minutes from the Pole of the sky, and therefore looked right down the entrance-passage, when at its lowest culmination. When the Pole star was so looking down the entrance-passage, Tauri the chief star in the Pleiades group, was crossing the local terrestrial meridian, at a point high up in the sky, near the equator and simultaneously with the celestial meridian of the vernal equinox. That whole stellar combination had not taken place for 25,000 years previously, and will not take place again for 25,000 years subsequently."

This grand quantity, or peculiar celestial cycle, is further defined by the length of the diagonals of the base, which so eminently lay out the whole Great Pyramid's position; when their sum is reckoned up in Pyramid inches.

THE SACRED TOUCHING THE GREAT PYRAMID.

"That is the end then," says Piazzi Smyth, "of the first use which the Great Pyramid's Grand Gallery, deep well, but not a water-well, and entrance-passage served.

"In the course of the summer of 1872, in a correspondence with Mr. Charles Casey, of Fullerton Castle, Carlow, (then preparing his work 'Philitis,') that straight-forward and vigorous thinker considered himself called on to tell me that while he had followed and adopted all that I had attempted as to the meteorology of the Great Pyramid being of more than human scientific perfection for the age in which it was produced, yet to call it therefore Divinity inspired or sacred, seemed to him to be either too much or too little. 'Now,' said Mr. Casey, 'unless the Great Pyramid can be shown to be Messianic, as well as fraught with superhuman science and design, its sacred claim is a thing with no blood in it.'"

THE SACRED PRONOUNCED MESSIANIC

"It was in 1865," continues Prof. Smyth, "that a letter reached me at the Great Pyramid, transmitted with some high recommendations of its author, by that most upright knightly man the late Mr. Maitland, Sheriff clerk of the county of Edinburgh. 'He is a young shipbuilder,' said he, 'a son of a shipbuilder, an accomplished draughtsman, and I hear that he lately turned out, from his own design, one of the most perfect ships that ever left Leith Docks; from his childhood upwards he has been an intense student of whatever could be procured concerning the Great Pyramid. His family surname is Menzies.'

"This Israelite, then, but no Jew, it was, who first, to my knowledge, broke ground in the Messianic Symbolisms of the Great Pyramid, so intensified subsequently by Mr. Casey, and, after long feeling his way in an humble and prayerful spirit, at length unhesitatingly declared that the immense superiority in height of the Grand Gallery over every passage in the Great Pyramid, arose from its representing the christian dispensation.

"'From the north beginning of the Grand Gallery floor,' said Robert Menzies, 'there, in southwest procession, begin the years of the Savior's earthly life, express at the rate of a Pyramid inch to a year. Three and thirty inch-years, therefore, bring us right over against the mouth of the well, the type of his death, and his glorious resurrection too; while the long, lofty Grand Gallery shows the dominating rule in the world of the blessed religion which He established thereby, over-spanned above by the 36 stones of his months of ministry on earth, and defined by the floor length in inches, (1881 inch years) as to its exact period. The Bible, fully studied, shows that he intended that first dispensation to last only for a time, a time too which may terminate very much sooner than most men expect, and shown by the southern wall IMPENDING.'

"Whereupon I went straight to the south wall of the Grand Gallery, and found that it was impending; by the quantity too, if that interests any one, of about one degree, (about six years nearly) and where Mr. Menzies could have got that piece of information from, I cannot imagine, for the north wall is not impending; he, too, was never at the Great Pyramid, and I have not seen the double circumstance chronicled elsewhere. The first ascending-passage, moreover, he explained as representing the Mosaic dispensation. I measured it and found it to be, from the north beginning of the Grand Gallery, the natal year of Christ, to its junction with the roof of the entrance-passage northward and below, or to some period in the life of Moses, 1,483 Pyramid inches; and when produced across that passage, so as to touch its floor, 1,542 inches.

HUMAN RELIGIOUS HISTORY.

"But the chief line of human history with Robert Menzies was the floor of the entrance-passage. Beginning at its upper and northern end, it starts at the rate of a Pyramid inch to a year, from the dispersion of mankind, (2527 B. C.) or from the period when men declined any longer to live the patriarchal life of divine instruction, and insisted on going off on their own inventions; and which is so sensibly represented to the very life or death, in the long continued descent of the entrance-passage of the Great Pyramid, more than 4,000 inch years long, until it ends in the symbol of the bottomless pit, a chamber, already mentioned, deep in the rock.

HEBRAISM AND CHRISTIANITY.

"One escape, indeed there was in that long and mournful history of human decline; but for a few only, when the exodus took place in the just ascending passage, which leads on into the Grand Gallery, showing Hebraism ending in its original prophetic destination—christianity. But another escape was also eventually provided, to prevent any soul being necessarily lost in the bottomless pit; for, before reaching that dismal abyss, there is a possible entrance, though it may be by a strait and narrow way, to the one and only gate of salvation through the death of Christ, viz: the well, representing his descent into hades, not the bottomless pit of idolators and the wicked at the lowest point to which the entrance-passage subterraneously descends, but a natural grotto rather than artificial chamber in the course of the well's further progress to the other place; while the stone which once covered that well's upper mouth is blown outward into the Grand Gallery with excessive force, (and was once so thrown out, and is now annihilated,) carrying part of the wall with it, and indicating how totally unable was the grave to hold Him beyond the appointed time.

"'That sounds fair and looks promising enough, so far,' said Mr. Casey, 'but it is not enough yet to be the turning-point with me, when interests so immense are at stake. We must have more than that, and something not less than proof of this order. Measuring along the passages backward from the north beginning of the Grand Gallery, you will find the exodus at either 1483 or 1542 B. C., and the dispersion of mankind in 2527 B. C., up at the beginning of the entrance-passage. Now you have already published, years ago, that you have computed the date of the building of the Great Pyramid, by modern astronomy, based on the Pyramid's own star-pointing, and have found it 2170 B. C. This date, according to this new theory, must be three or four hundred inches down inside the top or mouth of the entrance-passage. Is there then any mark at that point? For I feel sure that the builder, if really inspired from on High, would have known how many years were to elapse between his great mechanical work in the beginning of the world, and the one central act of creation in the birth of the divine Son; and he would have marked it there as the most positive and invaluable proof.'

THE CRUCIAL TEST.

"So away I went,' says the Astronomer-Royal, "to my original notes to satisfy him, and beginning at the north end of the Grand Gallery, counted and summed up the length of every stone backward all down the ascending passage, then across the entrance passage to its floor, then up its floor-plane toward its mouth, and soon saw that 2170 B. C. would fall very near a most singular portion of the passage. This mark was a line ruled on the stone from top to bottom of the passage wall at right angles to its floor. Such a line as might be ruled with a blunt steel instrument, but by a master hand for evenness. There was such a line on either wall, the west and the east, of the passage; and the two lines seemed to be pretty accurately opposite each other. When Mr. Casey required in 1872 to know exactly where, on the floor, the line on either side touched the plane, there was no ready prepared record to say. Every intervening measure by joints between the two extremes, and over scores of joints, had been covered, printed and published to the world in 1867, but just the last item required, merely the small distance from the nearest joint to the drawn line was wanting.

"So I wrote to my friend Mr. Dixon, C. E., then erecting his brother's bridge over the Nile, near Cairo, requesting him to have the goodness to make and send me careful measures of the distance of the fine line on either passage wall at the Pyramid, from its nearest one of the two quasi-vertical joints; not giving him any idea what the measure was wanted for, but only asking him to be very precise, clear, and accurate.

And so he was; taking out also as companion and duplicate measurer his friend Dr. Grant, of Cairo; and their doubly attested figures were sent to me on diagrams, in a manner that left no room for misunderstanding. With this piece of difference measure, I set to work again on my older joint measures of the whole distance, and was almost appalled when on applying the above difference, the east side gave forth 2170½, and the west side 2170 and four-tenths Pyramid inches, or years.

"'This testimony satisfies me and fills me with thankfulness and joy,' wrote Mr. Casey; 'while I never expected to have measured so closely as that, along either side of those lengthy dark and sloping Pyramid passages.'"

MELCHIZEDEK.

Now the man who built the Great Pyramid, or laid its foundation in 2170 B. C., must have been a contemporary of, but rather older than Abraham, according to the best Biblical chronology. Melchizedek was a grandly mysterious kingly character, to whom even Abraham offered the tenth of the spoils. He was king of Salem, which some consider to have been Jerusalem.

The Great Pyramid was only to be understood in the latter days of the world, and was destined then to prove the inspiration, origin, and Messianic character of its designs, to both religious and irreligious; in manifesting forth in modes adapted to these and the approaching times, the original and ineffable inspiration of Scripture, —as well as the practical reasons for expecting the return of Christ to an undoubted PERSONAL REIGN for a miraculous season over the entire earth.

THE COMMUNISTIC FRENCH METRE.

Prof. Smyth believes that in the Great Pyramid is embodied the whole metric system which God gave to the ancient Hebrews, and that the British nation being descended from, and identical with the lost ten tribes of Israel, should successfully resist the encroachments of French metricalism, and adopt the God-given, earth-commensurable system embodied in the Great Pyramid. "Some involuntary throbbing in the pulse of humanity," says he "is now telling all nations, with deeper truth than any philosophy can, that these are the last times of this dispensation."

Twenty-six governments have already adopted this anti-christian French metrical system, and it is stated that if Britain yields, other nations are expected to follow; "then all the nations of the world will have passed through the great French mill, whose whirling stones will never cease to grind, until, excepting only those sealed by God, it has caused all, both small and great, rich and poor, free and bond, to receive a mark in their right hand or in their foreheads; and that no man might buy or sell, save he that had the mark, or the name of the beast, or the number of his name." Rev. xiii. 16, 17.

Prof. Smyth, moreover, states that the French metric system, though not a hundred years old, is wanted by its promoters to override every other metric system in the world, of whatever age, and whatever origin; that all nations are to bow down to it; although it is found, at every essential point, full of scientific blunders, and teeming with sacrifices of the comforts and conveniences of the poor.

The Great Pyramid system, he says, on the other hand, is the oldest metrological system in the history of the world; has its traces extensively among European peoples; and is next to perfect in all those scientific points where the French fails. It is moreover full of benevolence and compassion for the poor and needy, besides teaching that their anguish and woe will last but a very few years more; for then, agreeably with the Scriptures, Christ himself will again descend from heaven, this time with angels and archangels accompanying, and will give to man at last that perfect and righteous government which man alone is incapable of; and so shall the Savior reign over all nations in the Millennial Sabbath of the world.

In fulfilment of the first prophecy in Genesis, which teaches, together with all the Prophets, that of the seed of the woman a truly divine Savior of mankind, was to arise and appear amongst men; in further fulfilment whereof, the Great Pyramid was to prove—that precisely as that coming was a real historical event, and took place at a definite and long pre-ordained date—so his second coming, to reign over mankind, will likewise be historical, and will take place at a definite and also a primevally pre-arranged date. But immediately preceding the Lord's second coming, anti-Christ shall appear personally, giving out that he is Christ, and working such signs and wonders as shall deceive, if it were possible, even the very elect.

"When the second coming has been appointed to take place, must be a most momentous question; and is one to which I can fully reply, that, so far as the Great Pyramid seems to indicate at present in the Grand Gallery, the existing christian dispensation must first close (in some partial manner or degree), the saints be removed, and a period of trouble and darkness commence." Though the Lord may have tarried long, the Grand Gallery in the Great Pyramid indicates that the judgments which are to precede his advent are very near.

OUR ISRAELITISH ORIGIN.

The deep and rapidly increasing conviction that the British nation is descended from the ancient Israelites is now becoming, day by day, more clear and unmistakable. The works of Turner, Wilson, Hine and others, as well as the operations of the lately organized Anglo-Israel Association, have largely contributed to the advancement of this view. Some of the most influential men of London, and various other parts of Britain, are at the head of this organization. One of the objects of the Association is, "to more fully develop and disseminate the truth of the proposition that the Anglo-Saxon race is descended from the Lost Tribes of Israel, and to promote research into the general history of Israel and Judah."

The idea is truly grand and wonderful, almost beyond conception, and has the sympathy, too, as has been stated of Her Majesty Queen Victoria.

I need scarcely add that it is believed that God is about to pour out his Spirit upon his covenant people, and in a miraculous way deliver and restore them to the land of their fathers.

Mr. Edward Hine, of London, author of "Forty-seven Identifications of the British Nation with the Lost House of Israel," says, "The present Parliament will retain its power for seven years, by which time we are so plainly taught by the marvellous teachings of the Great Pyramid, that our identity with Israel will be nationally established, and our country levied into most glorious and righteous time;" "while," says Piazzi Smyth, "the resemblance of our early Saxon, or Ephraimite, metrology to the system of the Great Pyramid, both gives us a species of 'inheritance' interest in that building, and may include something else still more noble in connection with the coming universal Messianic kingdom," when "all the ends of the world shall remember and turn unto the Lord."

The Great Pyramid points to 1881. Before then, what?

The Second Coming of Christ.

Sermon by the Rev. D. J. Burrell of Chicago.

The following sermon was preached by the pastor of the Westminster Presbyterian church, Sunday, April 18, 1875. It was published in the Chicago "Tribune" on the following Monday. It contains much valuable truth, and will be read with great interest. Mr. Burrell's powers of description are remarkable, and his style earnest and pure. We are pleased to get such stirring discourses from those who are in the orthodox churches.

"Where is the promise of his coming?"—2 Peter iii. 4.

Scene: The Mount of Olives. Time: Forty days after Christ's resurrection. A group of friends have come together by appointment to take a last farewell of their beloved Master. While waiting for his appearance they talk in low murmurs of the years that are past so eventful in toil and suffering and glorious promise. Down below them flows the brook Cedron; how often they had crossed it on their way to the sacred shadows of Gethsemane! In the distance are the homes and temples of Jerusalem. Whichever way they look is holy ground; the footprints of their Lord are on every path and hillside; and memories come crowding thick and fast upon the minds of the watchers of Olivet. But suddenly He stands before them!

"Peace be with you!" How eagerly they gaze upon the face that so recently was stained with blood and grave-mold! He renews the promise of the outpouring of the Spirit, and repeats the injunction "Go ye into all the world and preach the gospel unto every creature!" They gather around Him in love and wonder and reverence. He lifts his pierced hands in blessing, and slowly rises from their midst. "Earth has lost her power to keep, the waiting heavens claim him as their own. But still as he ascends through the yielding air his eyes are bent on these up-looking men."

"Ye men of Galilee, why stand ye gazing up into heaven!" Two men in white apparel are standing before them, and with these words they recall the followers of Christ from their contemplation of the voiceless skies to the demands of present duty. This is no seasonable hour for gazing upward; life with all its tasks and trials is before them. The world still shrouded in sin and darkness calls to them in the words of their great commission: "Go ye; preach the Gospel!" Make bare your arms; thrust in the sickle for lo the fields are white for the harvest! It is no time to be dreaming over the past or seeking with curious eyes to pierce the veil behind which the Lord has disappeared. "Why gaze ye upward? This same Jesus who is taken up from you shall so come in like manner as ye have seen him go into heaven!"

This, then, is not his final departure. The green earth shall once more be trodden by the feet of Him who has vanished from their sight. But for this assurance, their hearts would have been exceeding sorrowful; as it was, they looked into each other's faces with the gladness of a new and glorious hope, and, murmuring, "He shall come again, He shall come again!" they went back to Jerusalem with great joy, and were continually in the temple praising and blessing God.

From this time onward a more hearty zeal is evident in the work of these early disciples; they have something to live and labor for. The disguised King who had breathed his life away amid the blood and darkness of Golgotha is coming again to take unto himself his great power—coming in the clouds of heaven, and all his holy angels with Him! What strength and patience, what earnest of honor and victory, in the words with which they greet each other. "The day is at hand!" Why should they tremble at the rabbi's anathema, or the roaring of the beasts of the amphitheatre? The day is near at hand when the Lord shall avenge his own elect! In the not-far-off future they see the throne of Israel rebuilt and occupied by One more splendidly arrayed than Solomon in all his glory, the eagles of hated Rome dragged in the dust, and God's armies treading their enemies under foot. No doubt they fully expected to see all this in their own day and generation; but in this they were doomed to be disappointed. Twenty centuries have passed away since then, and still the eyes of the Lord's people are turned toward the clouds of heaven as they wait for his appearing. Hope deferred maketh the heart sick; and many a time when the church has felt as bitterly as Israel in Egypt the lash of the hard task-master, a cry from the depths has gone upward: "How long, O Lord, how long! Come and make no tarrying!" Yet still He waits, and the years go by and the ages with their slow-revolving wheels; and the the eyes of the watchers grow weary, and the scornful words of the ancient unbeliever have worn at length upon the patience of the church, like the long dropping of water upon a stone, till Christians, hoping against hope, begin to ask, "Where is the promise of his appearing?" It is nothing unusual for learned men to assert that the long-hoped-for advent of the Lord Jesus is to be merely a spiritual manifestation; that is, that He will come not visibly, but rather by the exercise of saving grace and the power of his spirit in the salvation of souls. This, however, is a poor equivalent for the glorious hope of the early church which led them to believe that one day the clouds would separate and Christ would come in like manner as He was taken up into heaven.

This word of promise, uttered with no uncertain sound and oft-repeated, admits of no question or perversion. He shall so come in like manner as He was taken up; they saw Him go and they shall see Him come. Then shall appear the sign of the Son of Man in heaven, and He shall come with power and great glory. We have not followed cunningly-devised fables when we made known unto you the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ, but were eye-witnesses of his majesty. So Peter warns the disciples that scoffers would appear in the latter day saying "Where is the promise of his coming?" And to meet this objection, he reminds them how the deluge was long delayed, but came at last when men were no longer looking for it; reminds them also that with God a thousand years are as one day, and one day as a thousand years; and repeats the assurance that when the day of the Lord does come it will come as a thief in the night! From this it is evident that the Apostles and early Christians fully believed in the advent of the Lord Jesus, and that his coming would be in person, visible and glorious. This article of their faith was ever before them, and they urged it upon the attention of all believers as a motive to patience and gladness, and holy living. "There is laid up for me a crown," says Paul, now "ready to be offered"—"a crown which the righteous Judge shall give me at that day, and not to me only, but unto all them that love his appearing." If this testimony of the Apostles be taken in connection with the promise of the "two men in shining apparel," and with the many unequivocal words of Christ Himself, then, brethren, we may look to the skies with a confident hope that in the fullness of time the man Christ Jesus shall through them come in person to reign King over all and blessed forever.

The world that saw Him robed in the cast-off purple of a Roman magistrate, crowned with thorns, scourged, spit upon, buffeted, fainting under the burden of a cross, and "lifted up" to die in shame and agony, will yet see Him robed in the white raiment of heaven, and crowned with the diadem of the universe. The clouds that mourned in sackcloth when the quivering limbs of the dying Christ were still shall gather their brightest hosts together for the throne and canopy of Him who is alive again and liveth forevermore. The legion of angels that hovered in the darkness over Calvary, and mourned because they might not tear their dying King from his cross, shall throng his chariot wheels and cry, "Prepare ye, prepare ye the way of the Lord, for behold he cometh, and all nations shall fear before him!" And the Christ who wandered, footsore and homeless, over the hills of Galilee shall reign upon the same earth in light and and glory that is unapproachable. The same earth, and yet not the same; for it shall be made ready for his appearing. Instead of the thorn shall come up the fir-tree, and instead of the brier shall come the myrtle-tree, and all the trees of the field shall clap their hands, and the hills shall break forth before Him into singing. The last remnant of the curse shall have been swept away. The wicked shall have been suddenly removed by the death-angel to their own place; and the saints, "caught up into the air" during the great conflagration, shall descend again in the grand triumphal advent to reign with Christ a thousand years. This is the picture that was ever before the mind's eye of the ancient disciples. Nor was it a mere hopeful dream. Its brightest colors were caught from the visions of Prophets and Apostles. Oh, brethren, if we did but realize that all this is coming, is not afar off, our short lived day would be crowded with duties that must needs be wrought before the setting sun, and our life would seem like that passover night when Israel stood, girt and sandaled, with staff in hand ready for the journey of deliverance! But the watchword of the early church, "The time draweth near!" falls upon our ears, dulled with long listening, like an idle, oft-told tale. The oil of faith which the saints provided for their lamps when the words of promise were spoken so long ago has been well-nigh exhausted; but this also was foretold. "When the Son of man cometh shall he find faith on the earth?" It is one of the signs of his near approach when the foolish virgins lie asleep with "their lamps gone out." Darker and darker must grow the night of unbelief, till at midnight the cry will be heard, "Behold, the Bridegroom cometh!"

But for various reasons it is both needless and impossible to fix by signs and omens the exact time of our Lord's appearing. From the earliest ages there have not been wanting dreamers in the Church to cry "Lo here! Lo there!" yet Christ Himself forewarned us, "If any man shall say unto you, Lo, here is Christ or there, believe it not, for as the lightning cometh so also shall the coming of the Son of Man be!" Paul felt called upon to check the too fervid expectancy of the believers in Thessalonica by reminding them that the Lord's day would so come as a thief in the night—not by observation. In the dark days when fire and sword were let loose upon the Christians of the early Church it was everywhere proclaimed that these were the tribulations which, like the falling of the stars and turning of the sun to blood, foreboded the immediate coming of Christ. But the eyes of God's people at length grew weary of watching the clouds, and the feverish hope of the Adventists, slowly dying out, was not revived again until the close of the tenth century. At that time wars, and plagues, and famines, the breaking up of law and order, the doings of sin which had overspread all lands, were thought to be signs of dissolution in heaven and earth. With one consent the people of God looked upward and prepared for the advent of their King. All work was suspended. "The land was left untilled, the houses unrepaired, the right unvindicated." Henry, the German Emperor, came down from his throne, put on the monk's cowl, and went preaching everywhere. "Repent ye, for the kingdom of God is at hand!" Crowds of the people slept on the porches and under the shadow of cathedrals. Prayer was offered without ceasing, and the truce of God was proclaimed. The pulpits rang with the prophecies of Daniel and the visions of the Apocalypse. Thus they reached the last night of year 1000. All that night the streets and open fields and monastery roofs were filled with men and women watching the skies. But the hours went by, the stars grew pale, the first streak of the morning came out of the East, and then, as if a great burden had been lifted from its heart, the whole world with one glad consent arose from its paralysis of fear and turned again to the earnest duties of life. The memorable words of Sylvester, "Soldiers of Christ arise and fight for Zion," were responded to by thousands of brave men who were tired of wearing ascension robes and walking in the shadow of death. Grand schemes were devised for the conquest of the holy sepulchre and the universal diffusion of the Gospel of Christ. The world, rejoicing in its new lease of vigor and life, was girded with zeal and ambition. Everything was projected on a gigantic scale. At this time were laid the broad and deep foundations of those grand medieval cathedrals which stand to this day with their immense walls and square buttressed towers as monuments of strength and beauty; a Gothic strength and beauty which only the glad service of a world born anew from the overshadowing fear of doom could ever have created.

These things are spoken of only to illustrate the depressing and paralyzing force of a morbid expectation of the coming of Christ. It was to avert this that in divine providence the time of the advent was hid from the eyes of the living. It is the very uncertainty that makes us ever watchful, and therefore it was decreed that no man should know the day or the hour when the Son of Man cometh! "It is useless to puzzle the brain with prophetic arithmetic." The key to Daniel's mystical figures has never been found, and all fancied interpretations of it have thus far utterly failed. When the great darkness fell upon New England more than a hundred years ago the people thought that doomsday had surely come. But the presiding officer of the Legislature, then in session at Hartford, sent out for candles and lit them, saying: "We must not adjourn; if the Lord be coming let Him find us engaged in the discharge of duty." In this spirit should all Christians live. The one thing needful is devotion to present duty. Let our loins be girded about and our lights burning, and we ourselves like men that wait for the coming of their Lord, that when He cometh and knocketh we may open unto Him immediately. And if He shall come in the second watch or in the third watch, and find us so, "blessed are those servants." Be ye therefore ready, for the Son of Man cometh at an hour when ye think not. The man who is living a life of faith in the Son of God is the man whose loins are girded, and whose light is burning. Fitness for his appearing does not imply angelic perfection; it requires no man to retire into solitude and wear ascension robes. Why stand ye gazing up into heaven? The voice of duty calls us away from the clouds to scenes of guilt and sorrow, to the patience of hope, and the labor of love, to a life of doing and suffering for Jesus' sake. Why stand ye gazing upward? Go preach the Gospel unto every creature. Happy is the man who at the Lord's appearing shall be found in the act of feeding the hungry with the bread of life, or putting a cup of cold water to the lips of the least of his little ones. Busied thus, if his Lord come in the second watch or in the third watch he is ever ready to open unto Him immediately.

And, friends, let us lose none of the gladness of our hope by reason of our Lord's long waiting. For yet a little while, and He that shall come will come, and will not tarry. Though it be not right to stand gazing upward all the day long, yet the soul may often be refreshed by an upward glance at the skies. Perhaps these very fleshly eyes of ours shall one day see the parting of those clouds, for who can discern the signs of the times, who can tell how nearly the "little while" is ended, who knoweth the day or the hour? Under the frost of winter the roots of herb and tree, unseen by human eyes, are ever preparing for the approach of spring. So the mysterious forces of history, its wars, and tumults, and confusions, visible only to the sight of the Omniscient God, are weaving the banner for the great triumphal advent of the king. The years to us pass slowly, but with Him they are flying like a weaver's shuttle; and ever and anon his voice is heard, "Be patient, weary souls, a thousand years are one day; and behold I come quickly!" In this there is hope, and strength, and comfort, for all Christian hearts; for the day of the Lord will be for his people as for Himself a day of triumph and coronation. Beloved now are we, the sons of God, but it doth not yet appear what we shall be; yet we know that when He shall appear we shall be like Him, for we shall see Him as He is. And every man that hath this hope in Him purifieth himself, even as he is pure. Therefore let us not sleep as do others, but let us watch and be sober. Once He came as the slowly-dawning light, yet once again will He come as the lightning. Watch, for ye know not when the Master cometh, at even or at midnight, or at the cock-crowing, or in the morning. And He that testifieth these things saith surely, I come quickly. Amen. Even so come Lord Jesus!

—Those words are most likely to affect the hearts of the learners, that come from the hearts of the teachers.

The Bible and Creeds.

It is not to be assumed by the Christian or the infidel, that we have in fact, in our creeds and in our interpretation of the Bible, precisely the system which was revealed. That we have the true record in the Bible we are to believe, and the infidel may hold us to that; but that we have the proper interpretation of that record is not to be assumed as certain. Christianity has been transmitted to us from a far-distant age. It has come in contact with all the philosophical systems in the world. Its outward form has been much moulded by philosophy—much by its alliance with the state. The synods and councils that have determined the creeds of the church have been, like other assemblies, composed of imperfect men—often of men more under the influence of philosophy than religion; often ignorant of the plainest rules of exegesis; and often seeking rather to establish a hierarchy than to promote the kingdom of Christ. As a matter of fact, we know that during that long period there is no absurdity of doctrine or interpretation which has not been embraced by the church; almost no error which has not been sanctioned by synods and councils; almost no truth the belief of which has not exposed him who held it to persecution by the church itself.

Christianity has thus come down to us through the descent of eighteen centuries, collecting in its progress whatever of good or bad there might be that could in any way be made to adhere to it; adopting as its own the opinions in mental philosophy, and the doctrines of science, true or false, which have prevailed in the world; and uniting all in its symbols of faith—taking the church at large, a vast and monstrous conglomeration of original sacred truth, and of the errors and absurdities which the world has accumulated in the lapse of ages.

It is a ship, not now just sailing out of port, fresh, and new, and clean, but one that has sailed afar, and has collected in distant seas whatever of barnacles and seaweed that could be made to adhere to it. Those barnacles and that seaweed must be detached from it if the ship is to be made to traverse safely distant seas again. A great part of the work of the church in modern times has been to detach from it the errors and corruptions which it had accumulated in the long period of its history. This was, in fact, the main service which Luther rendered to the church, restoring it, in a great measure, to its pristine beauty, purity, and vigor.

This is the service which has been rendered by modern sacred criticism; this is the work to be done by the efforts to secure a correct text of the Bible; this is the work to be done by the application of the canons of criticism to the Word of God.—Albert Barnes.

The Size of the Ark.

Infidels have objected to the size of the ark; have asserted that it is absurd to suppose that ever there could be a vessel constructed large enough to hold all the creatures that must have been placed in it, with sufficient food, it may be, for six or twelve months—water for fish, corn for four-footed animals, seed for birds, and so on. Now we will take the dimensions of the ark from the records of Moses, and calculate them on the lowest possible scale. There are two definitions given to a cubit, one that it is eighteen inches, or a foot and a half, and the other that it is twenty inches, we will take it only at the lowest. Moses states that the ark was 300 cubits long. This would make it 450 feet long, of about the length of St. Paul's cathedral, London. The breadth he states to be fifty cubits; we have it seventy-five feet in breadth. He states it to be thirteen cubits high. In other words, it was as long as St. Paul's cathedral, nearly as broad and half as high. The tonnage of the ark, according to the computation of modern carpenters, must have been 32,000 tons. The largest sized English ship (of a size altogether unimaginable to those who have never seen it) is 3,500 tons burden; so that the ark must have been equal to twenty-six first-rate ships of war, and if armed as such ships are, it would have contained beyond 18,000 men, and provisions for them for eighteen months. Buffon has asserted that all four-footed animals may be reduced to 250 pairs, and the birds to a still smaller number. On calculating, therefore, we shall find that the ark would have held more than five times the required quantity of food to maintain them twelve months.—Christian Advocate.

Catacombs of Rome.

PROF. JULES DE LAUNAY.

The bodies were usually brought through the shafts for burial. They were followed by their friends with palms and olive branches, borne aloft as symbols of victory won; and the countless galleries were made vocal with the sound of exultation. As the saints step by step descended, they chanted verse by verse Psalm cxvi. The blood that gushed in streams from the martyrs' ghastly wounds, and the sponges or linen used to collect that blood, were also brought in huge vessels by the deaconesses. Did the relatives wail? Did they lament over their precious dead? Oh no! The faith of those early Christians was too strong, their visions of the glory too vivid, to mourn over the heroes who nobly fell. The black, the badge of mourning at Pagan funerals, was proscribed at the martyrs' burial.

Arrayed in garments white,
No mournful cloud o'ershadowing,
Bearing green branches in their hands,
Around the tombs they're kneeling.

This was their marching song:
"We are not by death's hand holden!"
And this their glorious funeral hymn:
"Jerusalem the Golden!"

The slab over the tomb was then sealed by the elder with the mystic name, as pledge that God's elect shall be delivered from the bondage of corruption into the glorious liberty of the children of God. Rom. viii. 21. The church every year met around the same spot to celebrate their natalis or anniversaries. They decorated it with crowns and palms.

There was in those days of fervor a golden stream of love that gladdened the church of the catacombs. It was through the channel of the love feasts that it flowed. The tomb of the martyrs, on each returning year, was made the table of the Lord. The agape, followed by the Holy Supper, was celebrated, and the service concluded in the song, "What shall I render unto the Lord for all his benefits to me?" Psa. cxvi. 12–19. Those expecting saints, continued steadfast in the breaking of bread, the tombs of their martyrs, were ever reminded of the time when the bride is to be taken up to the marriage supper of the Lamb. Every service, even the burial, began with joy; so with joy shall we be ushered into the kingdom of our God.

A picture of the agape found in the cemetery of St. Zoticus, presents a table of a semi-circular shape. Five guests are accommodated at that table. On a smaller table in the centre is the mystic fish of which all partake. Two deaconesses preside at the banquet, one personifying charity and the other peace, under the names of Agape and Irenea. There they learned how to bear each other's burdens, and were of one heart and mind. There was exemplified that living unity of the early church, that brotherhood that took the world captive. "See those Christians, how they love one another," was the constant exclamation of Pagans, and even of philosophers; and while Christians were hemmed on all sides by persecuting foes, they realized at that table the words of the Psalmist: "Thou preparest for me a table in the presence of mine enemies; surely goodness and mercy shall follow me all the days of my life." Thus the agape transformed the vast necropolis into a city of peace and of brotherly love, an emblem of that New Jerusalem of their great King. It was the vestal altar, where the early church of God kept alive the sacred fire of that law of love, the law of Christ.

The following epitaphs will serve to illustrate the glory of their faith which was their lives:

NUTRICATUS DEO CHRISTO
ET MARTYRIBUS—
Trained up for God, for Christ and for his martyrs.

LUCIA DEVOTA MARTYRUM
OBSEQUIS—
Lucia, devoted to the burial of martyrs.

JUSTE NOMEN TUUM IN AGAPE—
Oh Justus, thy name is well remembered at the love banquet!

AGAPETE SERVA DEI—
Agapeta, a handmaid of God.

The next epitaph is that upon the tomb of a deaconess who spent all her life of faith in the gloomy catacombs as a ministering angel, ministering to the necessities of the saints:

IN AGAPE MINISTRAVIT—
She has ministered at the love table.
—Herald of Life.

—He smarts not under poverty who has learned to be content; he frets not under affliction who is submissive to the Father's will, and lays aside his own. Keep your desires within bounds.

THE RESTITUTION.

PLYMOUTH, IND.....April 21, 1875.

EDITORIAL DEPARTMENT.

—Brother T. W. Woodrow, of Altoona, Iowa, wishes us to state that he expects to make a visit East before long, and will speak where his services may be desired. His address is as above.

—Before this number reaches the subscribers, we shall be in Minnesota, where we are summoned by a telegram from our parents. Father and mother have both passed the allotted age of man. May the mercy of a kind Father overshadow, guard and keep them unto that life which is eternal, is our earnest prayer.

—We spent two Sundays of the present month in Goodland. Our meetings commenced on Sunday, April 4, and continued during the week, and over the following Sunday. In all we preached twelve discourses. The interest was excellent. Six confessed Christ, and were baptized. The little band in Goodland is struggling for the crown of life. May the Divine Father keep them in the way of life and preserve them unto his kingdom and glory.

Setting the Time.

It is to be regretted that any Bible student should become so far misled as to set the day when our Lord shall return from heaven. There is no chronological period in the prophecies of Daniel, or John, which alludes to Christ's return, and yet it is constantly insisted on by many that the time is revealed.

Again. Christ's own words: "Ye know not when the time is, watch ye therefore," should forever settle the question. "Of that day and hour knoweth no man." To us it is the height of presumption to appoint any particular time for that holy and sacred event.

Elder Thurman, was sanguine that Christ would come on the passover night, April 19, and he, with those of like faith, were gathered in the city [illegible] ago, confident that they would see the Lord. The time is passed, and these mistaken but well-meaning people are yet in the flesh. They should be sufficiently impressed with the words of Christ to know that when Jesus comes, that his people will be engaged in the various occupations of life. Some are to be in the field, others at the mill, etc. The idea that they will be gathered in some city like Chicago, and from that locality ascend to meet the Lord, is without one particle of Bible proof. And were it not for a certain spirit of fanaticism which pervades the minds of those who are thus led, they could see the absolute foolishness of their position.

This spirit of fanaticism has gone so far with some honest persons as to require them to be dipped in water three times, face downwards, and this too without one Bible example. There is no Bible instance of any body ever having been dipped three times in obedience to the commission of Christ. But if persons of a certain excitable temperament become convinced that a "man has been raised up" to restore the ancient mode, they will swallow the whole dose, no matter whether it has a plain example or not. They reason as follows: The man is of God, therefore all he teaches is of God also. In this way they are misled and cease to use their reason or common sense. Elder Thurman was evidently sincere in his views, but he should learn that Jesus meant what He said, "Ye know not the time." No specious reasoning, no translation from the original, no evasion, can efface this one positive declaration "Of that day and hour knoweth no man." Elder Thurman is a man and therefore knows nothing about it. Mrs. White, of Battle Creek, Mich., claims to have had a vision wherein she saw that the time would be revealed to the 144,000 seventh day Sabbath keepers. All this is mere guesswork, and only tends to throw distrust upon the sacred Word of God.

In view of the many wild and visionary notions of those who preach without being sent, and have no message, it is high time that men realize more than ever before the absolute necessity of sticking to the Bible. When men allow themselves to be swerved away from the Word of God into human speculations and early church history, they are sure to land on the shores of doubt and unbelief.

That we are nearing the great consummation there can be no doubt, and that the signs in heaven and on the earth are premonitory of approaching revolutions in the affairs of church and state is equally plain. We are rapidly drifting toward the great crisis. Close attention to and reliance on the Word of God, purity of life, and devotion to the sacred duties of faith, will enable us to pass the storms and anchor on the shores of eternal blessedness. Let us therefore, "Watch, for in such an hour as ye think not the Son of Man cometh."

The Bible versus Universalism.

We will not enter into an analysis of all the texts upon which Universalists rely for proof that the race will finally be saved. Such texts as speak of every knee bowing to Christ, and every tongue confessing; and all things being gathered together in one in Christ fall infinitely short of proving the immortalization of the race. In Rev. xiv. 6-7 we find the record of a proclamation of mercy that shall be made to every nation, kindred, tongue, and people, calling upon them to fear and worship the Creator of heaven and earth, because the hour of his judgment is come. In this philanthropic proclamation to the world it offers MERCY to loyal men, and JUDGMENT to the disloyal. Thus, an appeal is made to LOVE or FEAR, clearly showing that OVERT obedience is all that is required that judgments may be averted. All are required to fear and worship God or suffer judgments. That the fear of judgment and not faith and love, will cause all the nations to come up and worship (or bow the knee to) God is evident from the song of the redeemed recorded in the chapter xv. 4. They sing, "Who shall not FEAR thee, O Lord, and glorify thy name? for thou only art holy; for all nations shall come and worship before thee; FOR THY JUDGMENTS ARE MADE MANIFEST." All the adults of Israel were required to come up to Jerusalem and worship God, or suffer his judgments; yet thousands obeyed through fear of punishment and not through faith, love, or the spirit of loyalty. If all were loyal WHY should judgment be used as an instrument of coercion? That JUDGMENTS will humble the nations, and bring them to Messiah's feet is further evident from the following description of the triumphs of Messiah's reign. "He shall have dominion also from sea to sea, and from the river unto the ends of the earth. They that dwell in the wilderness SHALL BOW before him; and his enemies shall LICK THE DUST. Yea all kings SHALL FALL DOWN BEFORE HIM; ALL NATIONS SHALL SERVE HIM. Psa. lxxii. 8, 9, 11. All such texts utterly fail to prove that all men will bow the knee before Christ, or confess to him, through faith, or love, or that he will confer upon them an immortal existence. The blessings promised for overt obedience, enforced by JUDGMENTS, always have, and always will be of temporal duration. When Israel, as a nation, rendered OVERT OBEDIENCE, they were blessed. So, when all nations shall SUBMIT to Christ and SERVE him, they shall be blessed; but where in the Bible is the promise that ALL the families (nations. Gal. iii. 8) of the earth shall recieve eternal life? There is not such a promise between the lids of the Bible. From the first promised access to the tree and river of life in the blooming garden of Eden, down to the last promised access to the tree and river of life in the last page of revelation, there is no promise of eternal life or immortal existence to any, except such as shall, through FAITH and LOVE, comply with the conditions prescribed in the word of truth. Eternal life is never offered to the masses, but always to individuals.

All the universal salvations revealed in the Bible are temporal. Take for example 1 Tim. i. 6. This passage is the SHEET-ANCHOR of Universalism. Paul says, "I exhort, therefore, that first of all, supplications, prayers, intercessions, and giving of thanks, be made for ALL MEN. For this is good and acceptable in the sight of God, our Savior; who will have ALL MEN TO BE SAVED, and to COME UNTO THE KNOWLEDGE OF THE TRUTH. For there is one God, and one Mediator between God and men, the man Christ Jesus, who gave himself a RANSOM FOR ALL, to be testified in due time." Nothing is gained by those who oppose Universalism by substituting for the WILL of God, his DESIRE. This only shifts the difficulty without removing it. The unlimited adjective ALL is still left to be disposed of, because God WILL have (or desires, if you please) ALL MEN to be saved; and he wills the salvation of all men, because he gave his Son a RANSOM FOR ALL; and because he is the Mediator for (all) men. As to the word salvation, it simply means DELIVERANCE without any reference to the DURATION of this deliverance. Eight souls were SAVED from drowning (1 Pet. iii. 20) and yet all these souls subsequently died. All Israel was SAVED from Egyptian bondage, and yet every man was afterward captured by death. Some qualifying terms, expressions of duration must be used, before any reservation can be made in reference to how long this salvation shall continue. We read concerning Christ, that "being made perfect, he became the author of ETERNAL salvation unto all them that obey him." Heb. v. 9.

1. Why affirm that he is the author of eternal salvation to all them that obey him, if they shall obey him in the sense of being an heir of this great salvation? Christ in his discourse with Nicodemus teaches that faith in him is a necessary requisite to eternal life, (John iii. 14-16) and where is the Bible evidence that ALL men will BELIEVE on Christ?

2. Why use the qualifying adjective eternal, if the word SALVATION implies an endless existence? The word RANSOM relates to the price paid by Christ for the deliverance of the race from the thralldom of death. The salvation spoken of in the text under consideration only promises to deliver all men, and bring them to "the KNOWLEDGE of the TRUTH. It saves them in ignorance of the truth;" and, therefore, not through faith and obedience. This salvation will have accomplished its work when it shall have brought all men to the knowledge of the truth.

A whole eternity sweeps beyond the remotest point of this universal salvation. When brought to the knowledge of the truth, every man will be left FREE to CHOOSE or REFUSE for himself, the same as Saul of Tarsus, and all who have been brought to the knowledge of the truth since the world began. God will neither choose for them nor COERCE them to accept or obey the truth. To affirm that all will love and obey the truth is to assume the very point to be proved. With equal propriety may it be affirmed that ALL who have understood the truth, in past ages, have LOVED and OBEYED its divine precepts, and walked in its light. The first man failed and so have thousands of others. It is also begging the question at issue, to affirm that all who believe and obey the requirements of the truth will continue faithful. The Bible abounds with warnings against the danger of falling. The great apostle was afraid that while he preached the gospel to others, he himself should be a castaway. At the close of the present age there will be ungodly men who are not saved. At the end of the thousand years, when all the obedient have access to the tree of life, and enter through the gates into the city, there will be left out side, "dogs, and sorcerers, and whoremongers, and murderers, and idolators, and whosoever loveth and maketh a lie, to suffer the second death." Rev. xxii. 15, chap. xxi. 8. In the close of all the ages of probation beyond the thousand years as far as the Bible throws a single ray upon the destiny of man, we read, "And whosoever was not found written in the book of life was cast into the lake of fire." Rev. xx. 15. But it may be affirmed that the lake of fire is called the second death. True; but fire can only be death in the sense that it produces death. We call the sword a deadly weapon; but if it had not been used with which to inflict death, it would not be called deadly. What are those abominable wretches represented as being cast into the lake of fire to denote? Preservation? Does this fire preserve death and the grave? Does God propose to preserve the worst class of sinners? This lake is a symbol of DESTRUCTION, and not of preservation. Rom. v. 12-21 is relied upon as proving that the race will finally obtain eternal life. All the verses between the 12th and 14th verses is parenthetical—a point which some of our reviewers have overlooked. For the sake of explicitness we will pass by the parenthesis. We read, "Wherefore, as by one man, sin entered into the world, and death by sin; and so death passed upon all men in whom all have sinned," margin. Therefore, as by the offense of one judgment came upon all men to condemnation; even so by the righteousness of one the free gift came upon all men unto justification of life." According to the plain reading of these verses, the same ALL against whom sentence of death, or judgment of condemnation, passed by the disobedience of one man, will be justified to life by the obedience of one man. As through the disobedience of Adam, sentence of death passed against all men; (the all) so also through the righteousness of Christ, this sentence is repealed and the same all justified to life. The MANY in the 19th verse stand for ALL MEN in the previous verse. These two words are used synonymously, and interchangeably. They are from the same Greek root, and must be understood in the same sense. This verse would harmonize with the previous verse more perfectly to render it, "For as by one MAN'S disobedience THE MANY were made sinners, so as by the obedience of one THE MANY were justified. According to the apostle's promise at the 12th verse, all were made sinners by one man's transgression, in whom all had sinned. The justification spoken of in the 18th and 19th verses is placed in direct antithesis to condemnation; It will therefore restore the same life that the death, which passed through Adam to his posterity, deprived them of. The death inflicted upon the races by Adam's transgression was temporal, the life restored to man through the obedience of Christ must be temporal also. The race lost their life UNCONDITIONALLY, on account of one man's transgression, it must, therefore, be given back unconditionally also, on account of the obedience of a man. This is as far as the FREE GIFT, the JUSTIFICATION, or the GRACE of God will go without compliance with conditions on the part of man. But where personal sin abounded over or additional to, the sin of Adam, grace has SUPERABOUNDED through the personal faith and righteous of men unto eternal life. Thus we read in the next verses, "Moreover the law entered that the offense might abound. but where sin abounded, grace did much more abound. That as sin hath reigned unto death, even so might grace reign through righteousness unto eternal life by Jesus Christ our Lord." verses 19-20. Please observe (1) grace is represented as simply abounding in the 18th and 19th verses through the righteousness of Christ unto justification of life, but (2) in the subsequent verses, grace is represented as much more abounding (not through the righteousness of Christ) but through our righteousness unto eternal life. If the life coupled with with Christ's obedience in the 18th verse is eternal life, then (1) there is no MUCH MORE abounding of grace about it; for how can grace give man much more than eternal life. There are no two things named to compare, except different degrees of grace in reference to temporal and eternal life. This must be the point of contrast. And (2) if the same life is spoken of in the 18th and 21st verses, then eternal life will be conferred on man unconditionally, through the righteousness of Christ. There is no avoiding this conclusion. It is as clear as a sun beam; that grace simply abounded over Adam's sin so far as to give back to man the life which had been forfeited by Adam's transgression; but grace SUPERABOUNDED over and above the temporal life restored to man through the righteousness of Christ, so far as to give man eternal life through his own right doing. If it is the same life in both verses there is no superabounding about it. There can be no degrees in eternal life. Not only if these two verses relate to the same life, then the race will receive eternal life unconditionally through the righteousness of one man. And if this is true, Hosea Ballou is right, and restorationalism in every form goes to the board. In the verses in the parenthesis we see a marked contrast between the abounding of grace in delivering the many from death caused by one offense, and the abundances of grace in delivering personal sinners from many offenses; and those receive the abundance of grace in the deliverance from many offenses, shall reign through righteousness, with Christ in life. Please compare verses 16th and 17th with verses 13th and 14th. By one offense the race was involved in death; therefore, the many offenses must relate to personal sins "after the similitude of Adam's transgression." Thus again we see, that the grace of God, through the obedience of one man, will deliver the race from the death caused by the disobedience of one man. We have also learned that simple grace will restore the life lost by one offense; but that the ABUNDANCE of grace will justify man from MANY OFFENSES—that through righteousness they may reign through life through one Jesus Christ. Thus grace justifies ONE OFFENSE, but the ABUNDANCE OF GRACE justifies MANY OFFENSES. GRACE ABOUNDS UNTO TEMPORAL, and the SUPERABUNDANCE OF GRACE ABOUNDS UNTO ETERNAL LIFE. One of these lives is through the obedience of Christ, and the other through the obedience of the heirs of promise.

Kingdom of God.

"But when they believed Philip, preaching the things concerning the kingdom of God, and the name of Jesus Christ, they were baptised both men and women." Acts viii. 12.

Just how much persons must know about God's plan to render them proper subjects for baptism, is a question that has agitated the minds of many; and without pretending to have made a "wonderful discovery;" or made a "new departure," I submit, for the consideration of unbiased minds, the following thoughts:

1. Knowledge concerning the kingdom of God is an essential prerequisite. This is clearly evident from the commission: "Go tell the good news of the kingdom of God; he that believeth and is baptized shall be saved, and he that believeth not shall be damned." Upon this grand pivotal point hangs the final destiny of intelligent hearers of the gospel, believe it and (obey) it gives life; disbelieve, and death is certain. This is applicable alike to all who form character either by accepting or rejecting the gospel; and, were I allowed a digression here, would state, that it will undoubtedly require as much knowledge imparted, to justly damn a person, who rejects it, as it will to save those who accept it. This is all very true says one, but how much knowledge of the kingdom is necessary to constitute baptism scriptural? Answer. Just enough to intelligently understand it. The great fact that God will establish on the earth a righteous government called the kingdom of God; is simple and very easily comprehended by any who are possessed of ordinary intelligence. The minute details of such a government can only be learned by patient study and long application. In all human enterprises the general facts will be presented to those who are solicited to embark in the business, and such facts having been intelligently stated, there will be no necessity to form a new agreement whenever details of business arise in the further prosecution of the business of the firm. So in regard to the kingdom of God; they who had learned the facts about the kingdom, did not need a re-immersion as each detail of the great plan was learned. I to-day rejoice in the possession of truths learned since I was immersed by Brother Shuller, but they all pertain to the same glorious government of God on earth. My faith remains firm, my confidence grows stronger that the God of heaven will set up a kingdom, that will exist under the whole heaven, and will break in pieces all other kingdoms, and will stand forever. The grand fundamental truth of the Bible is the kingdom of God. Everything else is subordinate to it. It is the mighty lever that must move to action those who would share in the glories of the age to come. All that has been promised to the believer, as a motive to induce action, must be realized through the kingdom. In the darkest hours of persecution, like a beacon light it has loomed up in the distance to cheer the weary pilgrim as he toils in sorrow and tears. When the Master was about to leave his sorrowing disciples, he cheers them with the blessed promise "It is your Father's good pleasure to give you the kingdom." Precious words, may we all remember them. No one need be burdened with error concerning things not directly connected with the subject of the kingdom. The mortality of man, his unconsciousness in death, his resurrection to life eternal, the final doom of the ungodly, the destiny of earth, all of these things are indirectly connected with the theme of the kingdom. A brief summary of the "things concerning the kingdom" will involve:

1. A ruler. This includes a history of Jesus Christ, his birth, life, teachings, death, resurrection, ascension, priesthood, second coming, raising the saints, taking the throne, ruling the nations.

2. The territory. This comprehends the history of earth as revealed to man, its original formation, its history of scenes of judgment, its perpetuity, its final restitution, God's promise of it to Abraham, to all the righteous as their final and eternal home.

3. The subjects. Embracing the political history of the race, the nations of earth, their present condition, the condition they will be in as subjects under the glorious reign of Jesus Christ.

4. The laws. A ruler, territory, and subjects, could not properly represent a kingdom without laws to bind and control it; therefore, we have the announcement that from Mount Zion shall go forth the law, to be executed by the saints, co-rulers with Jesus, its effects upon the nations, a cessation of war, universal peace, earth brought back to God, after a long revolt of wickedness to be the scene of righteousness forever.

The Music of Home.

Every woman who has an aptitude for music or for singing should bless God for the gift, and cultivate it with diligence; not that she may dazzle strangers, or win applause from a crowd, but that she may bring gladness to her own fireside. The influence of music in strengthening the affections is far from being perceived by its admirers; a sweet melody binds all hearts together, as it were with a golden chord; it makes the pulses beat in unison and the heart swell with sympathy. But the music of the fireside must be simple and unpretending; it does not require brilliancy of execution, but tenderness of feeling— a merry time for the young, a more subsided strain for the aged, but none of the noisy clap-trap which is so successful in public. It is a mistake to suppose that to enjoy music requires great cultivation; the degree of enjoyment will of course vary with our power of appreciation, but, like all other great influences, it is able to attract even the ignorant; this is what the poets taught when they made Orpheus and his brethren the civilizers of the earth. In cases where musical instruments are not within reach, we may modulate our own voices, and make them give forth sweet sounds; we may sing those simple strains which require neither teaching nor skill, but which, if they come from one heart, are sure of finding their way to another.—Hebrew Leader.

The Peril of our Times.

The world is wonderfully perturbed, unrest is the marked feature of the day. No government on earth is at rest and assured of its existence for a day, in peace.

The church is disturbed as it has not been before in a century. The words of the Master, "the sea and the waves roaring and men's hearts failing them for fear and for looking after those things which are coming on the earth"—find verification, now, as at no former period.

In heathen lands, where the light of the Gospel has but dim radiance, there is a universal expectancy of some momentous event. In all India and the East, the ninth incarnation of Vishnu is now looked for, and with it the present order of things will end. And then will follow the universal reign of that deity, and his beneficence will bless the world. This is the sacred belief of millions of our fallen race.

China with her vast population, is in revolution, and is dying out with the blighting influence indulgence. While this is the case in the low countries of that vast Empire, on the table lands, where the Tartar Tribes roam in wildness, the same peril reigns triumphant.

If we look to the civilized portions of the fallen world, we find a state of things, that surely indicates that we are just on the eve of a great change.

This is beyond all question an epoch age, the world is rushing to the fast approaching, new dispensation.

The divine chart of the world's history and destiny, speaks in no uncertain language. And when we look into its heavenly illuminated pages, we see that the days of Sodom and the crimes against God and humanity, are again upon us. The times are too portentious to be mistaken. The red-handed sins of the days of the cities of the plains, again fill all lands.

The marriage relation is fast breaking down before the insidious attacks of that subtile demonism, that is fast turning the race from God—and preparing the world for the advent of the Man of Sin—the personal Anti-Christ—that "wicked one," that is to be the scourge of the last days.

The murder of children is not confined to heathen lands. Indeed that crime against nature, prevails to an extent, to appall us as we contemplate it. Change is doing its deadly work all over earth—and sorrowful as the fact may be, to look upon—the great family of man is sinking away from the light of heaven and the wooing influence of God.

The three unclean spirits, that are to be the brain of the latter time, have gone forth, in their mystic influence, and have entered into the heart of the kings of the earth, and the people, and denial of law and authority of all kinds follows. Evil has gone forth from nation to nation and a great whirlwind is being raised up from the coasts of the earth—the times are perilous beyond parallel.

Not a nation on earth but what is in trouble and many of them on the verge of revolution and many more of them surging amid the fearful throes of internecine war.

The Church—the highest and purest organization, is stricken in many portions and has no rest. It has departed from the faith once delivered to the saints—wrangles on immaterial things and has forgotten the great promises so dear to it in its purer day.

The notion of a spiritual reign of Christ for a thousand years, has taken the place of the faith of the church held for sixteen hundred years, of the personal reign on earth, with his saints and the subduing of the nations.

This one great, central truth of revelation, being spiritualized, the church has become greatly demoralized. And all the grand promises, to be literally fulfilled on earth are frittered away.

The promise to Abraham and his seed, "as heir of the world," is diluted down to mean blessings, to be received:—

"Beyond the bounds of time and space."

And this spiritualizing theory has turned the simple and literal words of the angel, spoken to Mary—"and the Lord God shall give unto him the throne of his father David and he shall reign over the house of Jacob forever"—into a spiritual reign in the heart of believers and to be enjoyed in a spiritual kingdom of grace.

This makes religion so unreal, so mythical, as to leave it without power. So unbelief, peril and unrest fill the world.

The great question asked by the Savior, "when the Son of man comes shall he find faith, (the) faith upon the earth," startles us when we fully realize the lack of faith among Christians—as to the great truth—the personal reign of Christ upon earth.

Why multiply words—these times and these perils are but the delusion of Satan—they are but the indications of that "falling away" that must come before the final advent and glorious reign on earth of the Son of man.—J. Harper, in Prophetic Times.

The Last Good Night.

Mother, good night! my work is done,
I go to rest with the setting sun;
But not to wake with the morning light;
So, dearest mother, a long good night!

Father, good night! the shadows glide
Silently down to the river's side,—
The river itself with stars is bright,
So, dearest father, a long good night!

Sisters, good night! the roses close
Their dewy eyes for the night's repose;
And a strange damp mist obscures my sight,
So, dearest sisters, a long good night!

Brothers, good night! the sunset flush
Has died away, and a midnight hush
Has settled o'er plain and mountain height;
So dearest brothers, a long good night!

Good night! good night! nay do not weep;
I'm weary o' earth, I long to sleep—
I shall wake again with the dawning light
Of eternal day,—good night, good night!

A Solid Ghost.

A Successful Experiment in Materialization.

Until lately spiritual manifestations have not been very satisfactory in San Francisco. A little while ago, however, it became bruited about that the spirits had actually succeeded in materializing through the magnetic forces possessed by an amateur medium, and quite a rush was occasioned to witness the marvelous phenomenon at the usual charge of one dollar each.

In the room in which these manifestations occurred was a large clothes closet, extending nearly to the ceiling, which was appropriated as the indispensable cabinet. Ghastly faces appeared at the round hole which had been cut in the front of the cabinet, and were distinctly seen by the dim light maintained, while strange voices were heard, as if proceeding from the air, conveying messages of varying import to those present. It was finally announced that the familiar spirit of the medium was preparing for full materialization, and would emerge from the cabinet in complete form as in life. This startling exhibition was appointed for Sunday evening, and the familiar spirit was understood to be a young Indian warrior, who had inhabited that part of the world at some remote period of antiquity. The company was found to be excellently chosen for obtaining a perfectly harmonious condition of the magnetic influences, and after the medium had taken his position in the cabinet and relapsed into the trance, weird and shadowy faces shortly flitted before the round hole in the door. The company sung successively a number of favorite songs, and at each interval watched anxiously for the opening of the cabinet and the appearance of the expected materialized spirit. They had just renewed the sweet, persuasive influence, and were singing the touching ballad of the "Poor Old Slave" with much feeling, when suddenly the harmony was dispelled by a sharp crackling, followed by a crash and the descent of a heavy body into the midst of the circle, knocking several of the members prostrate, and producing a sensation similar to that experienced at the critical instant of a steamboat explosion or railway collision. A good part of the company made a bolt for the point of egress, and dashed down three flights of stairs without tarrying to inquire the origin of the shock; others were petrified with mortal terror and retained their seats, while one or two of the most daring proceeded to determine the precise character of the phenomena. The light was restored, and the strange visitor was discovered lying on the floor, with splintered laths and fragments of plaster scattered about him. It was the medium's familiar spirit, the Indian warrior, completely and most palpably materialized. He was bleeding profusely at the nose, and was in sore distress from a concussion of the abdomen caused by his falling across the head of one of the company in his sudden descent. As soon as the unfortunate savage could recover his breath sufficiently to articulate between his groans and profane ejaculations of the most modern construction, he exclaimed, beseechingly, "Sam, go for the nearest doctor; get Silvers." By this time medium had recovered consciousness, and, emerging from the cabinet in evident chagrin and dismay, he remarked pathetically, while gazing at an enormous rent in the ceiling overhead, "What made you step between the joists? This has just bust the whole business."

—Dr. Cumming stated, on a recent Sabbath, that without wishing to be vain-glorious, he had to take credit for the fulfillment of the prophecies which he had uttered for some twenty year previously. According to the united testimony of Mr. Gladstone and Mr. Disraeli, the whole world was upon the eve of the most tremendous conflict which had ever shaken it to its foundations, at the conclusion of which Christ would appear in his second coming.

Russian Strength in the East.

The Cologne Gazette of Wednesday prints an article from its well-known and well-informed military correspondent reviewing the forces which Russia has disposable for war in Asia. The troops now stationed in Asia are nearly adequate to the great work which Russia appears to have before her, and to the accomplishment of which she may be called any day. They are few in number, armed with weapons of primitive construction, many of them irregularly organized, and scattered over the whole breadth of the occupied territory. It would require many mouths to concentrate on a given spot. All in all the army in Asia comprises 28 battalions, 14 batteries, and 210 squadrons, numbering 60,500 men, 32,650 horses, and 112 guns. In addition 23 battalions and 68 squadrons of Cossack troops, scattered over the Amoor, Sabaikal, Orenburg, and Astrachan districts, and numbering 25,750 men and 9,650 horses, are available as reserves. If all these troops were ordered into the field for war service, 27 battalions, 12 squadrons, and three half-batteries, numbering altogether 30,850 men, 2,750 horses, and 28 guns, would still remain disposable for garrison duty. Russia is thus shown to command in Asia a force of about 80,000 men available for war, and all in all 110,000 men. But, as already observed, these troops were scattered far and wide over immeasurable tracts. Of the mounted force, looking so imposing on paper, all but the 12 regiments of Ural Cossacks are irregular levies. Only four battalions of sharp shooters are as yet armed with Berdan rifles; the others have the large bore Terry-Norman musket, converted from old muzzle-loaders. Two batteries of the artillery have bronze breech-loaders; the others still use muzzle-loaders, a good many not being not even rifled. The writer believes that from this evident lack of preparation for war Russia may be interred not to contemplate active hostilities. But it must be borne in mind that for such she has her excellent Circassian army near at hand, containing a numerically strong force, well equipped, well drilled, practiced in practical warfare, and all of them picked men. Moreover, Russia is organizing a sixth division of infantry, the order for the formation of which has already been issued. Whatever improvements have been introduced into the Russian army in the way of new weapons or equipmen have been first made available for these troops, on the efficiency of which Russia appears specially bent. The force reviewed would suffice, in case of war, to keep both Turkey and Persia completely in check, and still leave a sufficient contingent over to meet any British force such as could be mustered in India on equal terms. The troops have shown what they can do in the Khivan campaign. Beyond the land force, Russia is well prepared at sea. The Black Sea, the Caspian, and Lake Aral are all of them well guarded by naval forces. The Black Sea squadron comprises five screw corvettes and two yachts, of collectively 1,864 horses' power and 47 guns, with three ironclad vessels besides building. The Caspian squadron consists of 14 sailing vessels and 17 steamers, having collectively 990 horses' power and five guns; and the squadron on Lake Aral is made up of six steamers, with 190 horses' power and eight guns. Moreover there is the Siberian coast fleet, consisting of 34 steamers, of 1,820 horses' power, and with 81 guns.

Analogy of a Future Life.

There is a remarkable phenomenon connected with insect life, which has often occurred to my mind, while meditating on the subject of preparedness for a future state, as presenting a curious analogy.

Most persons know that every butterfly (the Greek name for which, it is remarkable, is the same that signifies also the soul—psyche) comes from a grub or caterpillar; in the language of naturalists called a larva. The last name (which signifies literally a mask) was introduced by Linnæus, because the caterpillar is a kind of outward covering, or disguise, of the future butterfly within. For, it has been ascertained by curious microscopic examination, that a distinct butterfly, only undeveloped and not full grown, is contained within the body of the caterpillar; that this latter has its own organs of digestion, respiration, etc., suitable to its larva-life, quite distinct from, and independent of, the future butterfly which it encloses. When the proper period arrives, and the life of the insect in this its first stage, is to close, it becomes what is called a pupa enclosed in a chrysalis or cocoon (often composed of silk; as is that of the silkworm, which supplies us that important article), and lies torpid for a time within this natural coffin, from which it issues, at the proper period, as a perfect butterfly.

But sometimes this process is marred. There is a numerous tribe of insects well known to naturalists, called ichneumon flies, which in their larva-state are parasitical; that is, inhabit and feed on other larvæ. The ichneumon fly, being provided with a long sharp sting, which is in fact an ovipositor (egg layer), pierces with this the body of a caterpillar in several places, and deposits her eggs which are there hatched, and feed, as grubs (larvæ) on the inward parts of their victim. A most wonderful circumstance connected with this process is, that a caterpillar which has been thus attacked goes on feeding and apparently thriving quite as well, during the whole of its larva-life, as those that have escaped. For, by a wonderful provision of instinct, the ichneumon-grubs within do not injure any of the organs of the larva, but feed only on the future butterfly enclosed within it. And consequently, it is hardly possible to distinguish a caterpillar which has these enemies within it from those that are untouched. But when the period arrives for the close of the larva-life, the difference appears. You may often observe the common cabbage-caterpillars retiring, to undergo their change, into some sheltered spot—such as the walls of a summer house; and some of them—those that have escaped the parasites—assuming the pupa-state, from which they emerge butterflies. Of the unfortunate caterpillar that has been preyed upon nothing remains but an empty skin. The hidden butterfly has been secretly consumed. Now, is there not something analogous to this wonderful phenomenon in the condition of some of our race? May not a man have a kind of secret enemy within his own bosom, destroying his soul—psyche—though without interfering with his well being during the present stage of his existence; and whose presence may never be detected till the time arrives when the last great change should take place? Every man should reflect whether this may not be his case, remembering that it is in his power now, through the help that is promised, to detect and destroy these secret but deadly enemies within him. —Archbishop Whately.

Private Prayer.

The largest part of the Christian's prayers will always be in private. If it be not more secret than public, more hidden than open—if his prayers in his closet, in his studies, in his walks, are not far more constant and important than his prayers in company and in church—he ought to doubt whether he does not pray to be seen of men rather than to be seen and heard of God. Secret prayer is the fountain of all other prayer. Where there is no habit of private communion with God there will be no earnestness in public prayer. It will be formal, dry, and consisting in endless repetitions of the customary phrases. The life of religion in the soul consists in habitual communion with God, in gratitude, in supplication, in "the flight of one alone to the Only One." This hidden, inner life must be maintained in its fullness by constant prayer, and thus it will flow out easily into all the acts of public devotion and active goodness. But when this inner life stagnates, then the outward acts of devotion become formal and rigid, and the man is like a tree, hollow at the heart, which still may maintain an outward, languid show of life.

Secret prayer is the sign and the food of this inner life; its sign—for this life is love, and where love exists it will express itself. If the heart loves God, it will commune with Him; it will habitually turn to Him, as the heliotrope to the king of day; it will lean on Him in dependence, trust and confidence.

One great advantage of private or individual prayer is its freedom of form; another, its greater range of subjects and occasions. Its form is free. It may be mental or oral, it may be only the unexpressed, sincere desire of the soul, or it may be a verbal utterance of wants and needs. It may be only

"The burden of a sigh
The falling of a tear,
The upward glancing of an eye
When none but God is near."

It may be at set times, or at any and every time, walking to and fro, sitting, kneeling, waking at midnight on the bed, in the midst of affairs. We carry this closet with us everywhere; we can always step in and shut the door. No one sees that we have gone in, unless our secret communion with our Father shows itself by "a sweet, attractive kind of grace," which such intercourse leaves behind it on the features.

His One Mighty Work.

We read in the Scriptures that Jesus Christ the immortal Son of God, has in his hands "all power in heaven and on earth." Of course He possesses the right and desire to wield that power. He that is the all-powerful one. Love infinite to save, hides in his heart; zeal, burning and resistless, animates his purpose; power, omnipotent to do, lies in his hand. But did the reader ever imagine what this mighty one is doing? Whom is He saving? Is He redeeming lost angels? The Scriptures are silent. Is He creating new worlds? It is not so declared. Nevertheless He is not idle, but ever at his work age after age.

Now the one thing our Lord is said to be doing, is saving lost men from sin and death. This King has no other business. With Him there is no plea of lack of time on account of other and pressing cares. Redemption is his one all-important mission, his all-absorbing theme. He lives for this. This blessed task, and this alone, He lovingly and untiringly seeks to accomplish. With it his great heart is burdened, his time occupied, his hand ceaselessly employed. Towards its completion all his sacred zeal, his wasteless affections, and his mighty energies are assiduously bent. On earth He had but one purpose, one work, "to seek and to save that which was lost." In heaven He ever lives, not to create new orbs in endless space, but to make effectual intercession for mankind. Before the throne He pleads as intercessor; on the throne He asks as king, and Jehovah hears his voice. Truly God has laid help on one mighty to save.

Hence it only needs that men will to be saved, and then how easy for prince Jesus through the apostles to save five thousand at Jerusalem, through some other servant's preaching to save a thousand in another city, and through another to save ten thousand in our own day, all in a few short months.

Jesus is sleepless and invincible. Close to the supreme throne He stays and loves and pleads. In the mercy-seat He is resistless. With intense devotion He cries, "Father, all these have sinned; turn the sinner to his injured king, and for my sake freely forgive him." O, such pitying, unfaltering love! O, such tireless long suffering! O, such yearning, agonizing solicitude! O, such mingled sympathy and might! With these attractive qualities is the breast of the King filled. Can any doubt it?

High up in the splendors of the beautiful city, surrounded by shining throngs of angels, Jesus lives, and for thee, O ungodly one, this royal potentate intercedes. O, with such a helper none need to perish. Will you persist in scorning his love and defying his power? What amazing infatuation to know that He exists but to save and bless you forever and ever, and still at the last to weep and wail, and wrapped in keen despair, bitterly exclaim, "We are not saved!"

Save a sin-ruined, dying world, O Christ, yes, save even me!—D. T. T.

Unknown to the World.

By the world our Lord was not known to the Son of God; for in his incarnation He dispensed with the glorious condition He had with the Father and took the condition of a servant. There was no personal manifestations of his Divine nature seen in his outward appearance. He was to the eye of flesh no more than man, the son of Joseph and Mary. The mystery of his conception if made known to them was not believed. Hence, though his works were sufficient evidences of the truth of his doctrines and the validity of his claims, they rejected Him. There were some who believed on Him when they saw his works, and confessed Him, and to them gave He power to become the Sons of God, by a Spiritual renewing. Now, as He was, so are all who believe on Him in this world. They are not known to be the Sons of God. No external mark is set upon them to distinguish them as such. The traits of Christian character, as developed in the faithful believer, do indeed gradually exhibit themselves in the placidity of his countenance and the gentleness of his demeanor, but no halo of glory surrounds his head. It is enough that the disciple be as his Master and the servant as his Lord. Therefore the world knoweth us not because it knew Him not. Our relation as Sons of God is not now made manifest by our condition. The world derides it as a superstition and regards the hope of its future realization as a delusion. But we know, by faith, its truthfulness and reliability.

This unknown state is suitable as a state of trial, in which we walk by faith. We are here as children under age, receiving education, subject to tutors and governors, differing not in externals from servants, though entitled to all the glories of the Father's estate. This subjection to disciplinary arrangements in which are included fiery trials and severe afflictions is to prove our sincerity and steadfastness, and strengthen our faith in God. And we may rest assured that it is needful or it would not have been appointed. It tends to develope and perfect the life of faith; and prepare us for the future manifestation of the sons of God. It is hereafter that our condition will correspond with our relation, and will be one of glory.

Our Lord said to the High Priest, "Hereafter ye shall see the Son of Man sitting on the right hand of power and coming in the clouds of heaven." Now He is in the unapproachable light, which no man hath seen or can see; and our life, as to its glory hidden with Him in God; and when He shall appear we shall also appear with Him in glory. Then we shall be like Him. Our bodies will be immortal and incorruptible like his glorious body. And shall be arrayed in the royal garments of God's priests and kings. Then shall we be known as the sons of God, being made One with Christ and glorified together with Him.—Prophetic Times.

Wait.

BY S. BOZATA WIRTH.

A thousand years is but a day
To him who ruleth all the spheres;
He calmly plans while mortals wail,
Yet numbs all his children's tears.

He heareth every secret prayer
That burdened hearts pour out to him,
And weigheth through the shadows long
To perfect that which seemeth dim.

The roll of honor not yet full,
The crown of glory not yet won,
He waiteth still within his plans
Electing many a lowly one.

But tears and prayers shall yet avail
To bring the glad millennium in,
And God's own time shall come at last
To make an end of woe and sin.

So patient we must watch and wait
Enduring all the cold world's scorn;
The Christ we love shall come again,
Then faithful be until the morn.

Report of Discussion.

A Synopsis of first proposition debated between Snider of the Christian Church, and G. W. Myers of the Church of God, in the north portion of Montgomery county, Kansas, commencing the 23d ultimo, and lasting four nights.

Prop. "Resolved, That the Bible teaches that death is a cessation of a conscious state of existence." Myers affirmed. Brother Myers after some appropriate remarks by way of introduction, asked the question, "What is Man?" And gave us Webster's definition, "Signifies primarily form." 2 Gen. ii, 7, "of the dust;" 3 Gen. vi. 3. "That man is flesh." Hence we find that man was formed. 2. Power put into the man. 3. Result produced a living soul. And the man being flesh, blood in the flesh. "The life is in the blood," not an immortal soul, or spirit. See Lev. xvii. 14. At the death of the man the spirit returned to God who gave it, and man, or the form returned to the dust as it (the form) was!

Doctor Snider's first speech. After a few remarks by way of disabusing the minds of the audience of the effects of Brother Myer's remarks, introduces Elihu's opinion as found in Job xxxii. 8. "A spirit in man." Death, he said, was a separation of parts. James ii. 26; Eccl. xii. 7; 2 Cor. xii. 2, and Rev. vi. 9, 10. "I saw under the altar the souls." These were the immortal spirits of the martyrs. The man proper is the spirit. He is not talking about the soul, but the spirit. Q. Does the spirit die? Did God breathe the breath of life into the animals? Dives, and Lazarus are referred to, to prove that spirits were conscious and had eyes, and fingers, after the body, house, or the tabernacle it dwelt in died.

Brother Myers in reviewing Gen. ii. 7. The man formed of dust, "and yet, man without life, thought, light or knowledge, was called man, until God breathed into his nostrils the breath of life" before "man became a living soul," and then read Gen. vi. 17. "Destroy all flesh wherein is the breath of life," and Gen. vii. 21, 22. "And all flesh died—fowl, cattle, beast—every man, all in whose nostrils was the breath of life—died." Then he dwelt upon the law given and broken, the judgment and execution of it upon the man, "dust thou art and unto dust shalt thou return." Here Snider admitted the proposition, and it was changed to read, "does the entire man die?" In proof, Job xxxiv. 14, 15. If God should gather his spirit and breath, all flesh shall perish together, and man shall turn to dust again, as he was before he was formed, and was in harmony of Gen. iii. 19. "Dust thou art," &c., carried out in Gen. v. 5. "And he died." Abraham, Gen. xxv. 8, 9, gave up, "breathed out" and was buried. Ishmael 17th verse; Isaac xxxiv. 29; Jacob xlix. 33; l. 1-13; Joseph l. 26. Snider said, "We have heard another speech! [Laughter.]

"The outer man dies, but the inner man never dies!" Quotes James ii. 26; Zech. xii. 1; 2 Cor. xii. 2, 3. "Is a corpse ever called a dead soul?" Quotes Thess. iv. 13, 14; 1 Cor. xv. 35-38. This is clear proof the entire man does not die. My first argument is based upon Job xxxii 8. Reads 2. Prov. xx. 27. 3. Eccl. iii. 21. 4, viii 8. 5. xii. 7. 6. Zech. xii. 1. 7. Job iv. 15, 16. 8. Job xxxii. 18. 9. Prov. xxv. 28. 10. Luke viii. 55. 11. Acts xvii. 16. "Paul's spirit stirred within him." 12. Acts xxiii. 6-9. 13. Rom. viii. 16. 14. 1 Cor. ii. 11 15. 2 Cor. iv. 16—outward we perish—the inward is "renewed day by day." Myers asked if man's skull should be crushed in upon the brain, was that man conscious until it was replaced and the brain relieved? A. "The spirit is conscious!" Myers question. "Do souls possess blood? as referred to by Snider in Rev. vi. 10." No answer. Q. As Brother Snider is a physician, and has dissected dead men, did he ever find the "vacuum! the immortal soul, spirit, or inner man occupied, while the inner man was in the house?" If so, wherein the house did he find such a space? No answer. Do never dying souls or spirits continue under the altar where their bodies were slain, and not go into heaven at the death of those bodies? No answer.

Snider uses about thirty-two quotations, calling them arguments, to prove that man possessed a spirit in him. Myers informed the audience, he (Myers) had not denied that, but admitted it from the first, yet he denied the spirit of man being "the man proper" or improper. And the spirit of man could not be the m..., any more than the Spirit of God could be God. Neither could the steam in the engine, be the engine "proper." Myers defines the inner man, and refers to Col. iii. 9, 10; Rom. vi. 1-6, and xii. 1, 2, a renewed mind, or changed mind from the love of sin to the love of God. The proposition was changed to read, does the Scriptures teach the entire man dies? It was done to please Snider. He could not answer those questions Myers had given him in regard to man's consciousness, and the manifestations of life in the incipient state, as inhaling and exhaling, or inbreathing and outbreathing, from a scientific standpoint.

Doctor Sniders' rendering of Luke xvi. 19-31, that the spirit of the rich man, after his body was dead and buried, lifted up its eyes in hell, and talked to Abraham—prayed to Abraham—and so on. Myers claimed that the word spirit, was not in the quotation, hence, Snider was mistaken. Snider referred to Luke xxiii. 42, 43, and said the spirit of the thief and the spirit of Christ went to paradise that day. Myers claimed that Snider must be mistaken, for the records do not give any account of the thief dying that day, or that his spirit left him that day. And the proper way to understand the passage, would be, that the petition of the thief was made that day, to be remembered "when (Jesus) thou comest into thy kingdom." Will Snider admit the kingdom came then? No. The answer was spoken by Jesus that day, "Shalt thou be with me in paradise?" "Shalt thou" alludes to the future, at his second coming. See 2 Tim. iv. 1. At the judging of "the quick and dead at his appearing (the second time) and his kingdom." In reference to man's condition in death, Myers referred to David's death as found in 1 King's ii. 1, 2-10; Acts ii. 29, and xiii. 36; and to Christ's death, and Stephens' to prove "the entire man dies," and as to man going to heaven at the death of the body; there was not one passage that intimated such a thing between the lids of the Bible. But Snider would contend that the "soul or spirit," and "the inner man" or "the man proper did go immediately to heaven, and was conscious from the death of the old house, the mortal body, until the resurrection of the old body." Myers asked the question: In the resurrection would the souls have two bodies? And do sinners have the inner man, spoken of by Paul? No answer. Snider said the beggar was on the Abraham side of hades, and the rich man was on the other side in torment, &c. Myers question. Is Abraham's bosom paradise, and in hades? When Snider had proven by Paul it was in the third heaven; and if all men's spirits return unto God, as Snider contends, how could they be in prison in the days of Noah, in Abraham's bosom, and beyond the gulf in the hot side of hades, and under the altar, all at the same time?

It must be impossible. Again, if some souls go to heaven, and some where the rich man was at the death of the body, or house, what need is there for a "judgment to come" or a resurrection of the dead? And if Snider's arguments prove that the entire man does not die, then the serpent told Eve the truth when he said, "Ye shall not surely die." God said to Adam, he should "surely die," and Myers believed that Adam did die. And when Jesus said, "No man hath ascended up to heaven," He spoke the truth, no matter what Snider may say to the contrary. As a matter of course, the fact that Snider produced some forty texts of the Scriptures to prove there is a spirit in man, was to some of his church a convincing argument; yet to others of his own church, confessed that Brother Myers had proved the affirmative side, logically, scientifically, and by the "sure word," which is the Scriptures. Myers informed the audience the third night of first proposition (it continued four) that he had been requested to meet his friend in debate, and until then he verily believed he had seen, been introduced to, and had been debating with the man called Snider. But he had learned that it was only the body of Snider. And of course he had not seen the real man, but simply the house in which Snider lived.

Though it was a busy time and large school house, and in the country, yet it was crowded so that many were compelled to stand for two hours—hard work. I would say in conclusion that the brethren may be thankful unto God, that it ever became necessary for Brother Myers to be turned out of the Christian Church, and become a member of the Church of God, for he is able and willing at all times to defend the faith.

Yours in hope of that promised life.

The Time.

BROTHER REED:—

As a reader of the RESTITUTION permit me to say through your much prized paper, that some friend has seen proper to send me a paper published in Massachusetts. The Time Appointed, viz. 1875. This may be the fact, but for any man to designate definitely the time of our blessed Lord's return is to appear wise above what is written. For thus it is written, "The day and hour knoweth no man, no not the angels in heaven but my Father only." Matt. xxiv. 36-42. But watch therefore for ye know not what hour the Lord doth come. Now these were the words of the Anointed of the Father, and addressed to his disciples; and further, he positively declared that the Father alone had knowledge of the time of the return of his son. He spoke the things given or made known to him by the Father and as such did not claim to know the fact himself. Why was it that the disciples were instructed to watch? Matt. xxiv. 42. Luke xii. 39. 40. Rev. xvi. 15. iii. 3. If therefore thou shalt not watch xvi. 15. "Behold I come as a thief. Blessed is he that watcheth and keepeth his garments," etc. The presumption is that, if the chronology of the visions of Daniel was such as to admit of a definite calculation as claimed by some, would not the inspired Apostles have spoken of the time definitely? John in the Apocalypse having many glorious revelations made known and shown to him, yea the scenes of the last day, yet leaves the time indefinite. He is only instructed to say by way of caution watch. Why watch? Because ye know not what hour your Lord cometh. Thus as true soldiers we all should stand as sentinels, inasmuch as our blessed Lord will come upon us as a thief, or an enemy would, for if we knew what hour the thief would come, we would only prepare to meet him at the hour of his coming. May we not say that it is the wisdom of our heavenly Father that we should not know the day or hour. But rather that we live out our pilgrimage as sojourners in watchfulness and faithfulness to the end; inasmuch as to such will the coronal wreath and white robes be given all such as adorn their lives with meekness shall inherit the (earth) covenanted promises made to the Fathers, and to all such the Lord will not come unaware, for when they hear the Bridegroom's voice they will readily rise up, trim their lamps, and go out to meet him, for the voice of the Shepherd will be a joyful sound to the sheep of the true fold. What servant is he that would not with great satisfaction meet his master, when he knowingly had been faithful in all things committed to his trust? My brethren, should we have any misgiving in the return of the Nobleman; though the time be sealed up until the time of the end; Dan. xii. 9, "And he said go thy way Daniel, for the words are closed up and sealed till the time of the end." Verse 1st. "And at that time shall Michael stand up the great prince which standeth for the children of the people, and then shall be a time of trouble such as never was since there was a nation even to that same time, and at that time thy people shall be delivered, every one that shall be found written in the Book, and many of them that sleep in the dust of the earth shall awake," etc. Verse 4th. "But thou O, Daniel shut up the words and seal the Book even to the time of the end, etc. Verse 8th And I heard but I understood not, then said I O, my Lord, what shall be the end of these things; and he said go thy way Daniel, for the words are closed up and sealed till the time of the end." Rev. v. 9. "And they sang a new song, saying thou art worthy to take the Book and open the seals thereof for thou wast slain and hast redeemed us to God by thy blood out of every kindred, and tongue, and people, and nation, and we shall reign on the earth." Not knowing the day of our blessed Lord's return, my brethren, we are not disposed to say my Lord delayed his coming but rather pray thy kingdom come, and would say to all watch. In the hope of the kingdom I am yours.

What the Spirit Saith.

He that hath an ear, let him hear what the Spirit saith unto the churches. To him that overcometh will I give to eat of the tree of life, which is in the midst of the Paradise of God. He that overcometh shall not be hurt of the second death. To him that overcometh will I give to eat of the hidden manna, and will give him a white stone, and in the stone a new name written which no man knoweth, saving he that receiveth it. And he that overcometh, and keepeth my works unto the end, to him will I give power over the nations, and he shall rule them with a rod of iron; as the vessels of a potter shall they be broken to shivers; even as I received of my Father. And I will give him the morning star. He that overcometh, the same shall be clothed in white raiment; and I will not blot out his name out of the book of life, but I will confess his name before my Father, and before his angels. Him that overcometh will I make a pillar in the temple of my God, and he shall go no more out, and I will write upon him the name of my God, and the name of the city of my God, which is new Jerusalem, which cometh down out of heaven from my God, and I will write upon him my new name. To him that overcometh will I grant to sit with me in my throne, even as I also overcame and am set down with my Father in his throne.

BENJAMIN R. LAND.

The Book of Sevens.

Seven golden lampstands, seven stars, seven seals, seven trumpets, seven plagues, seven promises to him that overcomes, the seven times repeated warning. "Behold I come quickly." This wonderful scale is given to the church, a revelation of Jesus Christ, which God gave to Him to point out to his servants the things to be done.

"What thou seest write in a scroll, and send to the seven churches." "I Jesus sent mine angel to testify to you these things in the churches." "And behold, I am coming speedily, blessed is he that keeps the words of the prophecy of this scroll." "And he said to me, Seal not the words of the prophecy of this scroll for the time is near, I testify to every one who hears the words of the scroll of this prophecy. If any one add to them God will add to him the plagues written therein. The plagues written in this prophecy are fearful, but the blessings are glorious. It is written in figures and similies as he who testified these things, spoke while on earth, when he opened his mouth in parables and uttered things kept secret from the foundation of the world."

This is one strong evidence to the waiting bride that the letter come from her absent Lord. Look at Matt. xiii. where He illustrates the things of the kingdom by figures, then open this wonderful scroll and see if it is not this same Jesus talking to his disciples. The good seed are the children of the kingdom. The tares are the children of the wicked one. The seven stars are the messengers of the seven churches, and the seven lampstands are the seven churches. The seven heads are the seven mountains on which the woman sits. The woman is that great city that reigns over the kings of the earth. If the church would see herself in all her career, let her look into this faithful mirror. Here is the good and the bad—the gilded harlot in all the carnival of her downward career, from the first step where she leaves her first love, then committing lewdness with the great ones of the earth, and afterward becoming intoxicated with the blood of the witnesses of Jesus. But in the midst of her drunken frenzy she lands in the flames of judgment. Here are the pure and holy suffering, toiling, imprisoned, torn with wild beasts, trodden under foot, burning in flames, famished, lying dead in the streets of the city with the enemy holding a jubilee over their dead bodies. But from the dust she arises clad in white garments, meeting the king in the cloud. He takes her to Himself, as his bride, then as the exalted and glorified Jerusalem she comes down to take her place as queen of the world. Blessed is he that reads and they that hear the words of the book of this prophecy. But we must remember it is Jesus that is speaking, and that He is talking to his disciples, and the style is all his own. He who illustrates the kingdom by the mustard seed, the treasure hid in the field, the pearl of great price, the leaven, the tares and wheat, the drag net, the sower and the seed. Yet 'tis the same Jesus, but in his glorified nature, hence his figures and similies are of a more intricate nature. He said to the disciples, "I have many things to say to you, but ye are not able to bear them now." What He said to them while on earth He received from the Father. This last message God gave to Him to point out to his servants. The things given to the church are for her express benefit. Here she may look and see herself just as she is in all her transits. She can take her reckonings, the way marks are plain, the mile stones are all set up. But she must learn of Jesus; she must sit at his feet. His explanations she must accept. If she turns aside for the wisdom of the world she is deceived. There is not a figure used in this message, but what we find the signification of somewhere in God's book. The golden lampstand with its seven branches is used as the figure of all the congregation of God—the seven stars all the ministry of the congregations. We find the harlot woman Jezebel in the midst of the seven lamps at Thyatira but her children shall be killed with death. In the midst of the seven lampstands Jesus is seen by John in the vision, and John's visitation is in the Lord's day. And the disciples asked Him where the elect should be gathered, and He answered, Where the dead carcass is there will the eagles be gathered together.

The woman Jezebel made Rome the seat of her empire, her children are to be slain, the nations are to destroy her, and there the elect are to be gathered to Him. True as life is the figure. She is presented in the midst of the lampstands, and she has occupied the most exalted and central position of all the churches.

He who could illustrate the great and increasing kingdom of God, chose the simple figure of the lampstand that stood in the tent in the wilderness, to illustrate the state and condition of the church in all her career. In her travels in the desert those who lusted fell in the wilderness; so also this lustful multitude must fall. All that I ask of the reader is to bear in mind the position that John occupies in the vision. On the Lord's day, in advance of the vision, he turns to see the voice that spoke to him, then being turned he saw one in the midst of the seven lampstands. The center of the number seven is four—three on either side. Let us look from this central lampstand a little further. When he opened the fourth seal, I heard the fourth living one say Come and see. And behold a pale horse, and the name of him that sat thereon was Death, and hades followed after him, and there was given him power over the fourth part of the earth, to kill with sword and with famine and with death and with the wild beasts of the earth. And the fourth angel sounded his trumpet and the third of the sun was smitten, and the third of the moon and the third of the stars, so that the third of them might be darkness, and the day might not shine the third of it and the night likewise. And the fourth poured out his vial on the sun and to him it was given to burn men with fire, and the men were scorched with great heat, and they blasphemed the name of that God who has power over the plagues, and they reformed not to give him glory. In one scene are the seven lampstands burning as seven lamps of fire, and there were seven lamps burning before the throne, which are the seven spirits of God. Said Paul, every man's work must be tried as by fire. If any man's work abide he shall receive reward, but if his work is burned he shall receive a reward but he himself shall be saved, yet as by fire. In another scene we see great Babylon in the flames of her burning, and the great ones of the earth bewailing her. The secret of the book is to find out when and where the seals begin to open, the trumpets begin to sound, and the plagues begin to be poured out, and this we will try by the power of God.

J. G. KISSEY.

False Positions of Universalists.

No. 2.

5. Universalists argue that because "God is love," the whole race must ultimately be saved.

We admit that God is love, but it is only one of his attributes. He is also unchangeable, "the same yesterday, to-day and forever." He always was, is now and ever will be love. His love, like Himself is unchangeable. Though God is love, He condemned Adam and the race to death for sin here, deluged our world for sin here, destroyed Sodom for sin here, doomed the Jewish race to eighteen centuries of suffering and woe for denying his Son, and crucifying Him, and has swept the earth of its inhabitants by death more than a thousand times; and, if unchangeable, He will denounce "the second death" upon all the wicked throughout the cycles of an unending eternity. The logic of God's love and unchangeability, the history of God's dealings with the world in the past, and his threatenings denounced upon the impenitent in the eternal future, demonstrate that this will be the case.

If, notwithstanding his love, He has denounced death upon Adam and the race here for sin, burned up Sodom with fire and brimstone, and has heaped up death and woes against the Israelites for denying and crucifying his Son, and has brought sufferings and death upon millions upon millions of the race for sin here, that same attribute of love, will permit Him to consign to endless perdition all sinners in the world to come.

Will his love be greater there than here? He had the power to save Adam from death here. Did He do it? To save the antediluvians here. Did He do it? To save Sodom. Did He do it? The Jews from the great curse. Has He done it. The millions upon millions who have suffered and died for sin here. Has He done it? No! Famines, pestilences, sickness, suffering and death have stalked abroad o'er our world like a destroying angel, depopulating our sin-cursed world a thousand times! And, if unchangeable, all his attributes will co-operate in "the everlasting destruction" of sinners in the future world. Indeed, his veracity and power are pledged to this in the great and terrible day of God Almighty!

6. Universalists acknowledge the distinction between sin and holiness here, but teach that death will abolish it, or at furtherest it will be abolished in the far off future.

We shall answer this part of their dogma further on, and, at the same time, pay our respects to the fair chance dogma. For the present we affirm that if God makes that distinction here, being unchangeable, all his attributes are pledged to continue that distinction throughout eternity. The awful words of doom in the great day of God Almighty, will be: "These shall go away into everlasting punishment, but the righteous into life eternal." "Everlasting punishment" and "life eternal" are antithesized, and the one shall endure as long as the other. Misery does not inhere in the first, because there is no life in it, but destruction; but the other is "life eternal." Zo-en, life, is applied to the righteous; but it nor any other word implying life, is not applied to the wicked.

Kolasin, rendered "punishment" by King James' version, is defined by Liddell and Scott, to be: "1. a pruning; 2 a checking; 3 punishing; 4 chastisement; 5 correction." But, better than all, the Bible, Paul defines "the punishment" to be "an everlasting destruction." "Who shall be punished with (dionion olethron) an everlasting destruction."

The duration of the punishment or the life in Matt. xxvi. 46, depends 1. upon the definition of the adjective aionios, and 2. upon the state and persons to whom applied. Liddell and Scott define aionios, thus: "lasting, eternal." The same word is applied to God. This word like many others, it is true, is sometimes used in an accommodated sense; but, when applied to God or to beings in the great beyond, it must take on its full and literal meaning.

If, therefore, you shorten the duration of the punishment of the wicked, as do universalists, you shorten the duration of the life of the saints, do away with "eternal life," and dethrone the "eternal God." For the very same word is applied to God in Rom. xvi. 26. "But now is made manifest, and by the Scriptures of the prophets according to the commandment of the the everlasting God"—"ton aionion Theos."

ALFRED MALONE.

Ephesus.

It is just twelve years since the Trustees of the British Museum inaugurated the researches at Ephesus which six years later culminated in the discovery of the Temple of Diana—one of the so-called seven wonders of the world. A firman was obtained from the Turkish Government, and Mr. John T. Wood, of London, was selected to superintend the excavations. The choice of Mr. Wood, an architect by profession, was most happy, and there have been great results from the wisdom of the selection made by the trustees. For eleven years the investigations continued, and were brought to an end, we are told, through motives of economy on the part of the British Government. Not, however, fortunately, before some of the discovered relics were safely placed within the walls of the British Museum. Before Mr. Wood began his work little was known definitely of Ephesus—one of the seven churches—and in its day a city magnificent in all its parts.

The date of founding the city was 1043 B. C. It was the ancient capital of Ionia, and was celebrated for its splendor. The first prominent result of Mr. Wood's work was the discovery of a beautiful building, fifty feet in diameter, having sixteen columns, standing in the middle of a quadrangle, believed to be the tomb of St. Luke, as a most reliable historian has stated that the Apostle was buried at Ephesus. In 1866 the exploration of the Great Theatre was commenced. This vast edifice was found to be 495 feet in diameter, and Mr. Wood calculates that it was capable of holding 24,500 persons. On the last day of the year 1869, Mr. Wood came upon the pavement of the Temple of Diana, some twenty feet below the present surface, and outside the precincts of the ancient city. At a gate of entrance two roads were found to diverge, one of which had deep ruts of chariot wheels, by following which the temple was reached. Pliny gave the dimensions of the temple as 425 feet long by 220 feet wide, but Mr. Wood found these were the dimensions of the lowest step of the base on which the building stood, the actual dimensions of the temple itself being 308 by 163 feet. Ctesiphon is named as the chief architect, and Pliny says there were 127 columns, sixty feet high, of Parian marble, furnished by so many kings. Mr. Wood found the altar in its proper position, and a sculptured figure of Diana was discovered. A vast block of marble, about eleven tons in weight, part of the friezo of the temple, elaborately sculptured with a representation of the ninth labor of Hercules, was among the "treasure trove," and may be seen, together with every other morsel of the sculpture, at the British Museum. Mr. Wood found evidence in the relics that the temple was adorned with gold and rich coloring. The discovery of a lime-kiln on the lower step of the platform, and a large heap of marble chips, is suggestive of what became of the missing part of the edifices.—Boston Advertiser.

Again Disappointed.

The followers of Elder Thurman gathered in Chicago April 19, to the number of about two hundred, to wait for the Lord, in accordance with their leader's prediction. At eight o'clock Monday evening they sat down to partake, for the last time, as they believed, the Lord's supper, fully expecting that the next time they drank of the cup, they would drink it anew with their King in the kingdom of God. As the hours passed on the solemnity grew more and more impressive. At midnight they confidently expected to hear the summons, and see the glorious revelation of Jesus, and be caught away to meet Him in the air. The bells of the city pealed out the noon of the night, but no answering blast of the great trumpet came to their expectant ears. No white robed messengers came to conduct them to the presence of the exalted Redeemer. They waited anxiously and sorrowfully, till the dawn of the 20th day, and then with hearts full of the sadness of keen disappointment, went their way, to reflect on the short-sightedness of human calculations with the times of God.

And thus it has ever been with those who have fixed upon the day and hour of the Lord's coming. In the tenth century, at the end of the first thousand years of the Christian era, men grew suddenly and zealously religious, and proclaimed the advent of Jesus as to take place at that date. The German Emperor, Henry VII., came down from his throne, and clad in sackcloth preached to his people of Jesus. The day passed, and Jesus did not come, but the religious fever was up, and the first crusade resulted.

In 1843, Miller preached the coming of Jesus, and the destruction of the world. Many of us know what were the scenes of excitement attending that time; how the whole religious world was stirred up, but disappointment was again the result of preaching a set time. The day has been set and postponed to a more convenient season of agreement with their chronology, but all to no purpose,—the coming of the Lord is still future, and mortality is still the inheritance of the saints. Thurman issued his "Sealed Book of Daniel Opened," fixing the Lord's coming on the 10th day of September, 1868, based on astronomical cycles, and the Jewish Jubilees; and when that day came and went, he extended the time to the 19th of April, 1875, on the same figuring and basis. Dr. Thomas fixed the time of the advent as likely to occur in 1868–69, and then revised his figures, and, it is said, extended the time for a century.

Now what does all this teach? That the coming of the Lord is a myth? a chimera of faith, impossible to be realized? Nay verily; the promise of Jesus is still yea and amen; that if He went away He would return again, and take his believing little ones unto Himself. John xiv. 3. The declaration of the angels to the uplooking disciples, is still ringing throughout the world, clear and sonorous as the chimes of St. Paul's—"This same Jesus, which is taken up from you into heaven, shall so come in like manner as ye have seen him go into heaven." Acts i. 11. Paul's consolation to the Thessalonian brethren, concerning them which are asleep, still stands upon the page of Holy Writ, gleaming in all its brilliancy of hope and confidence: "For the Lord himself shall descend from heaven with a shout, with the voice of the archangel, and with the trump of God, and the dead in Christ shall rise first. Then we which are alive and remain shall be caught up together with them in the clouds, to meet the Lord in the air." 1 Thess. iv. 16, 17.

This constant disappointment of hopes fixed on some particular day, teaches us that human figuring on God's unrevealed purposes is futile and worse than vanity. If Jesus' declarations as recorded in Matt. xxiv. 40, 41, as to the condition of man at his second coming, teach any thing, they unmistakably teach that men will be engaged in their usual avocations, or at rest in their beds, unconscious of the imminency of his advent; and on this account his exhortation immediately following in verse 22—"Watch therefore, for ye KNOW not what hour your Lord doth come," is pertinent and impressive. Let the Christian be at work for the Lord, discharging the duty that is nearest to him,—being a help to his fellows as far as he is able, rather than a hindrance, and he need not go off to Chicago, or Indianapolis, or New York, or Oshkosh, or Jerusalem to find the Lord, for He will be nigh unto him, even at the door. Let us all be like the sturdy old patriot in the colonial legislature of Connecticut when the darkness came upon them in mid day and his compeers were frightened and dismayed, thinking the "last day" had come. Standing up in his seat as presiding officer, he said: "Bring in candles! If this be the day of judgment, let the Lord find us discharging our duty." Let the Lord find us cultivating his vineyard, sowing seeds of kindness, and nursing the tender shoots thereof. Whatsoever we find to do that will better our condition, and that of mankind, let us do it heartily for the love of Jesus as well as for the love of the work itself. If we do this we shall not only be watching every day for the Lord to come, but ready at all times to lay down our present life-work and take up the next, with joy and not with grief.

Childishness in Religion.

"And Jesus called a little child unto Him, and set him in the midst of them, and said—Verily, I say unto you, Except ye be converted and become as little children, ye shall not enter into the kingdom of heaven." —Matt. xviii. 2, 3.

"That we be no longer children, tossed as waves and carried about by every wind of teaching, in the sleight of men, in craftiness that leadeth to the system of error; but being followers of truth in love, may grow into Him in all things, which is the head, even Christ."—Eph. iv. 14, 15, Alford's Translation.

Between these words of the Master and of the disciple there is no real discrepancy, for while the former exhorts to childlikeness, the latter expostulates against childishness. And need it be said that childlikeness and childishness are very different and even opposite characteristics. It is childlike to be teachable, for example, but it is childish to be "carried about by every wind of teaching." It is childlike to manifest in our words and conduct "the harmlessness of the dove,"—thus "in malice being children;" but it is childish not to possess something of the "prudence of the serpent"—so "in understanding being men." It is childlike to have strong faith, but it is childish to allow our faith to be shaken by imaginary dangers. Peter was childlike when on the lake of Galilee he said, "Lord, if it be thou, bid me come unto thee on the water;" but he was childish when, "seeing the wind boisterous, he was afraid, and beginning to sink, cried, saying, Lord, save me." Matt. xiv. 28–30. The Lord ever delights in the childlikeness of his people, but He only bears with their childishness.

The day in which we live seems to us to exhibit an increasing and portentious prevalence of religious childishness; and that this is no hasty or uncharitable conclusion will, we think, appear very clearly, if we contrast some of the more marked indications of this spiritual immaturity, with some of the most prominent phases of modern Christian experience.

1. One very distinguishing feature of religious childishness is externalism,—by which we mean the craving for an independence of outward aids for the manifestation of the spiritual life, or the awakening of religious emotions not necessarily spiritual at all. Sacerdotalism with all its arrogant claims, sacramentalism in its magical efficacy, sacred symbolism, the supposed sanctity of special places, things, and times, splendid or theatrical ceremonial,—these are at once the toils and the toys of religious childhood; the toils in which by the "craft and subtility of men" it is caught and held in bondage, and the toys with which it amuses itself after the manner of children. Since "Faith is the substance of things hoped for, the evidence of things not seen;" and seeing that as believers we are called upon to "walk by faith, not by sight;" it must surely follow that just in the measure in which we are emancipated from the need and desire for all that is external, sensuous, and visible; we have attained to spiritual manhood, and inherited the blessing pronounced by Christ Himself upon those "who have not seen and yet have believed."

Very instructive, in this aspect, is the contrast presented by Judaism and Christianity. The former, as divinely adapted to the needs of spiritual childhood, was a religion of rite, ceremony, and sacrifice. Its blood-stained altars, and white-robed priests, and symbolic temple furniture, were but the pictures and models by which God condescended to teach his little children, and, as by a schoolmaster, lead them to Christ. But Christianity, as divinely intended for the development of spiritual manhood, knows nothing, essentially, of ritual or sacrament, beyond its simple initial rite, and commemorative feast. Its sacrifices are those of the broken and contrite spirit, of praise and thanksgiving; its priesthood one common to all who share the unction of the Holy One; its only earthly temple the renewed heart, and its Shekinah the indwelling life and light of the Spirit of the Lord.

2. But again; REVIVALISM may, we apprehend, be regarded as another indication of religious childishness. The very use of the term "revival" necessarily imply previous weakness, immaturity, or decay, but the influence of such a season of spiritual agitation is not only too commonly of a very temporary character, but its after effects oftentimes exhibit a painful and instructive analogy to those produced by the excessive use of stimulants upon the bodily health.

The action of revivalism is essentially abnormal, spasmodic, and violent; like that of the lightning, the tempest, and the earthquake. But not thus are the mightiest and most potent forces of the spiritual, as of the natural world found to work; they are calm, constant, and without noise or commotion. The amount of real power exerted by the thunder-storm or the earthquake, though they strike terror through a neighborhood or destroy a city, is as nothing compared with that of the sweet and noiseless sunrise which bathes a hemisphere in its splendor, quickens the vegetation of a continent, and while calling "man to his work and to his labor," awakens the feathered choristers of the heavens, and warms the cattle upon a thousand hills. It was not,—to use the old but ever available Scripture illustration,—in the "great and strong wind," though it "rent the mountains and break the rocks in pieces;" nor in the "earthquake," though in its awful grasp the solid earth reeled like a drunkard; nor in the "fire," though before its scorching breath the forests withered, and the hills smoked as with sacrificial offerings; but in the "still small voice," that the prophet recognized the most convincing intimation of the power and presence of the Almighty. And even so, it is not the Revival—though it sweep over a nation or convulse a city—but to the Divine and unfailing energy, constant and effectual at all times, and in all places, of Him who in his risen and glorified humanity is the life-giving Spirit; that we must ever mainly look for the bestowal and increase of that Divine life which is the Father's gift in Him.

3. Another very reliable evidence of the religious childishness of which we speak is TRADITIONALISM,—by which we mean a blind and unreasoning adherence to certain doctrines or opinions, not because we have carefully and candidly examined into their evidence and been persuaded of their truth,—thus complying with the apostolic injunction to "prove all things and hold fast that which is good,"—but simply because they are embodied in the creed or catechism of our sect, were believed by our fathers, or have been in times past professed by ourselves; to say nothing of such meaner and baser motives as the fear of endangering our reputation for orthodoxy, considerations of worldly interest, or unwillingness to own ourselves mistaken,—since these would call for the application of a severer term than childishness.

It should ever be remembered,—for the fact is most important,—that there are in the world dead religions as truly as there are dead languages; and that one of the most conclusive proofs that christianity is not to be classed among such, is found in its undiminished power to adapt itself to the varied needs, increasing knowledge, and deepened moral consciousness of men. The tree clothes itself afresh each returning summer with new foliage, but it is not this year precisely what it was,—in form and development,—last year, and still less what it was ten years ago. It has been given us once for all in the life and sayings of our Divine Master, and of those whom He specially authorized. It is the foundation. It is, in one word which includes all, Jesus Christ Himself,—other foundation than whom none can lay. But christianity is the building raised upon that foundation; and this may, and indeed must be, very variously constructed. Not only will it vary in worth of material and in power of endurance, according to St. Paul's well-known illustration; but it also will and must vary according to difference of times, climates, national temperaments and habits. For in relation to the theological thought, as well to social economy, are the words of the great poet true,

"The old order changeth, yielding place to new,
And God fulfils Himself in many ways."

Christ is one,—"the same yesterday, to-day, and for ever;" but christianity, which is the manifestation of his Divine truth in our frail and mutable humanity, is like the "tree of life," of which we read in the book of Revelation, which not only "bare twelve manner of fruits," but "yielded its fruit every month,"—affording to every age, as to every individual soul, its needful, and appropriate spiritual nourishment.

Alas, alas! that religion which should, ideally, be the illumination of the loftiest ranges of human intellect by the brightening dawn of a divine inspiration; too often proves itself, practically, the clouding of the calm heights of reason, and the obscuration of that divine light, by the glare and smoke of the fires of human passion, fear, and fanaticism kindled in lower regions. Alas, alas! that when we ought to have attained to the strength and maturity of christian manhood, we should continue so commonly to exhibit the weakness and forwardness of religious childishness.

4. Another form of religious childishness, and it is the last to which we shall now refer, is found in THEOLOGICAL PANIC. "The church is in danger!" The Bible is in danger!" "Christianity is in danger!" How often have such cries as these been heard; how often are they still heard amongst us. But have those most ready to utter them ever reflected that they are in fact not nearly so much the expression of their zeal for divine truth, as the evidence of the weakness and childishness of their own faith therein? What! the church in danger, when Christ has said that He "will build it upon a rock, and the gates of hell shall not prevail against it?" What! the Bible in danger, when Christ has said, "Heaven and earth shall pass away, but my words shall not pass away." What! christianity in danger, when Christ has said, "My sheep hear my voice, and I know them, and they follow me; and I give unto them eternal life, and they shall never perish, neither shall any pluck them out of my hand."

And yet, let but a needed reform be commenced, and the cowardly cry, —"The church is in danger,"—is at once raised by those whose worldly interests may perchance be affected. Let but a new scientific theory be broached, and christians shudder lest the foundations of their faith should be shaken. Many examples in proof that this no overdrawn picture might be adduced. One, and that among the most recent, may suffice. Some months ago an eminent physician, who had on a previous occasion fluttered in the theological nursery, wrote an essay advocating, on sanitary and economical grounds, "Cremation," or the burning of dead bodies instead of burial. How this suggestion, should it ever be acted upon, could really affect any article of the christian faith it was not easy to see; but the dislike and even horror with which it was regarded in some religious quarters, indicated a lurking suspicion that it was somehow inimical to religion; and this fear was openly avowed when a bishop of the Established Church—and he not the least distinguished of his mitred brethren—preached a sermon recently in Westminister Abbey, in which, while indignantly denouncing cremation, he expressed his conviction that "the very first fruits of its adoption would be to undermine the faith of mankind in the doctrine of the resurrection of the body, and so bring about a most disastrous social revolution, the end of which it was not easy to foretell."

In nothing, however, is religious childishness more characteristically displayed than in its inability to distinguish between the relative importance of the dangers, real or imaginary, which excite its apprehension. As a child is terrified by every barking dog and strange object, while it neither knows nor cares that the atmosphere through which it is passing is laden with the miasma of a deadly pestilence, so does religious childhood amuse itself with its toys, cling to its dead and almost putrefying dogmas, and become panic-stricken in regard to questions which, whatever may be their importance, touch not the essential facts of christianity, while it seems scarcely to be aware that at the same time the great mission of the Redeemer, the possibility of any divine revelation; yea, the very personal existence of God, are being widely called in question. And the evil of all this is immeasurably increased by the fact that, we seem certainly to be approaching a great spiritual conflict in which such religious childishness will be a disastrous and even fatal weakness; in which, indeed, nothing can avail us but a manly christianity, girding itself with the whole armor of God, "strong in the Lord and in the power of his might," and realizing afresh that now, as of old, "our wrestling is not against flesh and blood, but against the principalities, against the powers, against the worldly rulers of this present darkness, against wicked spirits in high places."—William Maude, Ed. of Our Hope.

Moses.

We stand by the banks of the historic Nile 3,420 years ago, where, half hidden by rushes, a little babe is afloat in an ark. His face is exceedingly fair and his lonely situation excites the tenderest emotions of pity. Only a youthful Hebrew maid is near, to watch or care for him. But as we wait to solve the mystery, the dusky browed Thermuthis, a queenly daughter of the house of Pharaoh comes down to bathe in the river. The tiny boat attracts her attention and she dispatches one of her maidens to rescue the child. His beauty touches her heart, and though recognizing him as a child of the Hebrews, condemned by her father's edict to perish, she yet adopts him as her son, and bestows upon him the name of Moses.

So the representative of the house of Levi escapes the doom appointed unto him by Pharaoh. He grows up under the tutoring hand of Thermuthis, and becomes learned in all the wisdom of the Egyptians. Then, seeking his brethren, he finds them weighed down and fainting under the burdens of cruel taskmasters. His fiery spirit rises and he slays one of the oppressors. But his people not recognizing his authority as ruler and peacemaker, he flees into the land of Midian and lives a quiet, pastoral life for forty years. Here he marries Zipporah, the daughter of Jethro, and here in the solitude, the Lord prepares him for his future work.

Towards the close of his sojourn, while watching his flock at the farther side of the desert, near the mountain of Horeb, a thorny acacia—the symbol bush of the desert—bursts into flame, but is not consumed. Astonished at the miracle, he turns aside from the path he is pursuing, to see what it may mean; and a warning voice forbids his near approach, because the place is holy. It is the God of his fathers—the God of Abraham that calls. He must obey. He must accept the divine commission and become the leader and deliverer of his people. Yet his timid nature shrinks back. How can he, so slow of speech, bring the children of Israel out of Egypt? They will not hear him, and if they do, how is he, single-handed, to cope with such a multitude of their oppressors? But his scruples are overcome, and he departs on his mission. Mighty wonders are wrought of the Lord by his hand, grievous plagues are brought upon the Egyptians, the children of Israel are let go, the Red Sea is crossed in safety, and Pharaoh and his hosts are drowned.

The wilderness of Shur, the wells of Elim and the wilderness of Sin are passed, and Sinai looms in sight. Here he causes the hosts of Israel to sanctify themselves before the Lord and he obeys the divine call and goes up into the mount. The whole assembly hear when he utters the ten commandments out of the midst of the fire of the cloud, and believe that he is commissioned of God. Upon this mount the tables of testimony are given to him—two tables the work of God, and the writing of God, Through him, his people enter into a sacred covenant with Jehovah, and receive the law—the new legislation —"As a token of divine justice and mercy." From Mount Sinai, he led them northward to the desert of Paran and sent spies to explore the land of Canaan, but the people rebel against him, increasing his perplexity and care, and with anxious heart he calls upon the Lord and the insurrection is repressed.

Again and again the people murmur, and he leads them about through all their weary wanderings, until the obstinate, disobedient ones fall in the wilderness, and then, being led into sin himself, he is only permitted to approach the boundary of the land of Canaan, to vanquish the kings of the Amorites, and settle some of the tribes on the east of the river Jordon.

His mission, as a deliverer, a leader, and a prophet, is done. He has written it all down; has traced in a few sublime paragraphs the history of the creation and antediluvian age, sketched rapidly and faithfully the biographies of the patriarchs, painted the historical events of his own times, noted, and carefully recapitulated every particular of the law, sung a song for the ages, and given a last solemn charge to his people. The books of the Pentatuch are complete, —with the exception of a few verses; Job is written, and now the meekest of leaders, the sagest of writers, the beginner of the book, the first inspired amanuensis lays down his pen, climbs the summit of Mount Nebo, dies and is buried in a valley of Moab. What wonders God wrought by the hand of this timid, shrinking man! What an instructive history! How worthy of careful, thoughtful study! Let us all, dear readers, strive to follow the Lord, as faithfully as did Moses, and so have a part with him in the renewed land of Canaan, a sure inheritance in the kingdom of God.

The Truth and the Life.

The works which should vitalize our faith, and make us "living epistles," are not always palpable to the eyes of the world.

But I thank God that I am permitted to tell the message of the kingdom to some who are willing to lend an ear. The greatest defect with those who give audience is a failure to recognize the importance of believing the truth. "A present truth," is to declare God's jealousy concerning the words of his mouth. This tame submission and assent to the commandments and traditions of men claiming to be filled with the Holy Ghost, has paralyzed the zeal, and lowered the knowledge of many professed followers of Christ. To be indifferent, both to life and faith, is doubly fatal to the cause of Christ. A growth in grace involves a continual repulse of all evil habits; growth in knowledge, and constant appropriations of God's eternal truth; until the chambers of the heart are filled to the exclusion of all errors.

To make the gospel our meat and drink, is to embody it in our lives, by which is furnished the infallible testimony of Christ's divine commission. To do otherwise, is to furnish the most potent auxiliary for infidelity.

To live so that the world may believe in the holy one of Israel, is the highest, holiest position of the servant of God. He may not be commanding in intellect, or eloquent in speech, but his deeds of kindness win the hearts of the needy; his integrity, the respect of the honest, and even those steeped in crime, tremble in his presence. He wields an influence for lasting good a thousand fold more effective than some who are more popular.

To be honored of men, is but a putting on of garments eaten by the moth. But to be honored of God, is to be clothed with the imperishable garments of immortality. May the love of God, in view of what he has purposed in his Son constrain us to increase our faith in Him; leading us to the great foundation of light, the source of all consolation.

Your brother, waiting for the "coming one."

The "Freeman's Journal," Roman Catholic, renders the following verdict against our public schools: "One thing is certain; archbishops and bishops may be multiplied, and priests ordained, and the thousands of churches built; but if our bishops do not, following the Vicar of Christ, forbid Catholics sending their children to godless schools, in fifty years from now the Catholic Church in the United States will be a shriveled and ghastly skeleton—a dry waste after a wave of European emmigration—a scattered flock that false shepherds fed and fattened on, and left unsheltered from the wolves."

EDITORIAL DEPARTMENT.

—The Editor was summoned to Minnesota one week ago, to see his mother who was thought to be dangerously sick. By letter we learn that she was in a more favorable condition on his arrival. Owing to his absence, the readers will have to forego the satisfaction of perusing the usual editorials from his pen.

—In making remittances be careful to send drafts, money orders, or in registered letters. Quite a number of losses have occurred from a neglect of this precaution. We would say to our Canada friends that there is something wrong on the route between them and this place. Several letters have been abstracted from the mail containing remittances to this office; and some of them containing quite an amount. One brother sustained the loss of eighteen dollars. Notwithstanding all the vigilance of governments, dishonest men will get into responsible places, and escape detection for a time. We must therefore use caution.

—Some, in making remittances, send twenty or twenty-five cents additional for postage expenses. Others enquire relative to this,—saying that if it is needful, or required to send something for postage, that they are willing to do so. We should be glad to have every one of our subscribers send a sufficient amount in addition to the subscription price to pay the postage. With our limited subscription list the paper does not pay expenses, and the postage, though small for a single paper, is a large item of expenses for the year. So our friends will one and all understand, that we desire they should send twenty cents for each year as postage expenses, as all deficiencies must fall upon stock subscriptions.

—We would be glad to have all who are in arrears remit as soon as possible, as the publication of our paper depends upon the receipts. There is one thing that every honorable man will do, which is—to respectfully order a discontinuance of the paper before getting in arrears, unless the design is to continue it. It is certainly not calculated to impress publishers very favorably with regard to the stirling honest of a man, to let a paper come to his address for months after the time paid for has expired, and then receive a notice, either from him, or the Post Master, that the paper is not wanted any longer. A few such cases occur, but we will say in praise of our subscribers, not many. And will our brethren enlarge our subscription list. We have to send some papers to the poor. Who will help in this way?

The Generations and the Prophetical Periods.—No. 2.

To both Jews and Gentiles God accords a set time of visitation. The object of this visitation is "to take out a people for his name." The design of God is to associate a princely priesthood with his Son, who are to share with Him in all the honors and glory of his everlasting kingdom upon earth. The kingdom was first proclaimed to the Jewish nation, but as they "knew not the time of their visitation," the glad tidings is proclaimed to the Gentiles by the Apostles, and till their times shall be fulfilled, the annunciation will continue to be made. The visitation is not to save or convert the world, nor, indeed, any one nation of the world, but to bring out a nobility for future ages. Acting under the great commission, the apostles preach to all nations. Many are now called. As the Gospel is preached in power, multitudes hear, believe and obey. The Pagan worshipper throws away his idols, and abandons the temples of profane rites, to embrace the new faith. Entire kingdoms change their religious belief and observances. But the Gentiles prove no better than Israel and Judah. A mystery of iniquity is finally developed to usurp the place, prerogatives, and attributes of the Most High. An apostasy, foretold by the the apostle, takes place, and becomes a great world-power to waste the church for 1260 years. Its desolating career commenced under the Emperor Justinian, who reigned from 527 to 565. This Emperor "digested from the treasures of Roman Jurisprudence a code of civil law, which has been ever since the source of legal science for all civilized nations."—Hase. Hist. Chr. Ch., p. 129. Gieseler remarks: "Justinian's code was also so rich a source for ecclesiastical matters, that particular collections of church laws were made soon after his time, out of his Institutes."—Vol. I., p. 491. By formal enactments, this Emperor constituted the Roman Pontiff "Head of all the holy churches," and "first of all the priesthood." Under him also, the clergy and bishops received new privileges, and the latter were intrusted with quite a share in civil jurisdiction. The "eternal oracles," as Gibbon terms the Code, Pandects and Institutes, were addressed to the senate and provinces in 533, and "declared to be the legitimate system of civil jurisprudence; they alone were admitted into the tribunals, and they alone were taught in the academies of Rome, Constantinople, and Berytus."—Gib. Vol. IV., p 332. Justinian ascribed the consummation of this great design to the support and inspiration of the Deity. Says Keith: "No earthly code of laws was ever more extensive or permanent than his; it was published 529–533; it continued to be the base of European legislation, till it began to be shaken by the revolution of France, and the code of Napoleon."—Signs of Times, Vol. I., p. 96. A. D. 533 is the date from whence "the monarchy of the Bishop of Rome gradually superseded the Oligarchy of the Patriarchate." Justinian "employed the most unjust and unchristian means of clearing the church of all heresies in the east—that of persecution, and the most cruel persecution any Christian emperor had set on foot, or countenanced. For by an edict which he issued to unite all men in one faith, whether Jews, Gentiles or Christians, such as did not in the term of three months embrace the Catholic faith, were declared infamous, and, as such excluded from all employments, both civil and military, rendered incapable of leaving anything by will, and their estates confiscated, whether real or personal. These were convincing arguments of the truth of the Catholic faith; but many, however, withstood them; and against such as did, the imperial edict was executed with the utmost rigor. Great numbers were driven from their habitations with their wives and children, stripped and naked. Others betook themselves to flight, carrying with them what they could conceal, for their support and maintenance; but they were plundered of the little they had, and many of them inhumanly massacred by the Catholic peasants, or the soldiery who guarded the passes."—Bower, Vol. I., p. 334. In the year 602. Phocas was crowned at Constantinople, and in 607, bestowed the title of Universal Bishop on Boniface, the Roman Pontiff. By the same prince the Roman church was constituted head of all the churches, thus renewing the supremacy bestowed by the Emperor Justinian. In the year 608, Phocas bestowed the famous Pantheon on the succeeding Pope, Boniface IV. The historian says: "The same feeling which had induced their heathen ancestors to deify men, now led them to regard saints as subordinate deities. Some were honored only in those localities in which they had lived, or in which their relics were preserved, but others in much larger circles. Whole orders and nations attached themselves to particular saints, and others were made to preside over certain kinds of assistance. The heathen had some occasion for ridiculing Christians on the ground that their religion had become paganized. Agrippa's cheerful Pantheon, once dedicated to Jupiter and all the gods, was now consecrated to the Mother of God and all the martyrs."—Hase, Ch. H., p. 152.

We return to Justinian once more to show clearly the change from the Pagan worship to the Papal. "Justinian destroyed the last intellectual world of heathenism, by abolishing the schools of philosophy, and he annihilated even those secret vestiges of it in Rome which had become concealed under an indifference to all external forms of worship. Photious alone preferred a voluntary baptism of blood in defence of freedom, to a constrained baptism in behalf of Christianity; so many religious phrases and festivals connected with idolatry were preserved in Rome, that it may more properly be said to have been incorporated into the life of the church than abolished." Hase. Ch. H. p. 106, 107. So history is clear that Justinian abolished Paganism at Rome and established Papacy; and under Phocas the transition was perfected by surrendering to the Pope the Pantheon, when the worship of Lybele, the mother of the gods, was exchanged for that of the Mother of God, and the worship of all the gods, for the adoration of all the saints. From the time that the Justinian code became the basis of European legislation A. D. 533 to the French Revolution is precisely 1260 years. This revolution changed the whole state of affairs in Europe. A new actor appears upon the stage, who introduces another code of legislation. If the Papacy was established under the code of Justinian, what has been its fate since the French Revolution and the reign of Napoleon. At the expiration of its predicted supremacy, for 1260 years, prophecy declares, "But the judgment shall sit, and they shall take away his dominion to consume, and to destroy it to the end." Dan. vii. 26. Accordingly in 1793 an important change takes place. On the 21st of January, the King of France was guillotined. Says the Historian; "A new mode of reckoning time was introduced in the autumn of the same year; all Christian morals and manners were abolished by actual legislation; marriage was treated merely as a civil contract, liable to dissolution on notice by one of the parties; all ecclesiastical utensils were sold as national property, and an idolatrous worship of reason was solemnized, in which venal prostitutes were the priestesses and godesses. Gobet, Bishop of Paris, appeared with his priests before the convention to declare that their previous lives had been a deception. The existence of God was publicly denied, his vengeance was boldly challenged, and above the cemeteries the inscription was raised, "Death is an eternal sleep." In 1798, Pope Pius VI. was deposed from his pontificate, and carried a captive into France, where he died at Valence, Aug. 29, 1799. The Roman Republic was established. Rome itself was pillaged, and the sacredotal robes of the Pope and the cardinals burned. The palaces of the Pope and the chief nobility were plundered of every article of value which they possessed. An exhaustive contribution of millions was imposed on an already overburdened city. Everything of value became a prey. The spoliation exceeded all that the Goths and Vandals had effected. ALLISON, His. Eu. Vol. I. pp. 544–546.

On the 18th of May, 1804, Bonaparte became emperor of the French. On the 26th of May, 1805, the iron crown of Charlemagne, after reposing a thousand years in the treasury of Monza, was brought forth to encircle the brows of Napoleon, who, by this coronation at Milan, became king of Italy. ALISON Vol. II. pp. 236–318. On the 17th of May, 1809, the emperor issued his famous decree which declared that the States of the church are united to the French Empire; the city of Rome declared an imperial and free city. On July 5th, the Pope, Pius VII., was made prisoner and taken to France where he remained a captive till April 2, 1814, nearly five years. ALISON Vol. III. pp. 282, 283; Vol. IV. p. 412. In 1870, inconsequence of the Franco-Prussian war, the last vestige of his temporal power departs, and Rome becomes the Capital of United Italy. The Pope's present status may be learned from article V. Part I., of the law of Papal Guarantees, passed by both houses of the Italian legislature, and which received the royal assent, May 1st, 1871.

"The sovereign Pontiff, besides the endowment established in a preceding article (a money endowment) will continue to have the use of the apostolic palaces of the Vatican and Lateran, with all the edifices, gardens, and grounds annexed to and dependent on them, as well as the Villa of Castle Gondolfo, with all its belongings and dependencies." LIVING AGE No. 1442. This is all that is left to that politico-ecclesiastical power that once controlled proud Rome, ruled over a large part of Italy, and dictated the policy of Europe. The 1260 years of Dan. vii. 26. 27. extend from A. D. 533–540 to the French Revolution A. D. 1793–1800. Here commenced its consumption, and as it required about 70 years for its more complete establishment under Phocas 607–610;—so it required about 70 years to consume its temporal dominion—or from 1793–1800, to 1870. So it is not a little remarkable that it is also a period of 1260 years from the grant of Phocas, to the year 1870. The period of Dan. vii. 25. applies, however, to its supremacy. Its consumption is prophetically placed after the expiration of the 1260 years. Here we have the application of one prophetical period to the rise, supremacy, and decline of a great persecuting power symbolized by the "Little Horn" of Daniel. As a temporal monarchy we think its days are numbered, although as an ecclesiastical power it may give the world immense trouble yet. Prophetical periods measure the duration of worldly powers in controlling human affairs. Every period in prophecy is to be thus applied. No period terminates at the second advent, and all calculations of this kind are doomed to disappointment. We will consider others hereafter.

The Bible.

Wonderful Book! Pre-eminent in name and character above all other books. They are of men; but this is of God. They are human; this is Divine; and hence justly entitled to the appellation "the book." Itself a miracle, as well as a book of miracles. The work of centuries, and at the same time the oldest and the newest of books; dating back the farthest into the past, and reaching forward the farthest into the future; connecting the beginning with the end, and shedding a heavenly light on all the dispensations of which it treats.

It is the sum and substance of ancient Theophanies, and angelic visitations, and providential interpositions, and divine inspirations, and heavenly visions, and miraculous operations, and supernatural dreams. It is a cyclopedia of history and prophecy—of ethics and poetry—of proverbs and songs—of symbols and allegories—of letters and sermons—of prayer and praise. It is a complete book; to which man's wisdom cannot add anything; and from which his folly may not take any thing.

It is a treasury of priceless truths. Its merchandize is better than silver, and the gain thereof than fine gold. The lustre of the diamond pales in the brilliancy of its costly gems. And in nature's splendid garnitue there is nothing that can be compared to them. They are the brightest ornaments of heavenly minds.

This Book is the gift of God to man. It contains the only written revelation of his will, sanctioned by the broad seal of his empire. It is the Urim and Thummim of the christian dispensation. It gives the knowledge of the divine purposes. It utters in silvery tones the divine counsels. Its precepts and promises are as silver tried in the fire, seven times purified. "More precious are they than gold; yea, than much fine gold; sweeter also than honey or the honeycomb." Blessed is he that obeys them; for they will be his life; and happy is he that trusts in them; for they shall be his salvation.

In this gallery of heavenly arts and sciences are life-like pictures of the past—moving panoramas of the present, and truthful and beautiful images of the future. Here, the light of Eden's departed glory still lingers to invite earth's weary pilgrims through this vale of tears to walk with God. Here, the coming glory of the kingdom of heaven dawns to cheer the heart, and animate the hopes of the pilgrim as he sinks to repose in the shadows of death. Here, the eye of faith sees looming up beyond the present dispensation, the promised land in all the beauty and excellency of its heavenly and eternal condition.

This book begins, as was meet, with an account of the creation of the heavens and the earth, most sublime and beautiful; expatiates on the perfection of God's wonderful works, and gives a song to the morning stars, and a rapture to the sons of God; when man was made but little lower than the angels, and his dwelling was in the garden of God. It narrates the fall of man by the transgression of a positive prohibitory law, and pursues the history of our fallen and sinful race in the melancholy strains of weeping, lamentation and wo. It brings life and immortality to light in the work of redemption by Jesus Christ, the only begotten Son of God. It comforts the true church—composed of all believers who are regenerated and sanctified by the truth—in her labors and trials and conflict here. It exults in the anticipation of a renewed earth and a righteous age as the inheritance of the saints; and it abounds with exceeding great and precious promises to afflicted man.

It has stood the test of ages, and receives additional confirmation to its authority from the events of each succeeding period, as they severally fulfill its sublime predictions. Its prophecies are a compendious history of the world in connection with the moral government of God. Behold in this ancient record the events of the last 1800 years, written as with the finger of God! Its prophecies have been fulfilling in every age and are now evidently approaching their consummation. The already fulfilled predictions of the word of God, confirm our faith in the historical verity of all those yet awaiting their accomplishment, and furnish a sure anchorage for our hope in God, "though the waters roar and be troubled, and the mountains shake with the swellings thereof."

In these divine oracles we hear the voice of Wisdom as she "crieth at the gates, at the entry of the city, at the coming in at the doors; unto you, O man, I call; and my voice is to the sons of Adam. O ye simple, understand wisdom; and ye fools be of an understanding heart. Hear, for I will speak of excellent things, and the opening of my lips shall be of right things. For my mouth shall speak truth, and wickedness is an abomination to my lips. All the words of my mouth are in righteousness, there is nothing forward, or perverse in them. They are all plain to him that understandeth, and right to them that find knowledge. Receive my instructions and not silver, and knowledge rather than choice gold. For wisdom is better than rubies; and all things that may be desired are not to be compared to it."

This Holy Book is the rule of our faith and the law of our life. May our minds be baptized with the dews of its heavenly doctrines, and our hearts anointed with the unction of its truth. So shall we speak according to the law and the testimony, and our service shall be acceptable to God and profitable to men.—J. O. W., in Prophetic Times.

"Why Hast Thou Forsaken Me!"

"My God, my God, why hast thou forsaken me?" are the first words of the 22nd Psalm, and it is strikingly evident that it could hardly have been more applicable to Christ condition. We find portrayed in it the derisive scorn, the reviling mockery, the malicious shaking of heads, almost the very words of the blasphemous taunt, "He trusted in God; let him deliver him now if he will have him." It describes a man surrounded by enemies, wicked and blood-thirsty. Even the crucifixion itself is pictured; "They pierced my hands and my feet. They part my garments among them, and cast lots upon my vesture."

Suppose some poor Christian widow were asked if she was not in fear of suffering from hunger and cold, and were to reply simply, "The Lord is my shepherd;" the other words of that familiar Psalm, "I shall not want," etc., would come immediately to our minds and we should know well her meaning.

Now the Jews must have been as familiar with the whole Psalm of which Jesus used the first words, as we are with the 23rd Psalm, for the Psalms were their hymn-book. And when Jesus, with a loud voice, sounded in their ears the words "Eloi, Eloi, lama sabachthani," some of them, at least the rulers and the scribes, must have called to mind all the Psalm, with its vivid pictures, and in it seen their guilty selves accused and condemned.

But the Psalm also had words for his despairing disciples and those who "waited for the kingdom of God." There were words of trustfulness, of praise, and assurance that

> All the ends of the world shall remember
> And turn unto the Lord:
> And all the kindreds of the nations
> Shall worship before thee.
> For the kingdom is the Lord's.
> And he is the governor among the nations.

And it may be that Jesus Himself found relief in those prophetic expressions of faith, for anon through the darkness were heard words that supplemented the Psalm with his own sublime trust in God. "It is finished. Father, into thy hands I commend my spirit."

Nailed to the cross, the victim of malicious men and subjected to the taunts and jeers of a vile mob, how was it possible to rebuke this wickedness—that blasphemous scoff, "He trusted in God." And yet a rebuke was given that was like a two-edged sword. Did they ever hear that Psalm again without feeling that sword in their hearts?

How could it be harder than then to preach trustfulness in God! When could his words be more useless! And yet He did preach it in words that were heard and that could never be forgotten—words that proved to his revilers and to his disciples that He could even yet trust his Father.

Fervent and Persevering Prayer.

BY R. DONKERSLEY.

By fervent prayer, we mean that which is warm, earnest, importunate, as opposed to that stiff, frigid and indifferent manner which too often characterizes our approaches to the "throne of grace." Said a disturbed formalist to a little lad, "What makes your mother pray so loud? Does she think God is deaf, or far away?" And the reply came, "No, I presume not; but she is in earnest about it, and when she gets in earnest she always speaks loud, but never so loud as she does sometimes when praying for the salvation of souls."

Scripture precept and example inculcate and illustrate this principle of supplicatory fervency. Hence, such expressions as "crying," "knocking," "wrestling," "laboring," "striving." At Peniel we hear Jacob exclaiming, "I will not let thee go, except thou bless me." We hear the Syrophenician woman's brief but fervid cry, "Lord, help me!" Of our Savior it is said, "In the days of his flesh he offered up prayers and supplications, with strong crying and tears." Daniel must have poured forth the following petition with great intensity of grief, "O Lord, hear; O Lord, forgive; O Lord, hearken and do; defer not, for thine own sake, O my God; for thy city and thy people are called by thy name!"

The necessity and importance of perseverance in prayer, in order to its being effectual, is abundantly set forth in Scripture. We are free to admit that prayer is often answered immediately upon its being presented. But the Bible, Christian biography, personal observation and personal experience, furnish numerous and uncontrovertible evidence that, not unfrequently, perseverence—sometimes long-continued perseverance—is absolutely and indispensably necessary to prevalence in prayer. We may here, again, refer to the case of Jacob, as recorded in Gen. xxxii. xxxiii. for his narrative is equal in illustrating persistence and importunate fervency. Elijah, at Mount Carmel (Kings xviii. 42–45) sustains the position here assumed. The case of the Syrophenician woman in behalf of her daughter is equally good for persistency as for fervency. The widow before the unjust judge (Luke xviii. 1–8) belongs to the same class of Scripture narratives. The inspired pages furnish us with numerous other cases of a kindred character. But the instances already cited may suffice, so far as Bible argument bears upon the question under consideration.

Good men are sometimes at their wit's end when they are not at their faith's end.

False Positions of Universalists.

No. 3.

Universalists try to prove their doctrine by God's foreknowledge and foreordination. They say that these attributes of God would not have permitted his making man, knowing that any part of the race should suffer and die in the great hereafter. This is mere assumption; neither harmonizing with God's word nor with his dealings with man in the past. We have before demonstrated that, if God is unchangeable, whatever he has done in the past, he will continue to do in the future. Therefore, the sufferings and woes and the death in the past, in consequence of sin, will be continued in the great hereafter. What can we reason only from what we know? God is unchangeable, and has doomed the race to death for sin here. Therefore, in the great beyond, all sinners will die "the second death." Disobedience to the law in the garden of Eden brought death to all. So disobedience to "the law of life in Christ Jesus" will doom to "the second death"—eternal death.

If the Bible or reason, or any data from these, pointed to endless misery for disobedience, then such doctrine would be revolting to humanity, and utterly opposed to all the attributes of Jehovah. But when the Bible only denounces "the second death," "the everlasting distruction" of the sinner's being, then there is nothing more revolting in this than there is in the doom of death here for sin. These facts stand out to be seen and read of all men. And all know that suffering and death do come upon all here for sin. Therefore, will "the second death," "everlastiug destruction" come upon all sinners in the world to come.

8. We appeal to God's dealings with man in the past to show that it was not God's foreknowledge and foreordination that doomed man to death here, but man's own acts. Take the case of Jonah and the Ninevites. God commanded Jonah to go and preach to the Ninevites. That, "Yet forty days and Nineveh shall be overthrown." This was God's foreknowledge and foreordination, and without any expressed conditions. "So the people of Nineveh believed God." How? That this must inevitably take place? No! They believed that God, on condition of their repentance and change, would avert the doom. Therefore, the king, nobles, and people, all humbled themselves, and cried to God mightily, saying, "Who can tell, if God will turn and repent, and turn away his fierce anger, that we perish not?"

What does this teach? This: that God's foreknowledge and foreordination, in regard to the wicked, is based upon contingencies; for when they changed, repented, "God repented of the evil that he said he would do to them." Now, God either foreknew, or he did not, that he would destroy Nineveh within forty days. He did not foreknow it absolutely, without contingencies, for it did not take place. He declared that it should, and without any contingencies expressed; therefore they were implied, and so understood by the Ninevites. God's foreknowledge, like himself is perfect, and may never be frustrated; but the facts, circumstances, conditions and the responsibility of the Ninevites, and their perfect independence to act for themselves, were as much a part of foreknowledge as were any other part of his foreknowledge. Therefore, as the Ninevites turned and repented, God foreknew that they would, and also foreknow that he would avert the threatened doom.

Palestine, Ill., 1875.

From Brother Hatch.

Dear Brethren "of the like precious faith.

I am at home again, found all well. I visited New Palestine again with good success. I held meeting some seven days, and immersed three into the name of Jesus Christ, and others are searching the scriptures to see if the things taught are true. There are others I think that will obey soon. I find "the gospel of Christ the power of God unto salvation, to every one that believeth." I left with the promise that I would return again this season sometime.

From there I visited the brethren and sisters at Indianapolis. I found them alive to the truth. Brother Wilkins, Sister Sharp, and Sister Walker were at my meeting in Palestine part of the time. I stayed with them in the city over Sunday, and spoke to them at 11 a. m. from Heb. ix. speaking of "Christ our High Priest, that is passed into the heavens, there to appear in the presence of God for us;" and no man can enter there; but that we must wait till our high priest comes out to bless us, and then shall we appear with Him in glory. I talked to the people again at night, and after meeting, one lady called on me to immerse her; and, on Monday afternoon, we went to the water and immersed her into the name of Jesus Christ. To God be all the glory.

The Dawn.

A light in the tempest is breaking
The clouds are beginning to part;
And hope from her slumber is waking
To cheer every true waiting heart.
Sing anthems,
Sing anthems of joy every heart.

The night that was burdened with sorrow,
Rolls back her dark sables of woe;
While Faith gives her promise, to-morrow,
Her sun to full zenith shall glow.
Sing anthems,
All hearts will leap gladly to know.

The mists from our landmarks are spiriing,
Once more all their beauties appear;
The Almighty Jehovah is smiling,
The day of our triumph is near.
Sing anthems,
Our strength shall all enemies revere.

The valiant, the patient, unfearing,
Shall march to the highest degree,
By the Cross our life-boat is steering,
To anchor Lord Jesus, with Thee.
Sing anthems,
Earth, passing, shall hear we are free.

The Future Millennial Earth, the Inheritance of the Meek.

"But the meek shall inherit the earth, and shall delight themselves in the abundance of peace." Psalms xxxvii. 11.

"Blessed are the meek, for they shall inherit the earth." Matthew v. 5.

The Christian Church, with one consent, during the first three centuries, and in every subsequent period of its greatest purity, received in a plain and literal sense those scriptures which relate to the Second Advent of Christ. The great council which condemned Arianism, proclaimed its belief in the literal meaning of the promise that the meek should inherit the earth, and all such like passages.

There are, indeed, some Christians who think it derogatory to the glorious character of the promised kingdom to connect it with anything of earth. But let them remember that two out of the eight beatitudes repeat the promise of inheriting the earth; and in the Lord's prayer, which is left for our use until the Lord returns in glory, we pray for this future inheritance, "Thy Kingdom come, Thy will be done on earth."

In regard to the time when the inheritance shall be entered on, it seems to be at the future descent of the Lord on this earth (Zech. xiv. 4), and not at His preliminary appearing in the air, which is the first stage in His Second Advent, when He will gather up to Himself into the heavens all His saints, both quick and dead; having "changed their vile bodies, and fashioned them like unto His own glorious body." Then, as the first act of judgment, the principalities of the kingdom will be apportioned to the co-heirs, according to the diligence with which they have employed the talents entrusted to them, some being made rulers over ten, others over five, or two, or one city. His coming down upon the earth is an event subsequent to His appearing above the earth. His feet shall then stand again on the mount from which He ascended (Acts i.); and it is said (Zech. xiv. 5), "All the saints shall come with him." They must, therefore, have risen and left the earth before that time, or they could not come back with Him.

During this recompensatory judgment of the saints in the aerial heavens, the earth will be left in an awful state of anarchy; which will increase in violence till the apostate nations of the Roman earth, mustered under their papal and infidel heads, and led on by the Man of Sin, the Personal Anti-christ, will be gathered together against Jerusalem. Then will the cry of the distressed children of Abraham reach the ear of their Deliverer, and He will reveal Himself in flaming fire to the utter destruction of their enemies and His. This is called in Joel and Malachi, "the great and terrible day of the Lord." The wicked shall burn and melt away in the presence of the Lord "like the fat of lambs," and "the transgressors shall be rooted out."

On the Jews thus delivered, "the spirit of grace and supplication shall be poured out, and they shall look upon Him whom they have pierced, and mourn for Him as one mourneth for his only son." Zech. xii. 10. They will then be nationally converted; rebuild their city on the plain caused by the earthquake at Jesus' descent (after the pattern in Ezekiel's last eight chapters), and become missionaries to those nations as were not shared the apostasy, and had therefore escaped the first act of vengeance "Then shall the Lord be king over all the earth." Zech. xiv. 9.

By the process of fire the heavens and the earth will undergo that great renewal of which we have spoken, and to which "all the prophets have testified since the world began." Not that the earth will be utterly destroyed by fire any more than it utterly perished by water. Probably it emerged from the flood improved in fertility, and the beasts of the field and the fowls of the air came out of the ark—some more docile and others less formidable to man than before (Gen. v. 28; viii. 21; iv. 22), still all painfully under the original curse, all subject to vanity (gone astray.) Be that as it may, St. Peter makes the two cases analogous. After vengeance has been executed on the despisers of the gospel, the earth itself will be "delivered from the bondage of corruption into the glorious liberty of the children of God." The removal of the curse will probably not be completed till the close of the millenium; when, after one more awful development of the odiousness of sin and rebellion, all of the enemies of God shall be cast into the lake of fire. "There shall be nothing more to hurt or destroy in all this holy mountain of the Lord" forever. Perfect "righteousness shall dwell therein." This blighted planet shall again shine forth resplendent in beauty as a trophy of the Redeemer's love; and throughout the universe but one note of praise be heard, saying, "Alleluia, for the Lord God Omnipotent reigneth."

If any are still disposed to call this a carnal doctrine, let them picture to themselves, if they can, any brighter joy or more intense delight, than where Jesus reigns as the King of Glory, there to reign with Him, ever employed in His holy, happy service, contrasting the wilderness where we toiled with the Kingdom where we reign." It is indeed difficult to realize this glory now, where all betokens ruin, and defilement, and weariness; but let us remember that there is no natural connection between the earth and sin. The present affinity between materialism and corruption is an accident, not a necessity; it is the execution of a sentence, on what every one of the prophets declares to be a remedial disaster. God hath "given the earth to the sons of men;" and there can be no thwarting of His purpose. The supremacy of the Most High may at present appear to the infidel to be successfully disputed; but Satan shall at length be seen to be righteously deprived of his headship over the earth, and man, the original heir, shall be reinstated in his restored inheritance. "The meek shall inherit the earth, and delight themselves in the abundance of peace."

The millennial earth which the meek shall inherit will be brighter and purer. There will be no more oppressive labor. Thorns, and thistles, and weeds, and other marks of the curse bring removed, cultivation shall be bullet. Amos ix. 13. The once barren mountain shall "drop down with new wine,"—wine of an incorruptible kind, which our Lord said He should drink with His disciples in that kingdom.

This inheritance will be the fifth monarchy, typified in the vision of Daniel by "the stone cut out of the mountain;" a dominion erected on the ruins of the fourth monarchy, or ten kingdoms of the Roman earth, consumed by fire. Daniel ii. 44-46, vii. 11.—Signs of the Times.

The Second Coming of Christ.

May we look for the coming of Christ at any time, or are there prophecies yet to be fulfilled before that event can or will take place? I think that there are some predictions, not yet fulfilled which must be, before He comes and sets up his kingdom. I believe the Jews are to be gathered back to their own or the land of Palestine, taking with them gold and silver in abundance, and they become wealthy; so much so that the nations of the earth, especially those of the north parts, through the wars in which they will be engaged, and their love of riches, think an evil thought and say, come, "let us go up to the land of unwalled villages, and take a great spoil; where the inhabitants are dwelling without bars or gates," to accomplish which they gather themselves together under the leadership of the king of the north, who will lead them into the Holy Land, and lay siege to the city of Jerusalem. Judah will be there and fight, and when "half of the city shall have been taken, the houses rifled . . . . . and half of the city shall go forth into captivity, and the residue of the people shall not be cut off from the city," then it will be that they will call on his holy name, and He will hear them. Then shall the Lord go forth and fight against those nations as when He fought in the day of battle. And his feet shall stand in that day upon the Mount of Olives, which is before Jerusalem on the east, (the same Mount from which He ascended up into heaven) and the saints are to come with Him; and in order that the saints come with Him, at some time while the events just spoken of are transpiring, Christ makes his appearance in the clouds of heaven, and sends forth his angels with a great sound of a trumpet, and the dead in Christ will be raised to life; and those who are alive and remain will be changed in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye, and together they will be caught up to meet the Lord in the air; and so shall they ever be with the Lord." And now they descend to the Mount of Olives, and all of the elements of the kingdom being there it is set up. Christ the King, the saints the rulers in the kingdom, Judah being the tribe to which the kings belong, it will be set up over them, which will be the mustard-seed state of the kingdom; and the armed forces of the nations are there also, which will be destroyed by each other "in the tumult from the Lord."

The nations all (except some of the isles) will have their forces destroyed, and will have to submit to the reign of Christ. "The ruins of David's throne will be set up again as in the days of old." "And out of Zion will go forth the law, and the word of the Lord from Jerusalem. And he shall judge among the nations, and shall rebuke many people. And they shall beat their swords into ploughshares and their spears into pruning-hooks; nation shall not lift up sword against nation, neither shall they learn war any more."

So you see if I am right in my conclusions, there may some time elapse before Christ comes; yet I believe we are drawing toward the close of the present dispensation. I have omitted giving the proof for want of time and space.

Yours for Truth,
W. D. THOMPSON.

Means and Ends.

It is a weakness of human nature to be occupied with present trifles, to the neglect of distant but important realities. The primitive worship of idolatrous nations has doubtless been to a large extent an ideal and mental adoration. But to help men's ideas, images and pictures, have been prepared to illustrate the principles and attributes which were thought worthy of reverence, and the results were that straightway the image or the picture absorbed the mind of the devotee, who worshipped the sign, and forgot the thing signified. It was doubtless this tendency of mankind which caused the Almighty to utterly prohibit any attempt at making any graven image, or any likeness of anything in heaven above, or in earth beneath, as an object of adoration. The tendency to debasement was too strong, and man could not be trusted with the symbols which he coveted as aids to his faith. Even the brazen serpent, that ancient type of Christ, by which God so wonderfully healed the Israelites, became an object of such idolatrous regard, that it was finally devoted to destruction. And the temple-worship, in the ancient sanctuary, so degenerated into a strife about places, as to whether Jerusalem or the mountain of Samaria was the proper place for Divine adoration, that God was almost forgotten in the quarrels about two hills upon which men professed to honor him. Our Savior taught the woman of Samaria that the hour was coming when neither in Jerusalem nor in that mountain should men worship the Father; but that the worship which he desired and accepted must be worship in spirit and in truth.

The tendencies of fallen humanity are the same to-day. Creeds, sacraments, ordinances, rites, and ceremonies, helpful and innocent as they may seem at first, become objects of a blind and almost idolatrous regard. As men rested in the law, which was only a schoolmaster, to bring them to Christ, so people rest in outward forms, and ordinances, and means of grace, contented with the shell, and never thinking of cracking it, to find the kernel within. They read the Bible, for it is their duty. They pray, for this is commanded. They go to church, they make a profession of religion, they sing the songs, and hear the prayers, and listen to the sermons, and seem to think the chief end of man has been attained. The traveler who found at the parting of the roads a guide-board, on which was painted, "Boston," and who sat down beside it contented, thinking that he had reached his journey's end and gained the city for which he sought, was not more grossly and sadly mistaken than they. A prayer is only good when it brings an answer and a blessing. What is a bucket worth which draws no water? A sermon is of value only as it probes, or melts, or renews the heart and life, leads sinners to the Savior, and strengthens saints for better and more effectual service here, and for glory in the world to come. What is an axe good for, if it will not cut? A Bible in itself is but ink, paper, boards and leather. We may read it, and hear it, and learn it; but if it does not lead us beyond itself, it will be of no avail. A spy-glass is made to look through, not to look into; and he who only looks into it, sees nothing but darkness. What were the swaddling-bands in which the King of Israel was wrapped, had there been no Savior in the manger with them? What is the cross when the Crucified One is left out of view? Instruments are only good as they are useful and are used; and the very things which many regard as the ultimate aims and objects of Christian life are only the helps by which that life is undertaken and pursued. It is for us to look beyond all outward and external circumstances and instrumentalities, and to count nothing as helpful or profitable that does not lead us nearer to our God, and to his Christ, into communion with the Father of spirits and into fellowship with his glorious work.—Christian.

Nothing in Vain.

God's universe has in it no superfluities, no unnecessary existences, which have no purpose but ostentation. For the tiniest animalcule, as surely as for the eagle and the horse, there is a use and a purpose. France was on the verge of famine because her peasants so industriously murdered the small birds, that hordes of caterpillars and insects invaded the land and threatened to devour the crops. When the dodo and dinoris had been exterminated in the Island of the South Sea, men wreaked a horrible revenge upon themselves for outraged nature, by playing the cannibal with one another. The universe wastes nothing upon mere display; it is ever lovely and sublime, but never shadowy and pretentious.

Glorious as is the tempest, it has its end and purpose, and is as much bound to the chariot of utility as the ox to the plough of the husbandman. The thunder is no more rolling of drums in the march of God's armies and the lightning is no vain flashing of heaven's sword of state. The tints of flowers cannot be said to be given only to please the eye, but they enable the plants to absorb that part of light which is most useful to them; certainly neither rose nor violet bear any appearance of having been painted for effect. Forms of beauty, varieties of perfume, melodies of sound, and delicacies of taste, have all a purpose above and beyond that which lies upon the surface; at any rate they are not like the gilt in a café, intended simply and only to attract attention.

If Judas himself should ask of wisely provident nature, as he saw her seemingly lavish expenditure, "To what purpose is this waste?" she could account for every farthing, although her sons have not yet learned to do so for her. The same truth strikes all Bible readers. We have in Sacred Writ no superfluous miracle; no wonder for mere wondering's sake; no language studied for effect of pompous oratory and the glitter of elocution; no doctrine taught without a practical end and aim. Jesus is ever the Prince of economists, and when his bounty is largest, He commands his disciples to gather up the fragments which remain, that nothing may be lost; He did not create so much as a crust for the purpose of show: there was a needs-be for all the works of his hand.

—Professor Tyndall is not going to have it permanently stand on record that he is the awful atheist and dangerous materialist that he has been written down about every day since his Belfast address, if we may judge from his latest allusion to the matter in a Manchester lecture. He had been making some beautiful experiments, showing the structural power of molecular forces, when he referred parenthetically, to the revelations of science as calculated to awaken our surprise. "We are surrounded," he said, "by wonders and mysteries everywhere. I have sometimes—not sometimes, but often—in the springtime watched the advance of the sprouting leaves, and of the grass, and of the flowers, and observed the general joy of opening life in nature, and I have asked myself this question 'Can it be that there is no being or thing in nature that knows more about these things than I do? Do I in my ignorance represent the highest knowledge of these things existing in this universe? Ladies and gentlemen, the man who puts that question fairly to himself, if he be not a shallow man, if he be a man capable of being penetrated by profound thought, will never answer the question by professing that creed of atheism which has been so lightly attributed to me.' Appreciative cheers followed this happy and presumably sincere rejoinder to those who see in Tyndall nothing but enmity toward God.

Christian Profession.

A Christian profession must be:

1. Sincere and hearty. Not only must it not be basely hypocritical but in it there must not be even self-deception. It must be honestly made. In it must be no reserves, no relentings. A profession of love without love is offensive to every right mind.

2. It must be humble, not vain-glorious and ostentatious. John called on men to witness his zeal for the Lord of hosts. He was a poor, vain creature.

3. A Christian profession must be open and public. Christ made no secret of his love to us. Why should we make a secret of our love to Him? "Let your light so shine before men that they may see your good works, and glorify your Father which is in heaven."—Matt. v. 16.

4. Our profession should also be bold and fearless. We should not seem to be asking pardon for being followers of Jesus Christ. Paul says, "I am not ashamed of the Gospel of Christ, for it is the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth."—Rom. i. 16. There is an apologetic way of avowing truth, which seems to provoke opposition. We must stand up for Jesus, cost what it may. The life of the truth is more important than the life of any man upon earth. We must resist even unto the shedding of blood, if necessary.

5. A Christian profession is until death. In the war there is no discharge. "If any man draw back, my soul shall have no pleasure in him," says God.—Heb. x. 38.

—Confidence without conscientiousness is but presumption.

THE RESTITUTION.

Restitution Song.

BY REQUEST.

Lift up your head, despondng pilgrim,
Give to the wind your needless fears;
He who has said "Redemption's coming,"
Soon is to reign a thousand years.

Chorus—A thousand years earth's restitution,
'Tis the glad day so long foretold,
'Tis the bright morn of Zion's glory,
Prophets foretell in times of old.

What if the clouds do for a moment
Hide the blue sky where morn appears?
Soon the glad Sun of promise given,
Bless to shine a thousand years.

Tell the whole world these blessed tidings,
Speak of the time of bliss that nears;
Tell the oppressed of every nation,
Jubilee lasts of a thousand years.

Haste then along, thou age of glory:
Haste the glad time when Christ appears!
Oh! for the faith of ancient worthies,
Oh! for that reign a thousand years.

See! all our foes are to commotion!
The very air seems filled with cheers;
But soon he'll come, our conquering Savior,
He'll come and reign a thousand years.

On David's throne, in Mount Zion,
We'll reign with him, as priests and kings.
A thousand years we'll rule the nations.
While dove like peace shall fold her wings.

The Kingdom of God in Visions and Similitudes.

"I have also spoken by the prophets, and I have multiplied visions, and used similitudes, by the ministry of the prophets."—Hosea xii. 10.

If this fact be ignored, may it not be as fatal to a proper understanding of the sure word of prophecy, as to spiritualize the literal? Yes, Jehovah has used visions, parables and similes in communicating his mind to his servants, and he that would heed Paul's admonition to Timothy, must accept the fact and study to show himself approved unto God, rightly dividing the word of truth. That which is literal accept as such, and visions and similes and parables as such.

First of all I desire to call attention to the location of visions. Daniel's first pointed to the sea. The four winds of heaven strove upon the great sea, and four great beasts came up. His second at Shushan, the palace in the province of Elam. His third and last was by the great river Hiddekel.

The visions of John are located as follows: First in that island called Patmos. Second in the place called the heavens. Third on the sand of the sea. Fourth in the desert, and fifth on a mountain. When Jesus favored the three witnesses with a vision of the kingdom of God, He lead them up into a high mountain. Let us contrast this elevated situation with that where Zecharish is placed when vision and prophecy is opened to him. I saw, says the prophet, by night a man riding on a red horse, and he stood among the myrtle trees that were in the bottom.

The scene of the glorious kingdom is located on a high mountain, because the mountain of the Lord's house shall be established in the top of the mountains, and shall be exalted above the hills, and all nations shall flow to it. Said Jehovah, I will make him my first born higher than the kings of earth. But the visions of Zechariah open in the bottom or valley among the myrtle trees, or among the Jews. This rider on a red horse is located in the low lands.

This government has established what is called the Signal Service, and the approach of a storm is carefully noted. In times of war armies have their signal service departments, and signals are passed from one to another. These signs are kept from the enemy. Reader remember that the word of prophecy was designed for the church. See 1 Cor. xiv. 22. The secret of the Lord is with them that fear Him. None of the wicked will understand. But the wise shall understand. Jesus expounded his parables to the disciples, but not to the multitudes. Many an hours' labor has been lost by not following this example of Christ. But if we would learn more we must enter the school of Christ. Then we may study in the signal service. It is of but little use to tell men of the world the significaton of beasts, horns, eyes, living ones, seals, trumpets, lamps, women, waters, rivers, seas, stars, sun, moon and many other things in nature, that are used by the spirit of prophecy as tokens of the coming storms that will shake the heavens and the earth, when the desire of all nations shall come, one that shall reign in righteousness, and his dominions extend from sea to sea, and from the river to the ends of the earth.

Light-houses are erected for the safety of those that go down to sea, that do business in great waters. The storm clouds are gathering over earth, and we shall do well to look steadily to the light-house of prophecy.

Let us study first some of the signs used by the Spirit. Waters are peoples and nations. Rev. xvii. 15. Horns are kings. Verse 12. The heads are mountains. Verse 9. The woman is that great city. Verse 18. Beasts are kingdoms. Dan. iv. 17. Eyes are churches. Proof: Zechariah is told that the lampstand with its seven lamps are the seven eyes of the Lord. The angel tells John the seven lamps are the seven churches. He that hath the seven spirits of God and the seven stars—and the seven stars are the angels of the seven churches, and the seven lamps are the seven churches. John says he saw a lamb having been killed, having seven horns and seven eyes—they are the seven spirits of God. The little horn of Daniel had eyes like the eyes of man. Surely we ought to discern between the eyes of man and the eyes of God, the congregation of God and the congregation of man. Jesus said the light of the body is the eye, hence the figure: local congregations the eyes of the body of Christ—and the same figure is used when pointing out the body of anti-christ. And now for the signification of living ones. Adam called his wife Eve because she is mother of all living. The church of God is said to be the mother of us all. Gal. iv. 26. But the exalted Jerusalem is free, and she is the mother of us all. The woman of Rev. xvii, is styled the mother of the harlots, and abomination of earth, also the great city that reigns over the kings of earth, mystical Babylon, and that woman is but the simile of the apostate church. In the tent of the wilderness and in the most holy place stand two living ones, or cherubims, the one on the right the other on the left hand of the mercy seat, that was above the ark of the covenant. This tent was a pattern of the things in the heavens or kingdom of God.

The next simile that I desire to introduce is that of waters. Moses tells us that a river went out of Eden to water and replenish the garden, and from thence it was parted, and became four heads. Why do men try to make this statement of Moses literal, as though a river should go out of the garden and then run up hill into four heads. But says one, Moses says so. Yes and the disciples say that Moses and Elias appeared in the vision on the Mount, but it was a vision of the future kingdom, and in Bible figures waters are peoples and nations. This river was to water or replenish the garden, and the human pair was driven from Eden, and commanded to be fruitful and multiply and replenish the earth.

Daniel said to king Nebuchadnezzar Thou art this head of gold. Wheresoever the children of men, the beasts of the field, the fowls of the air dwell, all are given into thy hand. The God of heaven hath given thee a kingdom. After thee shall arise another kingdom, inferior to thee, and a third kingdom of brass, and the fourth kingdom of iron. These four kingdoms are the four heads of the stream of mortal flesh that has issued from the one pair that went out of Eden.

As an earnest lover of truth I submit the above introduction to a pamphlet on the subject of visions and similes, or the kingdom of God in visions and similes, to the brethren through the RESTITUTION. If it is desired, I will publish a tract on the subject, but am too low down in the world to do so without help. It can cost but little to each one, and if worth anything will be worth the price.

J. C. KINSEY.

The Catacombs of Rome.

PROF. JULES DE LAUNAY.

TYPES AND SYMBOLS.

Symbols and types were traced upon lamps, cups and tombs, and painted on the ceilings of the 1200 chapels. They formed a Bible in hieroglyphics. Like the figures of the Old Testament, which familiarized the childhood of our race with the better things to come, these of the catacombs popularized the promises of the coming kingdom to the eyes of the first converts, very few of whom were able to read. Some of these symbols were traced in the gorgeous images of Oriental life, and made truths transparent.

On a panel, four feet high, are found five slabs, each in form of a footprint. In the midst thereof is the name of Christ. On those footprints are read the brief exclamations:

IN CHRISTO—In Christ.
IN DEO—In God.
IN FIDE—In faith.
IN SPE—In hope.
IN PACE—In peace.

With their faith and with their hearts the saints did follow Christ—each household like a galaxy of stars revolving round the golden Sun of Righteousness, bathing in its light, and reflecting the brightness of his glory. Seals with footprints were worn on the finger rings. By these the saints made themselves known. The footprint signified their calling into the fellowship of God's Son, whom they followed, their feet being shod with the gospel of the kingdom. The footprint marked also that life in perpetual walking, a journeying toward the promised land, seen afar off, the kingdom of their patience, where Christ shall reign, and they with Him as kings and priests for ever. Moses pulling off his shoes represented the pilgrimage of this life ended, and the saints lying down to sleep, and rest from their toils till the morning of the resurrection. By this symbol they were reminded that before treading the golden floor of Christ's kingdom, which is holy ground, they were to put off all inordinate affections, which are of the earth earthy. Thus Mohammedans lay aside their sandals on entering their mosques.

Often we meet the picture of a house on tombs, to express the words, "If our earthly house of this tabernacle (the hospita eura) be dissolved we have a building of God, an house not made with hands, eternal in the heavens." An exceeding great and precious promise looms brightly before the Christian's footsteps; therefore does he groan to be clothed with his house which is from heaven, if so be that being clothed, he shall not be found naked.

We find in the Vatican Lapidarian Gallery a slab with the following:

FIRMA VICTORINA QUAE VIXIT AN LXV—
Firma Victorina, who lived sixty-five years,

On this slab is a ship entering the port. The mystic nave, in full sail, is carrying the precious cargo.

In the cemetery of Prætextatus, beneath the epitaph,

GENIALIS IN PACE—
Genialis in peace,

a dove is seen steering the nave, symbolizing the life of Genialis.

Lamps, in the symbolic form of a ship, are commonly found. They express Life launched away into the wide sea amid mist, storm and darkness, piercing her way blindly into the black, murky gloom; but her master is at the helm, and in tempest and in calm, in light and in darkness, he guides her safely on; and in that security of her faith her prow ploughs onward. "Lo, I am with you always even unto the end of the world."

The anchor, the most pleasing and soothing of all symbols to the weary soul, has been found on thirty-five epitaphs in the catacomb of St. Calixtus. Next to the symbol of the dove comes that of the anchor. It expressed the earnest, longing desire for the Lord's personal appearing, which was cherished by the apostolic church in a body. On this foundation only she rested her hope of the resurrection from the dead; and this hope of the gospel was a living hope. The anchor again signified a life successfully ended.

In the symbolic firmament of the cemeteries we must also signalize the phœnix or "eagle of Phœnicia." The phœnix is known to archæologists as the emblem among Pagans of a palingenesia, or second birth out of the ashes. On the Christian tombs, where this is found three times, it is the type of the resurrection, when this corruption shall put on incorruptibility. That eagle is mentioned in Job xxix. 18. "Then I said, I shall die in my nest, and I shall multiply my days as the sand." Or Psa. ciii. 5. "Who satisfieth my mouth with good things; so that thy youth is renewed like the eagles."

The symbol of the "five virgins" presents solemn injunction to the saints: "Watch, for ye know not at what hour the Son of man cometh."

The wolf, the lamb and the leopard, in one group upon a tomb, pointed to Daniel's prophecy of Christ's reign upon earth.

In the catacomb of Callixtus we find a type of Christ in the allegory of Orpheus (the theologian of Paganism) charming the wild beasts with the sound of his lyre. This type pointed to the peaceful reign of Christ upon earth.

The type of the Good Shepherd is the most common subject of the paintings of the sepulchral chapels. On the tomb of Septimius we see the Good Shepherd, carrying the tender lamb on his own shoulders. It recalls the words of the prophet: "The government shall be upon his shoulders"—beautiful image of the saints sweetly at rest in their innocent trust, and in the sunshine of the love of God.

On the tomb of Florens Felix, Jesus is repeating the miracle of Bethany. It tells that the power which waked Lazarus shall awake the millions lying silent in that valley of dry bones; they shall stand upon their feet an exceeding great army.—Herald of Life.

Israel and the Covenants

The children of Israel, who were led out of Egyptian bondage by Moses, the servant of God, and entered the promised land of Canaan, under the first covenant made at Sinai Ex. xix. were in time divided into two kingdoms, known as Israel and Judah. 1 Kings. xii. 16.

Israel containing the principal part of the tribes, was carried into captivity by the king of Assyria, and finally lost among the nations. 1 Kings. xvii. 6. Judah embraced the tribes of Judah and Benjamin and a part of the Levites, and are known as Jews to the present day.

Under the first covenant they occupied the promised land as sojourners; and even this sojourn was on condition of their keeping the covenant, which, failing to do, God drove them out of the land, and scattered them among the heathen or nations with the sword drawn out after them; bringing desolations upon their land and cities, which for centuries have been enjoying their Sabbaths according to the terms of the covenant. Lev. xxiv.

As long as this desolation lasts, and they be in their enemies' land, they are under the Sinaitic, or first covenant. What "if they shall confess their iniquity and the iniquity of their fathers, and their uncircumcised hearts be humbled?" If the punishments there attended in the covenant, do not bring them as a nation to this, why are they continued so long, and on what principle of justice are they being dealt with?

It reads "If ye will not for all this, (many punishments) hearken unto me, then will I punish you seven times for your sins." It is evident these punishments are intended, and will in the end reform them as a nation for God declares he would not cast them away, neither would he abhor them to destroy them utterly. Lev. xxvi. 44. Again he has said "Though I make a full end of all the nations whither I have scattered thee, yet will I not make a full end of thee." Jer. xxx. 11. If he should, He admits his covenant would then be broken with them. Lev. xxvi. 44. Well did the apostle exclaim "God forbid" the impious thought. Rom. xi. 1.

The covenants of promise made to their Fathers Abraham, Isaac, Jacob and David, made to them as a sure thing without conditions, Gen. xvii. 8. xxvi. 3. 4. xxviii. 14. 2 Pet. vii. 12. cannot be fulfilled without this literal and multitudinous seed; then it follows as a matter of course (to believers in God's word) that they will eventually yield and hearken unto the God of their fathers, and be ready at the appointed time, to enter the new and everlasting covenant of peace. Micah. vii. 19. 20. Ezek. xxxvii. 26.

This covenant will be made with the whole house of Israel, embracing at least a remnant of all the tribes. Heb. viii. 8. Rev. vii. 4. Thus did Paul teach, that Jesus their deliverer would turn away ungodliness from Jacob. "For," says he, "this is God's covenant unto them when he shall take away their sins." He hath concluded them all in unbelief that he might have mercy upon all." Rom. xi. 26. 27-32.

And this accords with what Israel saw concerning Judah and Jerusalem which in his time had become a harlot and filled with murderers. And the Lord said he would "turn his hand upon them, and purely purge away their dross, and take away all their tin, and would restore all their judges as at the first, and their counselors as at the beginning;" afterward they should be called the city of righteousness. Gal. i. 25. 26. In that day it reads "The branch of the Lord shall be beautiful and glorious, and the fruits of the earth shall be excellent and comely for them that are escaped of Israel. And it shall come to pass that the that is left in Zion and he that remaineth in Jerusalem shall be called holy, even every one that is written among the living in Jerusalem. When the Lord shall have washed away the filth of the daughters of Zion, and shall have purged the blood of Jerusalem from the midst thereof by the spirit of burning." Gal. iv. 25. At that time shall the present be brought unto the Lord of hosts of a people scattered and peeled and from a people terrible from the beginning hitherto; a nation (Israel) meted out and trodden under foot, whose land the rivers have spoiled, to the place of the name of the Lord of hosts, the Mount Zion. Isa. xviii. 7. I will yet saith the Lord God for this be inquired of by the house of Israel to do it for them, and will them, after their restoration, increase them with men like a flock. Ezek. xxxvi. 37. This he has promised to do for his holy name's sake, which the children of Israel have profaned among the heathen whether they went; and then the nations shall know that I am the Lord, when I shall be sanctified in you—Israel—before their eyes. Ezek. xxxvi. 22. 23. The zeal of the Lord of hosts will perform this. Gal. ix. 6. 7. And it shall come to pass that as God has watched over them to pluck up and to break down, and to destroy, and to afflict, so will he watch over the house of Israel to build and to plant. Jer. xxxi. 27. 28. The Lord will take them from among the nations, and will gather them out of all the countries and bring them into their own land, "and they shall no more be pulled up out of their land which I have given them saith the Lord thy God." Amos ix. 14. 15. This salvation of Israel is after the fullness of the Gentiles be come in, mark this. Acts xv. 14. 15. 16. 17. Luke xxi. 24. Rom. xi. 25.

It is after the time that the gospel has been preached to the Gentiles to take out of them a people for his name, that Jesus, their deliverer comes to Zion, and turns away ungodliness from Jacob's children, Israel. His first coming did not accomplish this, but his second coming will. The apostle tells us they are still beloved for the Father's sake. xi. 28. The casting of them away was a means of reconciling the world, and the receiving of them again will be life from the dead. Rom. xv.

Referring to this restoration, and new covenant, the apostle says the gifts and calling of God are without repentence, 29 verse. Under this new covenant is when the multitudinous seed possess the land Gen. xxii. 17, protected by the unit seed, Jesus. The King that will possess the gate of his enemies. Gal. iii. 16-27-29.

Under this covenant will Israel enjoy the rest that yet remains for them, the people of God Heb. iv. 9. When they will be saved from all their enemies, and from the hand of all that hate them, by the horn of salvation raised up for them in the house of his servant David to perform the mercy promised their fathers and to remember his holy covenant the oath which he sweare to their Father Abraham. Luke i. 69-75. Under this favorable condition, will God multiply them until they cannot be measured or numbered. Hosa. i. 10. Gal. lxv. 20. Zech. x. 8. The promise of inheriting the land of Canaan, by Abraham and his seed has never yet been fulfilled said Stephen Acts vii. 5. and Paul Heb. xi. 39. Abraham and his brethren have not yet been made perfect in Christ the unit seed, who are to be joint heirs with Christ, previous to making the new covenant with the house of Israel. Christ's first mission was to seek and save the lost sheep of the house of Israel. Matt. xv. 24. But they would not be gathered and saved at that time.

In the terms of the first covenant we learn that after their uncircumcised hearts be humbled, and they accept the punishments of their iniquity God will remember his covenant with their fathers, and will remember the land. Lev. xxvi. 41-43. The promise of a new covenant is with the house of Israel and Judah, the decendents of Israel then the first covenant was made with after they had suffered the threatened punishments in their enimies' land, scattered to the four winds. Jer. xxxi. 31 Then comes the time that Joel saw when God will pity his people and will remember the land. ii. 18. His prophecy commences with events given as signs that the day of the Lord is at hand; which represents Israel in their last sad and forlorn condition. "Then shall the Lord go forth and fight against those nations," that are gathered against Israel, "as when he fought in the day of battle." Zech. xiv. 2. This is the time John saw heaven opened, the faithful and true one sitting on a white horse judging and making war in righteousness. Rev. xix. 11. "Then the Lord will roar out of Zion and utter his voice from Jerusalem, and the heavens and the earth shall shake; but the Lord will be the hope of his people and the strength of the children of Israel." Joel iii. 16.

This doubtless will be the final settlement of the long disturbing eastern question. And it shall come to pass in that day, that the Lord will seek to destroy all the nations that shall come against Jerusalem. Zech. xii. 9. "So shall they know that I am the Lord their God dwelling in Zion my holy mountain. Then shall Jerusalem be holy and there shall no stranger pass through her any more."

After this great deliverance will the Jews look upon him whom they have pierced and shall mourn for him as one mourneth for an only son, and will say blessed is he that cometh in the name of the Lord. Zech. xii. 10. Matt. xxiii. 39. Thus will the Lord remove far off the northern army, and will send restored Israel corn, and wine, and oil, and they shall be satisfied therewith, and will no more make them a reproach among the heathen. He will do great things for the land. And it shall come to pass afterward, while they are dwelling safely, and alone, in their own land, that God will pour out his spirit upon all flesh. Joel ii. 23. Ezek. xxxix. 29. Neither will he hide his face any more from them.

This is the time and the people, that the father has promised to pour out his spirit upon. After they gladly receive the beloved for their King, under the new and everlasting covenant yet to be made with the nations of Israel. Hosa. ii. 14-23. Ezek. xxxvi. 27. xxxvii. 24. 25. When God will place them, and set his sanctuary in the midst of them forevermore. His tabernacle also, shall be with them. Ezek. xxxvii. 26. 27. Rev. xxi. 3. The apostles were girded into all truth by their spirit baptism and such will be its influence upon the whole house of Israel, when God puts his laws into their mind and writes them in their hearts, and all will know the Lord from the least to the greatest. Heb. viii. 10.

How then shall we believe we are living under the new covenant while the people, the only party to the same are yet suffering the punishments of the first and old covenant, and the land enjoying her Sabbaths, or how shall we believe any are now being baptized by the spirit, if we have not the apostles evidence of hearing them speak with tongues, and magnify God? Acts x. 46. There is no evidence that any considerable number of Gentiles, if any, will be associated with Israel when the new covenant is made.

Gentile and Israelite believers in Christ will be declared the sons of God, previous to the making of the new covenant with Israel; and seem nowhere spoken of as the Israel that God has promised to make the new covenant with. They are neither Jew nor Greek, but one in Christ Jesus, and have a new name given them before that event. Gal. iii. 28. Rev iii. 12. Sprinkling clean water on Israel to make them clean, Ezek. xxxvi. 24. 25, will be a short work, after they have been gathered out of all countries, back to their own land, when God will take away their stony heart, and give them a new heart, and put his spirit in them. This is the spirit baptism in fulfillment of what was spoken of by the prophet Joel by which God puts his law into their inward parts and writes it in their hearts, and they shall teach no more every man his neighbor and every man his brother saying, Know the Lord. Jer. xxxi. 33. 34. Gal. liv. 13.

Peter, on the day of Pentecost, did not say Joel's prophecy was then and there fulfilled, neither could it have been. He evidently meant to affirm no more than a likeness to what the prophet saw.

It was not the time, nor was the spirit poured out upon all flesh as promised. Neither have those claiming this baptism since the apostles, given the evidence that they have been thus baptized. In the apostles preaching to their kinsmen, they warned them against impending judgments, foreshadowed in the first and broken covenant, and pointing out the way of escape in Jesus, the Mediator of the new and better covenant yet to be made.

The blood of the covenant has been shed, and the Mediator has entered the holy of holies to present his sin offering, not for Israel only, but for the whole world, interceding for his saints, remaining there until by the preaching of the gospel, a people shall be chosen out of the world for his name; Acts xv. 14, on whom he confers the privilege or right to become the sons of God. John i. 12. To be manifested when Jesus returns from heaven; who, in the times of restitution, which now follows, will be associated with Jesus, the seed of Abraham, and Abraham himself, in blessing all families of the earth. At the beginning of which God will place salvation in Zion for Israel his glory. Isa. xlvi. 13. Luke ii. 32. "When Saviour," the sons of God, "will come upon Mount Zion to judge the Mount of Esau; and the kingdom shall be the Lord's." Obe. i. 24. When God remembers his mercy and his truth towards the house of Israel, and the ends of the earth shall see the salvation of Israel's God. Psa. xcviii. 3. Luke iii. 8.

In this long promised day men will learn war no more; when the root of Jesse shall stand for an ensign among the people, to which the nations shall seek, whose rest shall be glorious. Gal. xi. 10. This will be Christ's day that Abraham saw and was glad. John viii. 56. Then will the world renaze that God has confirmed unto himself his people Israel, to be a people unto himself forever." 2 Sam. vii. 24. And David's son and Lord will be their King. This is God's set time to favor Zion—Israel's last end, when the shout of a king will be heard among them, Num. xxiii. 21, when Abraham's seed will possess the gate of his enemies, and the old patriarch himself will inherit the promises and dwell in the land.

Then will God do better unto Israel than of their beginnings. Ezek. xxxvi. 11. Thus saith the Lord God, because they say unto you, "thou land devourest up men, and hast bereaved thy nations; therefore thou shalt devour men no more, neither bereave thy nations any more saith the Lord God." 13. 14. verses.

This restoration of Israel spoken of by the prophets, God will send Jesus to accomplish. Acts iii. 19. And a refreshing time it will be to all whose sins shall be blotted out. The salvation of the world said Jesus was of the Jews, John iv. 22. and after the king of the Jews destroys those that destroy the earth, Rev. xi. 18. the gentile nations will seek his protection, and their rest from the burdens laid upon them by their wicked rulers will be glorious, Isa. 11. 10, and the earth shall now be full of the knowledge of the Lord as the waters cover the sea. Then will Israel's King govern the world in righteousness, and reprove with equity the meek of the earth, Gal. xi, and Israel will say, "the Lord of hosts is with us. The God of Jacob is our refuge, Selah. O clap your hands, all ye people; shout unto God with a voice of triumph. For the Lord most high is terrible; he is the great King of all the earth. He shall subdue the people under us, and the nations under our feet. He shall choose our inheritance for us, the excellency of Jacob whom he loved, Selah." Psa. xlvii.

Then will the kingdom be restored again unto Israel—God's kingdom will have come and his will, will be done on earth as it is in heaven. "Surely I come quickly, Amen; even so, come, Lord Jesus."

—Some Christians admire giving up something, under the notion of its being for Christ, when they are not called upon to give it up; which is just as if a son were, without any reason in the world, to stab himself in order to show his affection for his father. This is theatric kind of perfection, of which the apostles knew nothing.

The Ethics of Future Punishment.

BY JAMES H. WHITMORE.

I have no time to tell when, and where, and how this terrible doctrine became part of the creed of Christendom. It has been the prevailing belief in the church for fifteen hundred years. It has, in my opinion, been the means of driving thousands into infidelity, and of depriving other thousands of their reason. Good men like Albert Barnes, while professing to believe in it, have said, "It is dark, all dark. I can see no light in it." If it were true, Pessimism would be the proper doctrine to profess, for everything would be about as bad as it could be. Eternal gloom and wretchedness for myriad millions of human beings is not a very bright or cheerful doctrine to profess to believe. Men could not have a full or anything like an adequate conception of this fearful dogma and remain sane for a single hour. To realize a millionth part of its horrors in the case of a single individual, would drive reason from its throne. Many profess to believe that the majority of their fellows will suffer endless misery, but their actions that speak louder than words give the lie to their profession. They do not believe it. And this is the most charitable view to take of it, for if they really believed their cruel creed, and yet were gay and careless and lighthearted in their behavior, they would show themselves to be extremely cruel and heartless. One would think that men who really believed the dogma would never laugh again; yet they who say they believe it are often the gayest of the gay. They have time for money making, a disposition for joking, and in spite of their creed they continue to lead a very cheerful life.

The notion that men are to be tortured for "the glory of God," deserves all the loathing, contempt, scorn and hate that man can pour upon it. Nobody honors God by believing plain contradictions. To say that God can inflict forever on thousands of millions of human beings these sufferings, as a punishment, that would be universally deemed cruel among men if inflicted by them for any crime whatever, on one of their fellows for a single day, and yet preserve his character as a merciful Being, is to utter not only a palpable contradiction, but something very like blasphemy itself. Omnipotence is no justification of an act that would be universally regarded as the greatest cruelty if done by man. We cannot utterly dissociate the human sense of justice and right from the Divine sense of justice and right.

No theodicy ever invented by those who have kindly offered to apologise for and explain the reason and necessity of the dogma of endless misery has been in the least degree successful. God's justice needs no apologist. It is tempered with the highest mercy, the jewel "that becomes the throned monarch better than his crown."

But the long agony is nearly over. The doctrine of endless misery is a dying belief. Its doom is certain. It must soon take its place in the grim pantheon of exploded superstitions. James Anthony Froude lately declared that he knew of "but one man of more than miserable intellect, who in these modern times has dared to defend eternal punishment on the score of justice, and that is Leibnitz, a man who, if he new him rightly, chose the subject from its difficulty as an opportunity for the display of his genius, and cared so little for the truth that his conclusions did not cost his heart a single pang." W. R. Greg says, "All the attempts yet made to reconcile the doctrine with divine justice and mercy are calculated to make us sluish alike for the human heart that can strive to justify such a creed, and for the human intellect which can delude itself into a belief that it has succeeded in such justification."

Among the many attempts to vindicate God's justice in dooming men to suffer endless misery as a punishment for sins committed here, it is said that the number of the lost will be small as compared to the number of the saved. Suppose this were true, it would not remove the difficulty. What loving father would be willing to purchase the everlasting happiness of six of his children at the expense of the everlasting misery of his seventh child? Would he not choose annihilation for all of them rather than consent to the everlasting misery of one of them?

It is sometimes further urged that the everlasting misery of the few is necessary to, and increases the happiness of the many. This terribly false position is one of the worst that can be taken so far as ethics are concerned; for it is utterly indefensible. It is well to bear in mind that this immoral theory is a pure fiction of the advocates of the so-called orthodox doctrine. Neither in Revelation nor in reason can they find the slightest support for it. A specific evil can never be canceled by opposing to it a greater good.

Many eminent men have expressed the opinion that the miseries of the lost would heighten the happiness of the saved. Thus Thomas Aquinas says: "That the saints may enjoy their beatitude and the grace of God more richly, a perfect sight of the punishment of the damned is granted to them."
